Thursday, December 20, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE SENATE

COMMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to raise a question of privilege that certainly affects honourable senators on this side of the house, and I believe all senators, and certainly the institution itself. I have in mind the comments made yesterday by the Prime Minister of Canada that were prominently displayed on national television last evening about the conduct of honourable senators of this chamber.

The Prime Minister alleged that the Leader of the Opposition had issued instructions to honourable senators of the opposition as to how they should conduct themselves in the transaction of public business. That, of course, is quite inaccurate and untrue. I want to assure anyone who is interested, including the Prime Minister, that members of the official opposition in this chamber will exercise their constitutional responsibilities in the proper manner and will not await instructions from any person as to how they conduct their business. No such instructions have been received. I hope the Prime Minister will find it possible at some time to modify those remarks.

I find it less than appropriate, indeed, less than honourable, that the Prime Minister of Canada should use the contemptuous term "a bunch of Liberal bagmen" to describe members of the opposition in the Senate. That contemptuous term is normally employed by those who have little understanding of the political process in Canada. We know that the Liberal Party, the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, as part of the process, must finance their activities. That financing is undertaken according to the law, under a law that was approved by both houses of Parliament. I find it quite inappropriate that the Prime Minister would add to the misunderstanding as to that important role by using such inappropriate words as "a bunch of Liberal bagmen."

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

EXCISE TAX ACT EXCISE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker *pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-17, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PROPERTY QUALIFICATION OF SENATORS

REPORT TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table a report by the Clerk of the Senate with reference to the property qualification of senators in accordance with rule 114.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETURN AUTHORIZED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the Clerk of the Senate be authorized to receive the renewed Declarations of Property Qualifications from those honourable senators who have not had the opportunity to make and file the same in accordance with rule 114 and to make a supplementary return accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Lowell Murray, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 20, 1984

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to presents its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-7, intituled: "an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, December 12, 1984, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

LOWELL MURRAY
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Murray, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

HUMAN RIGHTS

MEETING OF EXPERTS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, January 29, 1985, I will call the attention of the Senate to the desirability of its participation in the preparations for and deliberations of the special meeting of experts on human rights, which is to be held in Ottawa from April 23 to mid-June, 1985, as directed in the concluding document of the Madrid Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I may take a moment of your time, I will ask for a change in the normal procedure. I would appreciate it if we could immediately deal with the Orders of the Day and continue with Notices of Motions, Question Period and other matters of business after Royal Assent. I ask this because, until Royal Assent has been granted, we are really not in a position to decide when we should adjourn and for how long. To that end, I have had discussions with my colleagues opposite. They have agreed that it would be in order, with leave of the Senate, to postpone Question Period until after we have dealt with the Orders of the Day. If leave is granted, we can now give third reading to the various bills that we have before us.

Perhaps, with the concurrence of the Senate, we can dispose of those bills. Then, at 3 o'clock—when we expect the Deputy Governor General to be here—we could have Royal Assent. As I have said, after that we could have Question Period, deal with inquiries, have the adjournment notice and carry on with the orderly disposition of our business.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Doody has quite correctly reported the result of our discussion. However, so that there be no misunderstanding, I believe that we decided to move directly to Orders of the Day in order to deal only with those orders having to do with legislation.

Senator Doody: That is right, yes.

Senator Frith: After Royal Assent has been granted, we will proceed to Question Period, at which time we will go through the rest of the orders accordingly.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I had neglected to note that there is on the order paper a motion for the second reading of a bill. I think that that order will be stood, in any event.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Martha Bielish moved the third reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FOREIGN EXTRATERRITORIAL MEASURES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-14, to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings.

He said: Honourable senators, in the absence of Senator Nurgitz, I should at this time inform the Honourable Senator MacEachen that I have here the answers to three questions he asked yesterday. If it is the desire of the honourable senator, I can read those answers to him, or I can have them taken as read.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Have them taken as read.

Regarding the OECD, as the Senator will recall, at the May, 1984 Council Meeting, all Ministers, including U. S. Secretary of State Shultz, specifically endorsed a section of the Review Report on the 1976 Declaration and Guidelines on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises that dealt with "conflicting requirements." In this section of the Report, the OECD's Committee on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises recommended a series of general considerations and practical approaches to avoid or minimize conflict in situations involving the extraterritorial application of laws. Respect for international law, moderation and restraint, and notification and consultation are singled out as means by which countries should promote co-operation as an alternative to unilateral action.

Since the May ministerial meeting, officials of the Department of External Affairs have pursued efforts to elaborate the spirit of these general considerations and practical approaches. At its September meeting, the Committee on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises decided to discuss in greater detail the underlying legal principles in play. On the basis of studies now being prepared by the Secretariat, the Committee will begin, at its June 1985 meeting, with an examination of the notion of "comity," sometimes used by U. S. courts to justify the discretion they claim to have to apply U. S. law in an extraterritorial manner in the face of foreign government interests.

In the Canadian Government's most recent brief in the Bank of Nova Scotia case, currently on leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, it was submitted that the actions of the U. S. Attorney and the decisions of the lower courts in the case were inconsistent with the spirit and intent of this OECD policy commitment endorsed by the United States as well as Canada and other countries.

Secondly, regarding the Draft Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States being prepared by the American Law Institute, the Government continues to watch this exercise closely and with great interest. The Restatement is currently only in draft form, and has not been agreed in a number of important respects even by members of the Council of the American Law Institute. Some of the most contentious sections of the Restatement indeed relate to issues of extraterritoriality, such as the limits on jurisdiction and corporate nationality. I understand that officials are continuing to examine the most recent drafts of the Restatement in order to determine whether and in what manner it may be appropriate to formally express the views of the Government of Canada on these issues. Up to now our views have been conveyed informally by officials on a number of occasions to various American jurists connected with the project.

Finally, regarding the proposed Export Administration Act, as the Senator may be aware, the U. S. Export Administration Act of 1979, extended by Congress to the fall of 1984, has lapsed. Congress failed to agree on a new Export Administration Act before the end of its last session last fall. United States Export Administration Regulations are currently being administered pursuant to the International Economic Emergency Powers Act. It is our expectation that early in the new session of Congress, efforts will be renewed to draft a revised Export Administration Act. It goes without saying that the Government will watch Congressional activities in this regard closely. To the extent that any new version of the Export Administration Act as may be proposed in the next session of Congress contains provisions permitting the exercise of objectionable, extraterritorial jurisdiction, Canada, in consultation with other interested countries, will make our views known to Congress and the Administration in an appropriate manner at that time.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Senator MacEachen.]

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill C-8, to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved the third reading of Bill C-7, to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

20 December 1984

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Willard Z. Estey, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 20th day of December, 1984, at 3.00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be

Sir,

Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate

Ottawa

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am trying to determine the stage we have reached on today's order paper.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I believe the Deputy Leader of the Government was about to call order No. 4, which I understand will be stood. We were then going to revert to Question Period. Presumably at some time before 3 o'clock the Deputy Leader of the Government would move that we adjourn during pleasure to the call of the bell in order to have Royal Assent. No doubt we would remain in the chamber to await the arrival of His Excellency the Deputy Governor General.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, that was my original intention. However, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition confused me a little earlier this afternoon when he suggested that we might go through Orders of the Day.

Senator Frith: Only if we finished Question Period.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As I am sure honourable senators will recall, commencing in the late 1940s and extending for 20 odd years, the income tax form contained a section designating a certain amount of tax applicable to old age security. My question is: In view of the fact that hundreds of thousands of Canadians bought and paid for old age security, can the leader assure us that in no way will those benefits be interfered with, either directly or indirectly?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot enlarge on the statement that I made in the house yesterday.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: You have been paying tax on it for years.

Senator Sinclair: The leader's answer of yesterday seems to be in contradiction to the headline of the national edition of the Globe and Mail.

Hon. John B. Stewart: The official publication!

Senator Sinclair: Somebody has described it as the official publication of a certain group. The headline reads "PM opposes taxing pensions of the rich." Near the end of the article Prime Minister Mulroney is quoted as saying:

—every Canadian who contributes to a social program should receive a benefit . . . Our objective is to maintain the integrity—

In view of that comment how can he say, as the Minister of Finance has said, that the question is still open for debate?

Senator Roblin: I am afraid my honourable friend has completely lost me. What is the point of his question?

Senator Sinclair: The point of the question is that you said yesterday that the income tax system could be used—

Senator Flynn: It has been used.

Senator Sinclair: —as far as the Old Age Security Act is concerned, to change the benefits now being received. In light of that answer, in light of what the Prime Minister has said and in light of what the Minister of Finance has said, I am asking you to help me out of the confusion that you are leading me and thousands of other Canadians into.

Senator Roblin: I do not think I can help my honourable friend with his problem.

Senator Sinclair: Please try.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: To save face you applaud such a stupid comment.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I, too, would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to clear up what seems to be some confusion. I have to admit at the outset that I am working under some difficulty because we have not received the House of Commons Debates of yesterday—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: You too?

Senator Olson: —including the translation. In any event, the confusion is as follows: In the Debates of the Senate of December 18 at page 351 in the lower right hand column, the Leader of the Government in the Senate is reported as saying "The question of the means test has never been off the table." I presume he means that it is subject to negotiation or discussion. The leader went on to explain what he means by the means test, that it has already been part and parcel of some of the social programs when determining the amount of the benefit either paid out or retained. Yesterday the Prime Minister was asked by an honourable member of the other place, Mr. Boudria, whether or not he could confirm that what the Leader of the Government in the Senate had said was factual and represented government policy. He said something that leads to some confusion, if my translation of it is correct. He said simply that the responses given by the government in this chamber represent government policy. Where does that leave the responses given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think that so far the responses given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate have been quite accurate in expressing government policy. I do not think that the Right Honourable the Prime Minister's statement in the other place did any damage to the statements I made here.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): So the means test is government policy, then?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government very specifically said here that the means test has never been off the table, meaning, I guess, that it is still on the table. Is that what it means?

Senator Roblin: I will tell you; give me a chance and I will tell you.

Senator Olson: It would be helpful if you would. It would also be helpful if you could say some of these things with a bit less ambiguity. If you were to do so, you would not get into these difficulties.

If the subject is on the table then, perhaps, the leader can also explain if that means it is subject to some form of negotiation or discussion. Perhaps he could also indicate whether or not the Prime Minister has in fact endorsed that as the position of the government. It is very important to know whether or not the Prime Minister agrees, since he is saying that the statements he makes in the other chamber are statements of government policy, period. He does not say anything after the period. I would feel very badly if he were leaving the Leader of the Government in the Senate in an awkward position by saying that what he says here is really of no consequence and does not reflect government policy.

Senator Roblin: Let me start at the beginning, if I can remember back that far. I would like to start from the very beginning.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: When you tell the truth you never have to remember.

Senator Roblin: That has been my policy all the time. I think that I will be able to remember well enough to convince my honourable friend that what I say on this matter merits attention.

Senator Steuart: I think you are all confusion.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend can join us in the confusion. He is one of the best confusers I know; compared to him my prose is lapidary.

Carrying on from this point, I think one has to agree with the proposition that the Prime Minister is the ultimate authority on government policy. I would certainly never argue with that point. In fact, on many occasions in this chamber when honourable friends opposite have tempted me—taunted me, no less—

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Never!

Senator Roblin: —to make some statement about government policy which was obviously not within my portfolio. I can remember how they encouraged me to venture out on to this little limb to express government policy in an area where I had not received a mandate to do so. I know very well why that is. I think it is pretty clear that members of the caucus of my honourable friends opposite have a habit, occasionally, of meeting with their counterparts in the caucus of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons in order to discuss what questions might be appropriate to ask in this chamber. In fact, I have noted, and if anyone wishes me to document this I will be able to do so at a later date—I do not have the information with me—that when some senators ask me a question I can be pretty sure that the Honourable Don Johnston, or somebody of that sort, is asking the same question at the same time in the House of Commons. Therefore, the game is pretty clear.

Senator Frith: And getting no answer here and getting no answer there.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend—

Senator Frith: That is the play—make us stop asking questions by just refusing to answer them.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend just cannot restrain himself. He must get into the act, and I suppose I will have a question from him before the day is out.

The point is that there must be other aims in mind besides the pure aim of seeking information when questions of that sort are placed before me. I recognize that under those circumstances it behooves me to be cautious, and I hope that on most occasions when I do not have the mandate to express policy I do exercise a reasonable degree of caution. I remember very well the admonition of Senator Steuart in which he suggested to me that I should be careful of expressing opinions that might be my own when, in fact, it was necessary for me to remember that I was speaking in my capacity as a cabinet minister. Therefore I say to my honourable friend who asked me the question that I fully concede the primacy, the essential authority of the Prime Minister to say what policy is, and if he thinks that I have misstated it, I fully expect him to say so and if I must make a correction, I shall certainly do so. However, I do not think it has happened in this instance.

Let us go back to the quotation raised by my honourable friend concerning the question of a means test. Senator Frith said:

Is the question of the means test still open?

The first sentence of my reply is:

The question of the means test has never been off the table.

Now my honourable friend is asking me: What does that mean? I shall tell you what I meant it to imply at the time, and that is that the means test has been, and is now, an inseparable part of the social allowances, relations, financing and funding of the Government of Canada. It is an inseparable part of the policy that was supported and put in place by my honourable friends opposite. There are means tests now. They have never been off the table, and it is in that sense that I made the reference with respect to means tests. They are with us now and they have been for a lengthy period of time.

Yesterday at Question Period, I gave some examples of the nature of the means tests that were available, and if honourable senators care to put themselves to the trouble of looking up those answers, they will see the ones that I have in mind.

However, let us go on to my statement. I continued to say:

The administration supported by my honourable friend administered means tests on many occasions and seemed to find it quite satisfactory to do so in certain circumstances. I would not be surprised if they were to do so again.

But that was not the end of the matter, because the question of means tests was raised again by Senator Frith, who seemed to be very eager to have me make some statement on the matter, and urged me to say more about it, so I did. Perhaps that was a mistake, but in any event, I did it.

Senator Frith: Never consider that a mistake.

Senator Roblin: There then followed a long passage where we dealt with another topic besides means tests and my honourable friend was talking about something else. However, I shall go to the answer that I gave. He knows the question as well as I do, so I shall not burden him by repeating that. The answer was:

It may very well be that in respect of certain matters any form of financing arrangement may well be discussed.

Now that certainly is a true statement. I then went on to say:

The public will, of course, be invited to attend and if there are people who wish to raise the question of a means test, no one will stop them.

That is as far as I went during Question Period the other day. However, the matter came up again. Honourable Senator Croll was concerned about means tests, and I gave a categorical statement that medicare, old age security and family allowance are not means tested and they will not be means tested.

I hope, therefore, that that review of some of the things that have been said by me in this chamber with respect to means tests helps my honourable friend to understand the framework within which I have been discussing the matter.

Senator Olson: It may help to unravel and untangle some of the distortions in the mind of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I have to say to him that he has contradicted himself no less than three times in the last few minutes. I would also point out that he went to great lengths to mention in his quotation from the bottom of page 351 that the means test is on the table. Then he went on to say that there were such things as childrens' allowances, family allowance and that sort of thing that have always been subject to a means test. I am afraid I must challenge that statement. I do not think that there is any amount that is paid out in the nature of a family allowance that is subject to a means test, and I must suggest to my honourable friend that, in spite of what he said at the end, it has been many years since there was any discrimination in the amount paid under OAS because of a means test. I must therefore suggest that the Leader of the Government take back all of the things that he has said because they are simply not in compliance with the facts.

In any event, let us get back to the original question that I asked him and that is: Is a means test now being considered or not? The Leader of the Government in the Senate has asked that there should be some purpose in posing questions to the government, such as eliciting government policy. I would say to him that there certainly is in this instance because there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians across this country who rely or depend rather heavily on OAS.

They are wondering whether or not income they are now receiving will interfere with those payments.

That is the kind of confusion left in the minds of Canadian citizens as a result of the alleged contradictions made by several ministers who have direct responsibility for this, including the Prime Minister himself.

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not a means test is being considered for family allowances, old age security and medicare? All the leader has told us is that "that is on the table".

Senator Roblin: The only problem I have with my friend's indignation is that I answered the same question yesterday and earlier today. I said that medicare, old age security and family allowances are not means tested and will not be means tested. That is a clear answer.

Senator Flynn: He will not understand that.

THE SENATE

COMMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

In view of the fact that the Conservative Party is actively engaged in collecting money for its financial requirements, and in view of the fact that it is essential for every party in a democracy to attempt to be self-financed, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate agree that the remarks made by the Prime Minister yesterday to the effect of calling both Conservative and Liberal senators "party bagmen" were very derogatory?

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator De Bané: If the Leader of the Government in the Senate agrees that those remarks were derogatory, has he complained to the Prime Minister, and if not, why not?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must admit that I am not one of those who would normally be referred to as a "party bagman".

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Shame!

Senator Roblin: Senator Sinclair said "shame", and I think that that indicates he is a bagman and would like me to join him. I must tell Senator Sinclair that I am not a party bagman. I do not know whether he is one or not, but perhaps he could tell us how he feels about the matter after I have resumed my seat.

If the Prime Minister had referred to me as a "worn-out politician," he might have been right, because—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government: Never!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The verdict on that is not in yet.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Those were shameful remarks made by the Prime Minister.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators are often referred to as being "worn-out politicians" outside of this chamber—hardly ever inside this chamber—and I suppose that I fit into that category. The term "bagmen" I suppose would apply to some honourable senators, and some are referred to as "party hacks".

Senator Doody: Or grateful appointees.

Senator Roblin: So, honourable senators, we all have to share the burden and, in a sense, accept the opprobrium that descends.

As to the Prime Minister, he, being a free, natural-born Canadian, will say what he likes and would not expect me to correct him.

Senator De Bané: Does the leader have anything he wishes to say about the activity of collecting funds by political parties, including his own?

He has said that he was never a "bagman", but having been a premier of a province and leader of a provincial political party, surely he had to rely on, encourage and participate in, activities which financed the Conservative Party of Manitoba.

As a democrat, I think he has certainly encouraged the citizenry of his province to do their share in that endeavour so as not to rely on the state for that financing.

May I remind the leader of the letter written by the Prime Minister himself, and published in the Globe and Mail during August last—a week prior to the election—in which the Prime Minister told the major donors to the Conservative Party fund that he would forever be grateful for their donations. I would not be surprised—

● (1440)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Are you making a speech?

Senator De Bané: I realize that Senator Flynn resents the remark that—

Senator Flynn: You are boring.

Senator De Bané: —the Prime Minister has addressed to him and to the other Conservative senators. Now, if the Leader of the Government in the Senate likes to think of himself as a worn-out politician, I do not know how Senator Flynn and other senators on the Conservative side feel about it.

Senator Flynn: Some are more learned than others.

Senator Roblin: I would never discourage anyone from engaging in a legal occupation no matter what it was.

While I am on my feet, I made a reference to Senator Sinclair which I regret because I had no business ascribing to him the description of a bagman. In the course of the heat of the argument, perhaps I let that reference slip. When I sat down and reflected on it for a minute, I realized that the remark was quite unfair, and I ask my honourable friend to excuse me and allow me to withdraw that remark.

Senator Frith: He doesn't consider it an insult.

[Senator Frith.]

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question with the pure aim of seeking information and clarification.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As usual.

Senator MacEachen: Yesterday the Leader of the Government in the Senate made some interesting comments about a number of social programs, including the family allowance. When he made the comments about family allowance I must say that I felt as if I had missed some important development in the evolution of that program. I was particularly startled by his statement which reads as follows:

The allowance is progressive with respect to need, and the determination of the amount is arrived at through the taxation system.

In order to ascertain whether, indeed, I had missed something, I turned to Mr. Wilson's publication entitled "A New Direction For Canada" in which he has a description of the Family Allowance Program as follows:

Family allowance is a universal program. All families with children under age 18 are eligible. Allowances are paid on a monthly basis, regardless of family income, to 3.5 million families with 6.5 million children.

It is a fact, as the Minister of Finance said, that the allowances are paid on a monthly basis regardless of family income, and that they are not progressive with respect to need. I think I understand the intent of the Leader of the Government, but I think that that statement, as put, is quite misleading and adds to the confusion that is developing so rapidly around this debate.

Would the Leader of the Government please modify that statement to conform to the reality and to the description given by the Minister of Finance? Because the allowance is not progressive and the determination of the amount is not arrived at through the taxation system.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend illustrates the unsatisfactory situation in which the Senate, in my opinion, finds itself when it attempts to use Question Period as a means of holding a general debate on matters of wide-ranging import which do not lend themselves to the kind of treatment that one is expected to give to oral questions during Question Period.

Senator Frith: Walking a few feet across the floor can convert a person completely. Just three short steps.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Two short lengths.

Senator Roblin: I think that I could say the same thing to my honourable friend. How strange it is as he sits in his present position and where he is going to be for some considerable time, I hope, if his health holds up and his friends are supportive. How he has changed his view! If we have exchanged roles, then perhaps we have changed views as well. At least that could be alleged. I guess I had better not admit it, but I think it could be alleged. My honourable friend has already alleged it.

Turning to the question, what I attempted to convey was that I was interested in describing to the Senate the net result of the payment of family allowances to people at various income levels in Canada. That means that they do get a flat rate allowance which is not means-tested, as was correctly stated, but that the result of applying the taxation schedule to the amount received in this way results in different people at different levels of income receiving different net benefits. That is what I intended to say, and that is what I think I did say.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for that clarification because I think it is important to have it understood—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: You wouldn't understand it any way.

Senator MacEachen: —that the family allowance is a uniform demogrant to every citizen regardless of income status. Then it is true that the operation of the taxation system will apply at various income levels and that individuals will have to pay so much from their income in tax. That is quite a different thing than to say that the allowance itself is progressive with respect to need. I thank the Leader of the Government for making that clarification. I do not think it is sinful for him to be wrong on this point, as he clearly was, but it is important that we understand what we are talking about if we are going to make any sense out of this increasingly confused debate that has not been helped by statements made by government ministers and yesterday by the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Having made those comments, may I ask the Leader of the Government another question that will help to clarify for me the situation that flows from the next sentence in that same publication. The sentence reads as follows:

Family allowances will cost approximately $2.4 billion in 1984-85, of which some $450 million will be recovered by the federal government because benefits are taxable.

It is a recovery of $450 million from a total outlay of $2.4 billion.

My question is: Is it a fact that the government will not change the recovery system applied to these benefits?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend's strictures of the last few moments have encouraged me to respect the traditional system of answering questions in oral Question Period by giving him the short answer "yes" or "no." On this occasion I shall take the matter as notice.

Senator Flynn: Do you want a budget speech now?

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Willard Z. Estey, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of Her Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that Her Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under her Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Willard Z. Estey, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, her Deputy, to do in Her Excellency's name all acts on her part necessary to be done during Her Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk of the Senate.

The Honourable the Deputy of Her Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend various Acts as a consequence of the reconstitution of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba (Bill C-3 Chapter No. 41)

An Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act (Bill C-4 Chapter No. 42)

An Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act (Bill C-5 Chapter No. 43)

An Act to amend the Saltfish Act (Bill C-6 Chapter No. 44)

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes (Bill C-7 Chapter No. 45)

An Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act (Bill C-8 Chapter No. 46)

An Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff (Bill C-9 Chapter No. 47)

An Act respecting the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the Acts implementing such conventions (Bill C-10 Chapter No. 48)

An Act to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings (Bill C-14 Chapter No. 49)

The Honourable John W. Bosley, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of Her Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1985 (Bill C-16 Chapter No. 50)

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of Her Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of Her Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

● (1500)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 22, 1985, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: Honourable senators, I should say that Senator Roblin will be out of the chamber for another two or three minutes. Perhaps honourable senators wish to wait until he returns before we proceed to Question Period. I am sure that he is refreshing himself in preparation for the onslaught.

I should add that honourable senators have the option of passing Question Period over at this point, considering it as having been done, or delaying it until Senator Roblin returns. I am sure that he would hate to miss the opportunity to answer a few more questions, he is in such eloquent and loquacious form today.

In any event, we can get on with the next order and revert if we wish.

Motion agreed to.

[Senator Flynn.]

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY IMPACT OF ITS REPORT ENTITLED: "SOIL AT RISK—CANADA'S ERODING FUTURE"—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Sparrow, seconded by the Honourable Senator Riel, P. C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine the impact of the recommendations contained in its Report on soil and water conservation in Canada, entitled: "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future", tabled in the Senate on 6th November, 1984, and to inquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence received on the subject and the work accomplished during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Steuart).

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to take a few moments to speak about the report that was brought in by the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, which was under the chairmanship of Senator Sparrow at the time the report was prepared.

I congratulate Senator Sparrow, the committee and the staff for the excellent and timely report they made on this extremely serious problem. I would like to make it clear that, while I was a member of that committee, I played a very small role, due to other conflicting interests I had at that time. Therefore, when I talk about the report, I hope it is clear that I am not attempting to pat myself on the back. I reiterate that it was Senator Sparrow, the committee and the staff who were responsible for such an excellent job.

I must say that one could not have been raised in Saskatchewan during the time of the dust bowl, the 1930s, as I was, and not be interested in soil degradation. Anyone who lived there at that time realizes the importance of top soil and the preservation of it.

Prairie farmers, in the intervening years since the 1930s, have learned a great deal about the problem they faced at that time. Without a doubt, they have become the finest dry-land farmers in the world. However, they face a new set of problems, just as we all face a new set of problems regarding soil degradation across Canada. That is certainly the reason why the response to this report has been so overwhelming and so favourable.

As I have said, the report was extremely timely. I think that reports like this demonstrate the Senate at its best. One of the most famous reports of the Senate was the study on poverty, instituted by Senator Croll and the Senate committee. That report became a milestone in the Canadian fight against poverty. I am convinced, honourable senators, that this report, "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future" will be another milestone.

There has already been a response to this report in the form of letters which have been sent by farmers of every description from every part of Canada, cattlemen, city dwellers, and representatives of universities, high schools and governments at every level. The response is without question and almost without exception a laudatory one—one that commends very highly the efforts of our committee. In addition, there is the response from the press. The large dailies in every province from one end of Canada to the other have praised the merits of this report and, at the same time, have urged that the committee not stop at this report but that it carry on and keep up the good work.

Honourable senators, I came across only one editorial in the entire country, which was from Lethbridge, that had something sour to say about the report. If one reads it closely, one might assume that the individual was getting something off his chest in opposition to the Senate rather than in opposition to the report.

The requests for copies came in ones, twos, tens, twenties and sixties, not only from all across Canada but also from outside Canada. If the report had been a novel, I am sure it would have been a best seller.

The question at present in the minds of members of the committee and of honourable senators in general is: What now? I hope that when we return in January the committee will decide to continue to give some attention to this important subject. The committee has made an excellent beginning, but it is just a beginning. I hope that pressure will continue to be applied to governments at all levels—federal, provincial and municipal—because without the response from and the support of governments, the farmers—those people who are responsible for the protection of our soil—cannot do the job that, as has been so clearly pointed out in the report, needs to be done. I hope also that pressure can be maintained on our universities and schools to make students aware of the problem. Finally, I hope that pressure can also be maintained on the farmers themselves, because, in the final analysis, if farmers do not do something themselves towards rectifying the problem of soil degradation right across Canada, it will not be solved. I re-emphasize the fact that farmers cannot do that alone. They need help and they need that help badly.

I hope too that our committee will take a leaf out of Senator Croll's book. As we all know, Senator Croll updates from time to time the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada. That subject is brought to the attention of the Canadian public at regular intervals so that it does not fade into oblivion.

We now have a Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, and I hope that the committee will endeavour to bring the report on soil degradation up to date, that it will monitor what is happening right across Canada, and that it will act as this nation's conscience in the fight against soil degradation. We have to face the fact that it is from the 10 to 12 inches of topsoil that Canadians are fed, and that top soil will also provide Canada with the ability to assist towards feeding the hungry of the world.

The report is timely and does great credit to Senator Sparrow, his committee and staff. In the final analysis, it does much credit to the work of the Senate, and I hope that honourable senators will support the work that has already been done.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

CHRISTMAS

BUREAUCRATIC AND POLITICAL COMMENTS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, December 11, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to certain bureaucratic and political comments concerning Christmas.

He said: Honourable senators, with leave, I would ask that my text be printed in today's Debates of the Senate, in order that honourable senators might not have their time wasted by having to listen to me.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on a point of order, I am sure that we would like to accommodate Senator Gigantès. When the honourable senator mentioned the matter to me, I suggested that his request might conflict with the rules of the Senate and that objections might be raised. At the time I did not have the applicable rule at hand. I should point out that rule 1 of the Rules of the Senate of Canada provides that:

In all cases not provided for in these rules, the customs, usages, forms and proceedings of either House of the Parliament of Canada shall, so far as is practicable, be followed in the Senate or in any committee thereof.

Citation 311 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, the Fifth Edition, at page 102, says the following—and I am sorry that I was unable to direct Senator Gigantès to this citation when he discussed the matter with me:

Under no circumstances may a Member merely table a speech for printing in Hansard. With minor exceptions, what appears in the record of debates has actually been spoken in the House. On rare occasions a Member may receive the consent of the House to have printed as part of his speech long lists, statistics or similar material. Such consent should rarely be asked for and is rarely granted. The House may also give its consent to have documents, or exchanges of letters, printed as a formal appendix to Hansard for the use and information of Members.

In view of the foregoing, I suggest that we should not accede to the honourable senator's request. However, it is thoughtful of Senator Gigantès to make the request in order to save the time of honourable senators.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should explain that Senator

Gigantès also mentioned the matter to me, and I told him that we on this side of the house would find no problem with that. But obviously there is a problem, and I apologize to the honourable senator for having misled him.

Senator Gigantès: I thank honourable senators for their guidance. I shall let the three inquiries in my name stand until the next sitting of the Senate, because I know that some honourable senators wish to get away as early as possible. Copies of one of the texts I have prepared have been sent to all honourable senators. May I say that it is, in effect, a fairy tale for your children and grandchildren, and I give it to you for Christmas and dedicate it particularly to two of my colleagues in the Senate. The first is Senator Walker, who paid me a wonderful compliment by calling me a new boy. To be called "new" at the age of 61 and to be called a boy is terrific.

May I also point out that the word "Phillips" comes from the word "Phillippos", which in Greek means "lover of horses". Therefore, I take Senator Phillips' reference to me as meaning, of course, an imperial horse, and as an expression of love. Therefore, I dedicate that fairy tale to his young relatives too.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, at this season of the year, it could be nothing but love.

Senator Frith: Watch out in the New Year!

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE SENATE

COMMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Tom Lefebvre: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and it relates to earlier questions put to him by my colleague, Senator De Bané.

[English]

I am sure that the Leader of the Government would not wish honourable senators, and Canadians in general, to be left with the same impression as I was left with as a result of answers given to questions raised by Senator De Bané. In answer to Senator De Bané's final question, the Leader of the Government said that as the Prime Minister is a natural born Canadian he has the rights and privileges of having his own opinions and saying what he believes in.

I believe the Leader of the Government to be an honourable man, but those Canadians who read Debates of the Senate may be left with the impression that those persons who are not natural born Canadians may not have the same rights and privileges. Perhaps the Leader of the Government will reconsider his reply to that question.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank my honourable friend for raising the matter. I did not intend that comment to apply only to natural born

[Senator Doody.]

Canadians, in the sense of being born in this country, as opposed to those Canadians who are naturalized or even from—well, I had better not say "from Newfoundland".

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Oh yes, very much so.

Senator Roblin: I am afraid that I used the wrong word. I meant that it is an inalienable right of any Canadian, no matter how he achieved his citizenship, to say what he thinks. I thank my honourable friend for raising that point, because I would not wish to leave the impression to which he referred.

Senator Lefebvre: Honourable senators, in light of that answer, I would ask the Leader of the Government and all of my honourable colleagues in the Senate to accept my best wishes for a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government and it is somewhat similar to that asked by Senator Lefebvre. Earlier this afternoon the Leader of the Government mentioned that some unpleasant comments had been made by various people about honourable senators. He said—and he has just repeated it—that this is a right. I want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to reconsider that proposition. It may well be the right of people who teach in universities or who write editorials to say what they think about parts of the constitutional structure of this country but, surely, the Prime Minister, by reason of his office, is in a special position which, inevitably, inhibits him from saying things in an official capacity which he might have said before he became Prime Minister. Is it not quite unbecoming and quite beyond the role of the Prime Minister to make derogatory remarks about a part of the constitutional structure of this country and about honourable senators—all honourable senators, as his statement read—who have answered the summons to this place?

● (1520)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot allow my honourable friend to get me into the business of telling Prime Ministers what to say. I remember another Prime Minister who referred to the honourable members of the other place as nobodies.

Hon. H. A. Olson: That is not true.

Senator Roblin: What did he say, then, if he did not say that? It has certainly stuck in my mind that some similar comment was made, to the effect that they were nobodies within a certain distance of the House of Commons. I remember another Prime Minister, not the present one, who used language and gestures in the conduct of his official business which I do not think we would like to see repeated on the floor of this chamber.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Does that make it all right?

Senator Roblin: It is not incumbent upon me to tell any Prime Minister what to do.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That does not answer the question.

Senator Stewart: Will the Leader of the Government not consider the possibility that it is one thing for a member of one house to speak about his colleagues candidly and it is quite another thing for a member of one house to speak in a derogatory, contemptuous and even dishonourable manner about the members of another honourable house?

Senator Olson: That is exactly the point.

Senator Roblin: I am afraid we are all members of Parliament and we are all subject to the same constraints.

Senator Olson: But we cannot defend ourselves in the other place.

OLD AGE SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I would like to return to the subject of old age pensions. Yesterday in the other place, the Prime Minister seemed to reject the notion of taxing back old age pensions of upper income Canadians and, at the same time, the Leader of the Government in the Senate seemed to take the same line in giving assurances that there would be no change in the terms and conditions under which Canadians now receive the old age pension. Then the Minister of Finance got into it and said that the government wants to shift some resources from those in the upper-income brackets, from the wealthier people to the needy people in the country, using the tax system. Can we conclude that the old age pension is being exempted from this new consideration of shifting resources through the tax system, in view of the comments of both the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am in no position to tell my honourable friend what to conclude. That is her business. As far as the comments to which she has referred are concerned, I am not familiar with them myself so I will take the question as notice.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

CLOSING OF RESEARCH FACILITIES—LOSS OF JOBS

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is not usual for me to ask questions on this subject, but it concerns the National Research Council. I have given the leader notice of and some information about my question. As of April 1, 1985 between 80 and 95 jobs will be lost when the National Research Council closes some of its facilities. I am particularly concerned, as, I am sure, is Senator Roblin, about the jobs in Manitoba. According to the information I have, 26 jobs will be lost in Gimli, Manitoba, 7 jobs in Churchill, Manitoba and 5 jobs in Ottawa alone.

I worked in Churchill from 1953 to 1964, when I left for the Northwest Territories. However, Churchill continued to have a big influence on my life because it is the supply centre for the Northwest Territories. What does the Leader of the Government in the Senate think about these lay-offs?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I thank my honourable friend for being kind enough to send me some of the particulars that concern him in his question. I have to tell him that they concern me, too, because I come from the same part of the country. It has to do with the rocket and balloon launching arrangements at Gimli and Churchill, Manitoba, and the relationship to the present operation of certain cuts that were made in the budgetary provisions. I can tell my honourable friend that while I am not absolutely positive, I understand certain discussions are going on between interested parties in the private sector as well as in the government sector which, I hope, will produce some amelioration or solution to the question. Those discussions have not yet reached the stage where I can give my honourable friend something positive to go on. I thank him for his question and assure him that he has received the same correspondence I received, that I have been working on the matter, and I hope to be able to make a constructive announcement one of these days.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Is the honourable senator now in a position to inform us whether a white paper—or a blue, yellow, red or whatever—on the subject of the universality of government social programs will be put out during the period when Parliament is recessed for the Christmas break? Is he in a position to inform us with some precision that this is the case? Some of us are interested in obtaining a paper on the government's position reasonably soon because of the confusion that surrounds the whole issue, and, since we will be spending more time in our respective regions over the Christmas break, it will afford us a good opportunity to debate the contents of such a paper with the people of the regions.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that the same question was asked of me twice yesterday, that I am afraid I have no advance on the information I gave then and that, at the moment, I do not have a date for the publication.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTS ON FEMALE EMPLOYEES

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. This morning's Globe and Mail reports on cuts in the Canadian Wildlife Service and points out that because of these across-the-board cuts 45 per cent, or almost half of the women who have achieved administrative, management, scientific and technical positions in the Wildlife Service are losing their jobs, mainly as a result of the last-hired-first-fired policy. This contradicts the government's promise not only during the election but in the Speech from the Throne. Will the Leader of the Government ask the minister responsible to reconsider the impact of lay-offs carried out in such a fashion which result in inequities that have taken a very long time to overcome, and will he explain how the government plans to fulfil the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne to women in such positions?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would point out to the honourable senator that the Progressive Conservative Party was successful in electing more women to the House of Commons than has ever been the case before. I think I could also tell my honourable friend that there are more ladies in the cabinet now than ever before. I think those two factors indicate the attitude the government takes toward the place of women in the political life of this country.

I grant my honourable friend the facts that she has laid before us with respect to the number of women who have been affected in this particular instance. It is not because they are women; it is because of other circumstances. However, I have no objection at all to accepting the question to see whether or not anything can be done to relieve the pressure that is being felt in the situation she describes.

Senator Marsden: I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is quite another matter for women to be elected by the people of Canada—and I am delighted that they were—than it is for women scientists to work their way into a traditionally male dominated service. The losses there are, I think, more difficult in many ways to overcome than they would be if your colleagues in the other place were not to be elected in the next election. I think you would probably still share the concern that women should be advanced in all walks of life. Therefore, I hope you will look into this matter.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he has an answer to a question I asked on November 28 last. My question was asked at that time on the basis of a report in the Ottawa Citizen concerning the application of the equal pay for work of equal value concept through Treasury Board guidelines.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I share my honourable friend's concern for the status of women, particularly in the case she has mentioned. Thus, she has a sympathetic audience as far as I am concerned. I will do my best to see whether the matter can be looked at again. I can give no undertaking with respect to what will happen, but I will certainly be prepared to try.

With respect to her other question, I have some delayed answers which I would like to give to the Senate today; but I am afraid hers is not among them.

[Senator Marsden.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PLACEMENT OF FORMER MEMBERS' STAFFS

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. During the course of the election campaign one of the main themes of the Conservative Party was "jobs, jobs, jobs." We were told that we would see tens upon tens of thousands of jobs being created as quickly as a new government could be sworn into office. The main theme of the government now is "cut, cut, cut" and "lay off, lay off, lay off" so the new government can "save, save, save." Many years ago a great, distinguished Canadian, the Honourable Robert Stanfield, was replaced as leader of the Conservative Party by the Right Honourable Joe Clark. Mr. Clark "cut, cut, cut" Mr. Stanfield's employees when he assumed that office. The great little man from the Town of Mount Royal, the Prime Minister at that time, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau—the same person the Tories said was arrogant and could not care less about people—gave instructions to his staff that Mr. Stanfield's laid-off employees were to be taken care of and not suffer the loss of their jobs in the House of Commons. Is it true that the Conservative government of today has laid off many of the office staff of defeated Liberal and New Democratic Party members of Parliament? Is the government conducting any job searches on the Hill for former staff members who are qualified to perform government work? If not, why not?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Isn't it a pity that my honourable friend did not run in the last election? He might have been elected. Who knows?

Hon. William J. Petten: He would have been.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Everybody loves Charlie.

Senator Roblin: He just might have been elected, because in his day in London he was a power to be reckoned with.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: And he still is!

Senator Roblin: I am glad to see that he has not lost any of his political instincts.

I cannot answer his question because I have no information on the point he raises. If he wishes to submit a written question, then I will seek to obtain the information as best I can.

Senator Turner: Honourable senators, I understand it is Tory policy to not hire anyone who has worked previously for a Liberal or a member of the New Democratic Party. I think that is disgraceful.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Roblin: I do not know how we can explain the appointment, as my honourable friend said, of Stephen Lewis—

Senator Steuart: I don't know how you can explain it either!

Senator Roblin: I have the same trouble trying to explain the appointment of the ambassador to Portugal, and a few other similar appointments. I think one has to admit that the Progressive Conservative Party is not totally blind to the merits of some people who do not share its political views.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is with regard to the announcement of the cut in the Canada Works Program. I am particularly concerned about that portion allocated to the Summer Youth Employment Program. That is one program which I think has been most effective for students in summer jobs. It has been providing a good training ground for students. I am referring particularly to the portion of the program run by the cadet movement. Senator Marshall and I have a direct interest in the army cadet movement. My inquiry concerns the air cadet movement as well. I know my honourable friend is familiar with that movement. I am also concerned about the navy cadet movement. The program has been a very valuable one and it has been well run. I think there has been no question as to its effectiveness. I understand the government proposes to implement some sort of new program. My concern is that the new program may not be in place in time for next summer since plans will have to be drawn up very soon to achieve that end. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate say whether there is a possibility of re-instating the youth program particularly as it relates to the cadet movement? If he cannot say that, then can we have an absolute assurance that there will be an equivalent program for the same numbers of cadets next summer?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in the course of my political career I have learned it is slightly dangerous to give absolute assurances about almost anything in politics, because things have a habit of changing. Thus, I will not offer my honourable friend an absolute assurance.

I wish to tell him I am sympathetic to the point he raises. According to the information I have received, there will be a program for youth this summer and I myself will do whatever I can to make sure that the cadet movement is included in it. I agree with my friend that it is a valuable program and that it deserves support.

DEBATES—TREATMENT OF SPEECHES

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It relates to the request by Senator Gigantès earlier today with respect to his inquiry. At that time he requested his comments be taken as read, or tabled, or something of that nature. An objection to that procedure being followed was raised by Senator Frith. I certainly commend him in that respect. At the time that this topic was raised, the Deputy Leader of the Government said that as far as we are concerned we agree. I am, of course, paraphrasing what he said and I may be wrong—I hope I am. I have never heard of such a procedure being followed before, either in this chamber or in the other place. I think there are probably others here who have not heard of it and who were not contacted about it. May I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if it is his opinion that there should be a new rule introduced with respect to what takes place in this chamber regarding speeches? Will we follow the Congress of the United States in this regard? Will we take speeches as having been read? Will it become unnecessary for a senator to appear in the chamber? Will he be able to table a speech which has not been written by him? Is that the view of the Conservative Party at this time? I hope it is not. I would like to hear the comments of my leader in this respect.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I wish to tell my honourable friend that I am a traditionalist in this regard. I think we should stick to our traditions.

[Translation]

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Your Honour, honourable senators, I have a question which is supplementary to that which I directed earlier to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am aware of the answers he gave yesterday, but I wonder whether he might have new information for us. When he replied to me earlier, was he trying to tell me that he was bound by the traditional cabinet confidentiality, or is he actually unaware of when the government will publish its paper on program universality?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that the government's statements are under preparation. They have not yet been completed.

THE SENATE

COMMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate which follows upon questions asked by Senator Stewart with regard to the comments of the Prime Minister about this place.

• (1540)

I fully recognize the delicacy of the position in which the Leader of the Government finds himself in this regard. He has said that he cannot tell prime ministers what to say. I can understand that. On the other hand, it seems to me that, because of his position here as the Leader of the Government in the Senate, my honourable friend does have a responsibility to express concerns in this regard on behalf of the Senate. It gives rise, I think, to serious parliamentary concern for a Prime Minister to speak in derogatory terms about this place. I think it is harmful to the whole system.

Perhaps we could ask the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate to, at the very least, point out to the Prime Minister the risks and dangers in that course of action.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not think I can take any other course with respect to the present Prime Minister than other parliamentarians took with respect to some of his predecessors. I think it would be wrong for me to try to enlarge that area.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GIFT OF WAR PLANES TO TURKEY

Hon. Pierre De Bané: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As my honourable friend knows, through NATO, Canada has always been a great friend and ally to both Greece and Turkey. Recently, the Government of Canada has made a decision that I think is unbalanced and could cause problems to our relationship with Greece. The Government of Canada has decided to give renovated fighter planes to Turkey, and none to Greece.

In August, the Greek Ambassador to Canada officially told the Department of External Affairs that if any war planes were being given to Turkey, Greece would be glad to receive an equal number of planes of equal quality. Mr. Geoff Matthews, an aid to defence minister Robert Coates, described Greece's interest in these planes as "something that has come out of the blue." It is not usual nor is it courteous for an official to give the lie publicly to the ambassador of a close ally, an ally for an unbroken period of 79 years, might I add.

Again, Canada has the right to favour Turkey over Greece if there are reasons for doing so, but Canada is not a duplicitous country. It cannot and would not want to play the role of a neutral referee, and then favour one team over the other.

In Cyprus, fine Canadians have honourably played the role of neutral referees in the Greco-Turkish differences there. The tradition of fairness which these fine Canadians have established is strained by this matter of the gift of the war planes to Turkey, but not to Greece. It is not enough for a referee to be fair; he must be perceived as being fair by both the teams whose confrontation he supervises.

Greco-Turkish differences are ancient and complex. Both these allies need Canada to continue to play the role of neutral referee it has played in the past. Canada should not allow itself to be in a position where it seems to be arming one side but not the other.

May I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would ask his colleague, the Minister of Defence, the Honourable Robert Coates, to review that decision in order that we might not harm our long-standing friendship with Greece.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think it is fair to say that Canada has done its best over many years to approach, in a completely impartial and balanced manner, its relations with all of its allies in NATO, including Greece and Turkey. That is our policy and we have not deviated from it in any one instance.

[Senator Molgat.]

With respect to the question asked of me, I do not think my honourable friend has given the chamber the full story. I do not say this in any critical way, because it is a long story. I understand that Senator Gigantès intends to move an inquiry in which this matter may be debated, and it seems to me that the best course for me to follow is to express the hope that if Senator Gigantès proceeds with his motion, we shall have an opportunity to debate this matter and thus discuss at length the various issues involved.

WELFARE

ADEQUACY OF PAYMENTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers. First of all, I would like to take this opportunity to say that the individuals on my staff who are responsible for obtaining these answers for senators have been very diligent and that our record of obtaining these answers is, in my opinion, very satisfactory. I do not expect assent to that assertion around the chamber, but I want to express my own opinion in that regard.

The first delayed answer is to a question raised by Senator Argue with respect to the adequacy of welfare payments in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Hazen Argue: I would appreciate the answer to that question placed on the record.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, with respect to its social assistance programs, the Province of Saskatchewan continues to comply with the terms of the agreement under the Canada Assistance Plan.

In agreements under the plan, all provinces consent to provide financial assistance to persons in need as defined by the plan. Specifically, the provinces agree that:

- a period of residence in the province will not be a condition of eligibility for assistance;
- eligibility for assistance will be based on a test of need—and I would underline that expression for Senator Olson; perhaps he recognizes it—which takes into account a person's budgetary requirements and resources available to him to meet these requirements;

—a formal appeal process will be available to all persons dissatisfied with decisions relating to their eligibility for assistance or the amounts of assistance paid to them.

However, the agreements neither prescribe precise conditions of eligibility for assistance nor the amounts of assistance that should be provided for basic and special needs. It is a provincial responsibility to set social assistance benefit levels, to determine how adequate these levels are and to make appropriate program adjustments to meet the needs of recipients. There are no provisions in the Canada Assistance Plan Act which permit the federal government to establish maximum or minimum rates of social assistance.

Currently, in Saskatchewan an unemployed individual is entitled to a maximum social assistance payment of $345.00 per month which is intended to cover his need for food, shelter, clothing and personal household items. The rates of assistance for the unemployable, and families with children are substantially higher. For example, an unemployable individual may qualify for a maximum monthly rate of $533.00 and a family of four may receive $1,175.00 monthly.

Social assistance rates for employable individuals across the country are generally lower than those for the unemployable. Historically, provinces have viewed the employable person as someone requiring shorter term assistance until he can find employment. Rates of assistance to the employable do not usually include an amount for replacement or repairs. The provincial and federal governments attempt to assist the employable recipient to find employment and therefore eliminate his dependency on financial assistance by providing him with training, job placement services and other services which will facilitate his return to the work force.

All levels of government, including the federal government, are trying to deal with the large number of individuals who have no alternative but to rely on social assistance benefits.

During this period, when unemployment rates have increased and greater numbers of individuals have had to look to provincial social assistance programs for financial support, the capacity of the Canada Assistance Plan to assist provinces in coping with increased expenditures has remained intact. As an open-ended cost sharing program, the plan supports in a very substantial way the safety net programs operating in the provinces. By virtue of its open-endedness, the plan discourages provinces from reducing their expenditures in the sector and ensures at least a basic level of assistance for persons most in need of help.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF SOVIET REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Gigantès on November 15 last with respect to government policy on entry of Soviet refugees. May I have permission to have that answer taken as read?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration advises that when Mrs. Pépin raised the question there were no names attached, and there had been several groups under consideration. The minister was speaking of one group and Mrs. Pépin was speaking of the other, and the minister very sincerely apologized to her for the fact that she did not clearly indicate the group that she was speaking about. However, having reviewed this situation, having looked at the group, Mrs. Pépin later told her what she was speaking about, she assured her that her predecessor had indeed said there would be applications provided to these people should they meet all the requirements, including medical requirements.

The minister's office has not been able to persuade the local authorities in a very inaccessible border area to allow medical examinations to take place. But they have asked for the co-operation of other countries in helping to have this done. They have asked for the co-operation of the International Red Cross, and they are very actively pursuing their case in the hope that they will eventually be brought to Canada.

JUSTICE

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have an answer to a question posed by Senator MacEachen on December 4th last concerning government policy on capital punishment. May I have permission for that answer to be taken as read?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The minister cannot assist with any information which would shed light on the exact timing of a debate on capital punishment in Parliament.

With regard to whether the government has considered or decided upon, in any way, this issue, the only direction he can point to is the statement of the Prime Minister, December 3, 1984, in the House of Commons, where the Prime Minister stated:

I hope that during the life of this Parliament there will be an occasion for Members to consider this and other matters. However, for the moment I think the priority of the country and of Members of the House is devoted toward economic renewal and economic recovery. Until the economy is in better health and we can see some light at the end of the tunnel, I think Hon. Members would want me to stay on that course.

THE INUIT

STATUS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to Senator Watt's question of December 5, 1984 regarding government policy on Inuit status. May I have permission for that answer to be taken as read?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Regarding the first question, there are three major processes presently underway which are directly concerned with 'satisfying the concerns and needs of the Inuit in the North':

First, the aboriginal rights of the Inuit are guaranteed in s. 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982, and the government is pursuing the definition of these rights through a process of First Ministers' Conferences including Inuit representatives.

Second, Inuit interests are being addressed through comprehensive claims. The Inuvialuit of the western Arctic have recently completed a comprehensive settlement, which is now enshrined in legislation; the Inuit of the eastern Arctic are negotiating their claim; and the Inuit of northern Quebec are beneficiaries under the 1975 James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. The settlement and implementation of these comprehensive claims agreements should be important means of meeting practical Inuit needs regarding ownership, use and management of land and resources and economic and social development.

Finally, the Inuit are participating very actively in exploring the possibility of a division of the Northwest Territories.

On the second question, the government is not considering new general legislation for the Inuit similar to the Indian Act.

I have personally talked to people who handle the complaints from recipients of welfare, and they have confirmed that those recipients are hungry at the end of the month. I think it is a total disgrace that there should be this kind of starvation in a country where food is abundant.

So, I ask whether there has been, or whether there can be, any discussions held between the Government of Canada and the Province of Saskatchewan with respect to increasing those payments?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators must recognize that since the inauguration of the Canada Assistance Plan it has been clearly understood that it is the responsibility of the province to set the rates of assistance. The federal government has agreed to accept whatever rates are set by the provinces and to pay 50 per cent of the cost on an open-ended basis. In other words, no financial limit is set as to the total amount of money the Government of Canada contributes to those programs. We accept whatever the provinces, in their judgment, decide is appropriate.

I think it would be injudicious of me to suggest that the federal government ought to tell the provinces how to run their own affairs.

TRANSPORT

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE TO STUDY POLICY ON CAR RENTAL OUTLETS AT AIRPORTS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Hazen Argue, pursuant to notice of Thursday, December 20, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report upon the policy of the Department of Transport regarding car rental outlets at airports, more particularly its refusal to open up competition, to increase the number of car rental outlets, the effect of restricting the major share of business to multinational companies, the adverse effect on jobs in Canadian companies and the advantages to the travelling public of greater competition.

He said: Honourable senators, I move this motion in the Senate because I believe that Holiday Rent-a-Car and those associated with it have a grievance that should be considered by honourable senators. In addition to that, there is the whole question of competition at airports and the need to open up or increase the number of desks available for car rentals.

I have taken an interest in this subject because of representations made to me. My colleague, Senator Steuart from Saskatchewan, has taken a real interest in this subject also, and I believe he will be making a contribution to this debate.

I think that the issue is important, and the issue is the increased availability of space at airports for car rental businesses, and an increase in competition so that Holiday Rent-a-Car has a chance to put in a bid that will be considered along with other bids.

WELFARE

ADEQUACY OF PAYMENTS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for the rather lengthy answer to my question regarding welfare payments in Saskatchewan.

The answer seems to spell out that what has been happening in Saskatchewan is legal; they are not breaking a law. But I am disturbed when I hear confirmed that which I have already stated, namely, the allowance for single people, the so-called employables, is, regrettably, very low.

Has the Government of Canada made any representations to or held any discussions with representatives of the province of Saskatchewan suggesting in any way, or hinting in any way, that, since the federal government has the responsibility of paying half of the cost, and the provincial government has the responsibility of administering it and setting the levels, these rates might be looked at in such a manner as to make them more generous than heretofore?

I brought to the attention of the Senate not too long ago the case of Mr. Tom Ranks who has been unemployed for 24 months. He had been a truck driver and said he had some mechanical skills. He said that his total income for food for a month was between $50 and $60.

As I understand it, the policy has been to have at least four car rental desks at all major airports, with a greater number at nine airports. The question of increased competition has been before the Department of Transport for some time. When the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy was the Minister of Transport, the now Minister of Transport, the Honourable Don Mazankowski, took on the case of Holiday Rent-a-Car and presented that case to the Honourable Mr. Axworthy. It was pointed out by those who took part in those discussions that 70 per cent of the car rental business in Canada is generated at the airports of the country, and that for a particular car rental company not to be part of the car rental business at airports in this country almost spelled economic defeat. So, Holiday Rent-a-Car is very anxious to be part of the airport car rental service.

The roles have all been changed now, but in supporting the position I have outlined, and in making submissions to the former Minister of Transport, were such notable Conservative members of Parliament as Jack Shields, the Honourable Harvie Andre, Joe Reid, Chris Speyer, the Honourable Perrin Beatty, the Honourable John Crosbie, the Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn and the Honourable Don Mazankowski. There was quite an array of talent in support of opening up competition and giving Holiday an opportunity.

The record is now clear. When the Honourable Mr. Axworthy was Minister of Transport, he was putting into place a change of policy; it was on the way. My information is that it was to all intents and purposes announced, and that he had a struggle within the department to bring some officials on side, but with his record of opening up competition in the airline business, it was clear that he would win. He had the support, of course, of the Honourable Don Mazankowski.

Since that time, the Honourable Don Mazankowski has been appointed Minister of Transport. He has now gone along with departmental officials who want to keep what was the policy for some time. Apparently he has reversed his position on the matter. So, I think that the Senate ought to have a broad and general inquiry into the issues involved.

There are four major car rental companies operating in Canada; Tilden, Budget, Avis and Hertz. Tilden is a Canadian company, the other three are multinational companies.

In addition to the issues I have mentioned, I think there is the whole question of encouraging Canadian companies and giving them greater access to this lucrative business.

The question of Holiday's franchise holders' debts to the Department of Transport has been raised, and the current minister has said that if anyone using the corporate name "Holiday" wishes to make a submission or tender, they would not be considered as long as any franchise holders owe moneys to the Department of Transport. I suppose that one could argue that that is not a fair policy from a legal standpoint because Holiday Rent-A-Car, as I understand it, does not owe the Department of Transport any money. But since when should a debt by a particular company necessarily ban that company from being a part of the economic life of this country? In other words, there is a decision by the government that will virtually put this whole organization, perhaps, into bankruptcy or into very serious economic straits.

I was in cabinet when the program of assistance to Massey-Ferguson was organized and there was a response that gave them a chance; there was a response that gave Chrysler a chance. I would have thought that there would have been an opportunity to discuss with these people how Holiday Rent-A-Car could play its role and how there could be some accommodation for the obligations that are there.

There has been a discussion of this question in the House of Commons and in their Transport Committee, but there has been no general inquiry. There has not been any broad canvass of the issues involved. I think that this is where a Senate committee which is, no doubt, partisan but less partisan than the House of Commons, could look at this whole question in a broad way.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That is past history.

Senator Argue: Well, I don't know. There is much discussion these days about the role of the Senate and whether honourable senators are going to undertake activities that may be out of time with what the Government of Canada is doing. Are we going to be somebody's pawn to do something here that is objectionable? I have taken a fairly forthright and, I think, at times, independent stand in the Senate. I think that we can play a major and a useful role in this matter. We need to make inquiries that take into account the economic needs of Canadian companies. We need to encourage Canadian companies to be competitive. We certainly could hear witnesses if the Transport committee were to deal with this kind of inquiry. A useful solution might result which would be helpful to Canada by increasing competition and thereby giving Canadian companies greater opportunities.

These airports are something of a monopoly. The former Minister of Transport wanted to increase the number of counters by one or two in each of the airports. I think that the policy that Lloyd Axworthy announced, and the department was going to follow, was the right one. I am disappointed that the new government has reverted and not adhered to what their position was when they were in opposition. I think we should look at these issues very broadly from a Senate standpoint.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I understand that Senator Doody would like to adjourn this debate.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I was going to ask Senator Argue a few questions before adjourning the debate.

Senator Steuart: I would like to say a few words, if I may, realizing that I may be the last speaker before the bar which is a dreadful position to be in.

As Senator Argue stated, I was involved with this problem before the change of government and following the change of government. It is a fairly complicated matter but, as I understand it, one or two of the franchisees of Holiday Rent-A-Car left some debts. The bureaucracy took the attitude that if anybody by that name owes a debt they are not going to consider their bid. When the previous government looked into it, the decision was made that this was not a reasonable stand to take. As Senator Argue pointed out, they said they would change the policy.

The other problem that Holiday Rent-A-Car has, and likewise any small Canadian firm, is that large companies like Avis and Hertz tend to bid very low because they are the one rent-a-car company at the large airports, and then they pick up the smaller airports as they go along. If that happens and they squeeze out the small companies, these small companies lose their chance to get referrals from the larger airports. This factor can make it extremely difficult and, in fact, almost impossible for small companies under the bidding procedure that now exists.

I think it would be very appropriate for the Transport committee to look into this matter because it could hear witnesses on behalf of the government and on behalf of the franchisees who are bidding on these contracts. The bureaucrats do not encounter any problems so long as they stick with Avis, Hertz and Tilden, but there are many small companies that want to get into this business—and those who are in it hope to stay in it—and they are the ones that have the problems. I happen to believe that bureaucrats should have just as many problems as anybody else and sometimes a few more. I think it would be appropriate to have this matter referred to committee. Perhaps the system cannot be changed from the way the government has been handling it for years. I think that Lloyd Axworthy became convinced that a change would be healthy. I thought that Don Mazankowski was convinced of that, as well, but along the line I believe that the bureaucracy convinced him that his new approach was not the right one and he went back to the previous one. But these people are losing out. I think the situation is unfortunate not only for this new company, but also for any future small Canadian company which, when established, wants to get into this business.

I support the idea of referring this to the Transport committee, and if they can impress upon the government that some change of policy would be beneficial to small Canadian companies, then it would be worthwhile.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Argue a few short questions before I move the adjournment of the debate, if he will accept the questions. Perhaps I should ask them all at once and if Senator Argue can deal with them, fine, but if not, we can deal with them when we resume the debate.

It seems to me that one of the points raised is that there is a barring of small companies from the airports. That may or may not be so. I have been told that in 36 of the 59 small airports, that is, the four or fewer counter airports, fewer than four companies bid on the contracts. It seems to me that the anxiety of people to get into that business does not seem to be as great as we are led to believe. Whether that is accurate or not remains to be seen.

On the matter of arrears, I understand that several of the Holiday Rent-A-Car franchisees were in default of payment and their subsequent successors were denied the right to bid. It seems to me that others who have been in the same situation and who have paid their arrears, would be discriminated against if Holiday were to be forgiven. I wonder if Senator Argue would comment on that.

In the last round of contracts, I have been told that Holiday bid on 13 of the 59 airports and were awarded 8 of those. It does not seem to me that they were discriminated against in that area, but perhaps the honourable senator can comment on that now or answer that question after the Christmas recess.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am not an authority on this subject. I picked up the points as I went along and perhaps I can make some useful comments on the questions raised by Senator Doody.

He said in some of the smaller airports they do not get too many bids, and there does not seem to be much anxiety on the part of the companies to get into this business. From what I understood, the lucrative areas are the major airports. A large company, which is successful in a bid for a counter at a major airport, then, of course, has an opportunity to be successful at the smaller airports. My understanding is that business firms with personnel travelling via small airports will have more access to one of the four major car rental services than to small company franchises located in small airports. For example, the Prince Albert Car Rental Service has a counter at the Prince Albert airport, but it really has no competition. I am informed that if one or two small, independent companies have counters in one or two airports, they really do not stand a chance against the major companies.

I believe the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications could perform a very useful purpose by eliciting evidence on this subject. That evidence will obviously carry more weight than my answers, even though it may confirm what I have said.

Senator Doody asked if it would be fair to those franchisees who have paid up if those who did not pay up were allowed to bid. As I understand it, the issue is whether the Holiday Rent-a-Car overall firm has the right to bid in this particular case for airport counters. The advice I have indicates that it was not able to tender on that basis.

I would hope that, when the Honourable Minister of Transport reads Debates of the Senate he will consider postponing the awarding of those contracts until such time as there has been a thorough inquiry.

Honourable senators, unfortunately I have no information regarding the eight to thirteen bids mentioned by Senator Doody. As I said, my information is that Holiday Rent-a-Car is not able to bid, in this major way, for the tenders that have been called. I think the final date on those was said to be December 7 or December 8.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is only one other matter which requires attention before we close the doors of the Senate for this year, and that is to deal with the motion for adjournment. However, before that happens, my colleagues would like me to express to you, Mr. Clerk, to all your people at the table, to the messengers who help us in the chamber, to the ladies and gentlemen of Hansard and to those other people around the Senate who make our work so pleasant and contribute so much to what we do, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

I think all honourable senators will join with me—and I am sure Senator Petten will agree to this—in extending to all our associates, whether as senators or in another capacity, our very warm, good wishes for a happy Christmas and our sincere hope that the New Year will be profitable and pleasant for all of us.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I would address just another word to this gallant corporal's guard which has provided us with a quorum for our final sitting here. I would express to you, as, indeed, I express to all honourable senators whether here or not, my own good wishes for the season of Christmas and for the New Year.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, this may come as somewhat of a shock, but I wholeheartedly endorse everything the Leader of the Government has said. I wish everyone here a happy Christmas.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, January 22, 1985, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, January 22, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following persons, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate:

Finlay MacDonald

Brenda M. Robertson

Efstathios William Barootes

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced—

The following honourable senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writs of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and were seated:

Hon. Finlay MacDonald, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, introduced between Hon. Duff Roblin, P.C., and Hon. John M. Macdonald.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson, of Riverview, New Brunswick, introduced between Hon. Duff Roblin, P.C., and Hon. Lowell Murray.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes, of Regina, Saskatchewan, introduced between Hon. Duff Roblin, P.C., and Hon. R. James Balfour.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to call your attention to the presence in the gallery of the Honourable Eric Berntson, Deputy Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

THE LATE HON. WILLIAM MOORE BENIDICKSON, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since we last met we have all been saddened by the death on January 4 of our colleague, the Honourable William Benidickson. It is a sad duty for me to pay tribute to his memory on behalf of his friends in the Senate, particularly those on this side of the house. As is well known, Senator Benidickson was born in Manitoba but he lived in Kenora, Ontario, and served that area as a member of Parliament for quite a number of years and, indeed, had the distinct success of securing re-election on five successive occasions. It was no wonder he had earned the respect and admiration of his electors because he was an outstanding young person who had served our country as a Wing Commander in the Royal Canadian Air Force with a most distinguished service record.

Bill Benidickson served as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport and to the Minister of Finance. Later, of course, he became a member of the Pearson cabinet following the 1963 election. He served as Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. It was in that period when Mr. Benidickson was parliamentary secretary to the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Abbott, that I first made his acquaintance. As a new member of Parliament, entering in 1953, I was impressed by his friendliness and by his mastery of the complex subjects with which he was expected to deal on behalf of the minister in the House of Commons.

Subsequently, of course, Mr. Benidickson was summoned to the Senate in July of 1965 where he sat as a Liberal-Labour senator. One of the interesting characteristics of the late senator's career was his strong attachment to that designation of Liberal-Labour. It expressed his own social interests and also the fact that he had served in Kenora as solicitor for the Trades and Labour Council.

Those of you who served with Senator Benidickson in this chamber know of his diligence and how he served attentively in committees, particularly the committees on Internal Economy and National Finance.

He suffered a lengthy period of ill health, and his service to the Senate was interrupted by ill health at various times. Those of you with whom I have talked have told me that he was, indeed, a faithful attender to his duties as a member of various committees and as a member of the chamber itself.

I certainly feel very sad about the loss of Senator Benidickson. Indeed, because of his illness, I did not have the opportunity of resuming the relationship with him in this chamber which I enjoyed when he served as a member of the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, I should like to express to his widow, Agnes Benidickson, and to the members of his family our deepest sympathy on the passing of a colleague and friend.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is only a truism to say that Senator Benidickson was respected and admired on all sides of this chamber, and I appreciate the opportunity of being able to join with my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, in some words of tribute to his career in public life.

Yes, Senator Benidickson was born in Manitoba; in fact, he was born in Dauphin, Manitoba. It is true that he was a man who was associated, in my mind, with the Icelandic community of my province. His name, I think, would indicate that. The Icelandic people of Canada, particularly of Manitoba, have made a very great contribution to our nation and none more so than Senator Benidickson who was a leader in that community. He was a man well furnished with ability and he used that ability to contribute to the public weal.

As Senator MacEachen said, he served in the Royal Canadian Air Force in a most distinguished capacity. On completion of his service in 1945, like many others of that particular age, he sought an opportunity to serve in public life. He found that opportunity as the member for Kenora-Rainy River. Although that is outside of Manitoba, we Manitobans always think of it as being very closely associated with our interests. Bill Benidickson was an advocate of our interests.

He was a very successful politician as is demonstrated by the number of times he was elected to the House of Commons, and he did rejoice in the peculiar designation, as it seems now, of Liberal-Labour. He ran under that ticket on each occasion that he ran for Parliament and it was recognized that in doing so he wished to express his solidarity with the people of the community he represented, and he did so very successfully.

His career in public life is well known to all honourable senators. It was a distinguished one indeed. While a member of the House of Commons he became a minister and a member of the Privy Council. There followed a 20-year term here in the Senate of Canada. As has already been said, those of us who had an opportunity to work with him learned to appreciate his qualities anew.

It is not only his public career that I bring to mind, but also his personal characteristics. As all of us can testify, he was a friendly, kindly and considerate man, a hospitable man. Although he cherished his political views, he never let them interfere with a warm association with those who perhaps had a different outlook on the affairs of the nation.

He was a well spoken man. By that I mean he was not only articulate, but on subjects to which he devoted himself he was indeed eloquent. Therefore he was well suited to serve in a public capacity, and he brought to it a personal and private manner which endeared him to all.

It is perfectly true that during the last few months he was sorely tried, because he was faced with an implacable disease. But during those difficult times he displayed a fortitude and courage which I believe is the measure of the man.

I join in the expression of condolence that has been offered to his wife, Agnes, and his three children. Perhaps I could mention also his brother-in-law, the Honourable James Richardson, who also is a member of the political fraternity. Those of us on this side of the house wish to be associated in full measure with the expression of condolence now being offered on the passing of our colleague, William Benidickson.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I first met Senator Bill Benidickson overseas during World War II when he was serving in the Royal Canadian Air Force, and a more handsome officer you never saw. He served from 1940 to 1945 with great distinction and rose to the rank of Wing Commander.

Our friendship was cemented when we were deskmates in 1945 following our election to the House of Commons. As my colleagues have said, Bill Benidickson was elected as a Liberal-Labour candidate who represented Kenora-Rainy River. He was re-elected on six successive occasions, until his appointment to the Senate in 1965. Senator Benidickson never forgot his roots and the people never forgot him. It was a happy relationship.

Following his election to the House of Commons he was active on committees, particularly the Veterans Affairs Committee when we wrote the Veterans Charter which still stands as a credit to this country. He was also a member of the Labour, Manpower and Immigration Committee. In 1951 he was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, and in 1953, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. In 1963 he became Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and while holding that portfolio he was referred to by the industry as "the mining man's mines Minister". He was one of the major planners of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act which kept the gold mines open. It was he who removed the sword of Damocles which had hung over the head of the Nova Scotia coal mining industry by putting coal subventions on a five-year basis, instead of arranging them each year on a hand-to-mouth basis. He had a broad outlook on this country, for which he had great hopes and a limitless dream of what it could offer. While in opposition in the House of Commons he was the finance critic. He showed outstanding ability to analyze what was happening in the financial world, especially as it affected the Canadian budget—a very intelligent and sharp critic. He used common sense, good judgment and instincts over the advice of experts. He was a compassionate man. He always had time for and expended much effort on the poor and the unfortunate. He was a staunch supporter of the social assistance network which this country built up. Bill was a good and humble man. He had a high regard for Parliament and lived up to his responsibilities. He was kind; he made friends easily and kept them.

When Bill Benidickson came to the Senate he joined me as a deskmate and we became even closer friends and collaborators. He served this country with credit in time of war and in time of peace. I extend to his wife, Agnes, his sons, Jamie and Kris, his daughter, Kathleen, and his sister, Mrs. Ruby Ashdown, grateful remembrance of a life well spent. I find it a very sad duty to pay tribute to the memory of a very old and precious friend who died after a long and difficult illness.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, I rise to pay tribute to a colleague who has served Northern Ontario for nearly 40 years, the Honourable Senator Bill Benidickson of Kenora-Rainy River. The late senator served us in the north with pride and distinction. Bill was a very able and learned lawyer. He chose Kenora for his practice and residence because he knew that Northern Ontario had a promising future for those who had faith in the north. When he decided to run as a Liberal-Labour candidate, the sign of victory for his party was not assured. His will and ability to sell himself as a worker for the people brought him not only six consecutive victories, but entrenched him as a fighter for the north. Bill was a very articulate man, as was said by the previous speaker. He was devoted to his people. He was energetic and he contributed a great deal to Parliament, both in the other place and, since 1965, in this honourable assembly. He was a fine gentleman who had deep feeling for people. Time and again he stood up for causes, whether or not they were popular with the government or his party.

Bill and I represented half of the province of Ontario geographically from Barrie, north of Toronto, to the Manitoba border—he for some 39 plus years, while 1984 was my fortieth anniversary of political service to my people. I said to him last summer, “Bill, we have been serving for some time. We are not immortal. Some day we will have to turn off the light in order to be received where the light is forever on.” He said to me, “Rhéal, you know that I am not one of those who wears his church uniform every day but I have faith in what I am doing for the good Lord by caring for his people as best I can.” I asked Senator Benidickson, “Are you aware of the journalist’s question to Sir Winston Churchill on his 90th birthday?” He replied, “No, I am not.” I told him: “The question was: ‘Do you have any fear of meeting your Maker?’” and Senator Benidickson’s answer was, “Why should I fear Him? If I live for some years, I will continue to serve Him through the people I represent, and if I die, I will see Him and live with Him wherever.”

Honourable senators, through my humble voice, the people of the north are conveying to Mrs. Benidickson and her family our most sincere sympathy. When history is written about him, his contribution, his unselfishness and his kindness of heart to serve his people will make him stand as one of the great timbers that the north has produced.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, in rising to pay tribute to Bill Benidickson, I also recall that he was born in Dauphin, Manitoba, a town that, perhaps because of the rigours of its winters, produces extremely tough and able people. Beyond that, as the Leader of the Government in the Senate has stated, Bill Benidickson was an Iclander and he lived up to and fulfilled all of the great promise of that race which has done so much for the province of Manitoba.

Following his war service with the RCAF, he moved to Kenora to set up his practice of law. However, it was not so much to practise law but more to be involved in politics, because that is what he loved, and in 1945, he was elected, as others have said, under the Liberal-Labour ticket and he continued to be elected for six more terms.

He was indeed a popular member. My cottage is in Minaki, Ontario, which was in his riding of Kenora-Rainy River. At the time that he was the sitting member for that riding, I recall how popular he was and that popularity existed long after he had given up elective politics. So great was it that, in 1958, when the great Diefenbaker sweep took place, Bill Benidickson held his seat. As of course you know, he became the Minister of Mines and then was appointed to this chamber.

What I liked about Bill Benidickson was that he was a politician in the truest sense of the word. He liked people. He wanted to do something for other people, and the people trusted him by electing him time after time. He had a vast knowledge of this country and its workings. In my years as chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, of which he was a member, I recall relying over and over again on Bill Benidickson and Allister Grosart to question the kind of witness who tended to put forth some arcane theory that most of us could not follow. Both Senator Grosart and Senator Benidickson had an incredible background of knowledge and the ability to question in a penetrating manner.

Bill Benidickson was a true Liberal. He espoused the free enterprise system but he was bound and determined that its benefits would be passed on to all throughout the country. He was a man who fought for the freedom of people in the real sense of the word.

I think this country will miss Bill Benidickson. He was a first class politician, possessed a brilliant mind, and had the greatest attribute of all politicians, compassion for people.

UNEMPLOYMENT

ADJUSTED STATISTICS

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but before doing so, on a personal note I should like to welcome the three new senators. I do not personally know the two gentlemen, but I extend a special welcome to my colleague from New Brunswick, Senator Robertson. I am sure she will remember that when she first came to the Legislature of New Brunswick she was assigned to be my critic. I was then Minister of Health and Welfare of the Government of New Brunswick. I can tell you that she was a very harsh but very knowledgeable critic and did her job extremely well. She became an important member of the party that defeated us in 1970, and then she assumed half of the responsibility that I had had as Minister of Health and Welfare by becoming Minister of Welfare. Following those duties she competently performed many important tasks in the Government of New Brunswick.

I think it is recognized throughout New Brunswick that, despite the fact that she was a harsh critic of the policy that we were promoting in 1966 to 1970, when she became responsible as a minister of the government she ensured that she followed those policies almost exactly. I welcome you to our chamber, Senator Robertson.

Honourable senators, over the weekend I had the pleasure, or displeasure, of watching the television program entitled The Nation's Business on CBC. The Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable Flora MacDonald, gloated about her creation of 100,000 new jobs since the government took office. While she was saying that, I could not help but wonder if the minister was knowingly misleading the people of Canada or if, in fact, she was using those figures to make her point but those figures are really not accurate.

While it is true that Statistics Canada reports an adjusted diminution of unemployment to 10.8 per cent, if I remember correctly, the real facts are that in the four months since September 4 or 17, whichever date you wish to take, the number of unemployed people in Canada has grown by 196,000.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Will he inform this house if the government takes pride in and credit for the adjusted figures of the unemployment rate? Does it also accept the responsibility for the increase of 196,000 unemployed Canadians?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is remarkable how circumstances alter cases because I can remember standing on the other side of the house on more occasions than one to listen to reports of employment in the nation delivered to us by the gentlemen who were then representing the government in the Senate. I think it was pretty generally agreed that it was not unreasonable for them to use the seasonally adjusted figures as the standard of comparison for this year, other years, last month, et cetera. Therefore, it is generally agreed that the way in which we can best measure changes in employment or unemployment is by the seasonally adjusted figures. Those are the figures which the minister quoted, and I think that those are the figures that can be fairly used in debate on this important matter.

I am encouraged that the economy has been that resilient particularly as the month of December is not usually a good month for employment. I am encouraged but by no means satisfied. I think that that is the answer that I should give my honourable friend.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, as usual the Leader of the Government in the Senate did not answer the whole question, but he did better on this occasion than he usually does because he answered part of it. The second part of my question is the part I should like to have answered.

So far as I am concerned, honourable senators, to rely on answers given by former members of the former government is not good enough. As I recall, the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate, when in opposition, was never satisfied with those kinds of answers. Is it only the change of sides in this house that has brought about this transformation in his way of analyzing unemployment in Canada?

It is not factual to say that December is a bad month for employment. It is known that, due to the increase in retail sales and of activity in the service industry in this country, a large number of jobs are created in December. As I read the figures, the jobs created during that month were created in those sectors.

I repeat the second part of my question: How does the Leader of the Government, who has deep concern about his own province, react to the situation, which is that in his province and in my province the figures cited by the Minister of Employment and Immigration do not apply, and, in fact, there was an adjusted reduction in unemployment in our two provinces? Is it as a result of the policies of this government that we see a so-called increase in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec but a decrease in most other regions of Canada?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend managed to sit in his seat for the six years that I have been here without raising a single objection. He has listened to statistics quoted by his ministers that were based on the adjusted employment figures. Of course, I suppose I should not be very surprised that he does not find that satisfactory today.

Nevertheless, I am going to stick to those figures because I believe they can be well relied upon to measure relative changes in the employment situation.

No one is going to be happy about unemployment in Canada and nobody is going to be satisfied, least of all me, until some further improvements are made.

The government is doing its very best by its economic policies and by the economic leadership it is attempting to give to the nation to encourage the private sector to expand its activities so that we will make some progress in dealing with the question of unemployment. That policy applies across the country, regardless of provincial boundaries.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, as I listened to the pronouncement of economic policy by the minister responsible, the Honourable Sinclair Stevens, I was afraid that the end result of his policies would be to continue the trend which is obvious in this country today, that is, by concentrating on major industry, there will naturally be a positive effect in central Canada while the provinces at either end of the country will suffer, as is shown by these figures for December.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate remind his colleague in government that, while it is positive to increase employment in central Canada, the Atlantic and western provinces are still part of this country and some efforts should be directed towards the improvement of the economic situation in those areas.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has made reference to the Honourable Sinclair Stevens and his responsibility for certain economic policies. I ask my honourable friend to remember that this gentleman recently signed an economic accord with the Province of Quebec. The Province of Quebec can by no means be described as a "have-not" province although it is certainly one with serious economic problems. In spite of the fact that the former administration did not find it possible to conclude the economic agreement with the Province of Quebec to promote regional development, the Honourable Sinclair Stevens has been able to do so. I think that should be recorded to his credit and to the credit of the government.

The same thing is true of my own province. A statement of economic co-operation and of job creation between the federal government and the Province of Manitoba has also been concluded under the auspices of the present régime. Manitoba is hardly a "have" province, but it is one that will be able to benefit from co-operating with the federal government.

If my honourable friend will be patient, I think he will find that the Honourable Sinclair Stevens will, in turn, conclude agreements with other provinces in Canada so that, in co-operation with provincial authorities, we may improve the economic structure of the country.

[Senator Thériault.]

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I believe the Leader of the Government has made my point much better than I could have made it myself.

It is my concern that this government appears to be ready to sign agreements with provinces that can afford the 50 per cent share required. That kind of policy hurts the Atlantic provinces because the governments of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland do not have the resources to match federal grants. That is why the previous government designed an economic policy whereby, in certain areas, the federal government was prepared to bear more than 50 per cent of the cost of a program.

Does the Leader of the Government think it right that those kinds of joint agreements are offered to and signed on the same basis by all of the provinces of Canada?

Senator Roblin: Of course, my honourable friend's assumptions are erroneous. He assumes that my own province, for example, the province of Manitoba, is so flush with funds that it need not be considered as one of those that have some difficulty in matching federal grants or, indeed, in financing its own services. It has a pretty substantial debt. I believe the same remark would apply to the Province of Quebec.

I think it is wrong for my honourable friend to suggest that the same terms and conditions are laid down in these agreements for each province. Such is not the case. There are variations and the variations are designed to meet the very point my honourable friend makes, that circumstances differ in different parts of the country. An agreement which will suit one province would not necessarily suit others. These points are kept in mind by the federal authorities when they negotiate these arrangements.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, in repeating my question, I would make one more point and that is that it is not fair for the Leader of the Government to make a broad statement that the previous government was not able to reach an agreement with the Province of Quebec. He knows very well that, in the past 10 years, agreements were, in fact, reached with the Province of Quebec although the last long-term agreement had not been settled between the Government of Canada and the Province of Quebec. To make the flat statement that the former administration had not been able to reach agreement with the Government of Quebec in the past is inaccurate.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps I should have phrased my statement the other way around and said that the Government of Quebec had not been able to reach agreement with the Government of Canada, because the plain fact is that the Government of Quebec refused to sign an agreement with the previous government, but they were able to do so when negotiating with the present administration.

Senator Thériault: The separatist Government of Quebec did not refuse but dragged its feet because they were prompted by some members of this chamber and of the House of Commons regarding the so-called event that was supposed to take place and that has taken place. As a matter of fact, in the past, the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec have signed many agreements.

Senator Roblin: Thank goodness for that.

DISARMAMENT

SPACE-BASED DEFENSIVE WEAPONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before I put one or two questions, I should like to extend my welcome to the three new senators. I wish each of them great success in the Senate.

I particularly welcome Senator MacDonald from Nova Scotia. We go back a long way. When I met him a few days ago, I told him that we were back where we started more than 40 years ago, debating each other as classmates. During that period Senator MacDonald showed all the skillful eloquence for which he has since become well known and which, undoubtedly, will be exhibited in our debates in this chamber. I regard him as a formidable opponent and I will be careful now that he is among us. Therefore, I welcome new senators, particularly Senator MacDonald.

I wish to ask the Leader of the Government a question based on the important statement made yesterday in the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister referred to the very important negotiations which had been decided upon and which are to take place between the Soviet Union and the United States on the question of arms control. I am sure the world heaved a sigh of relief upon learning that the two superpowers had finally reached the point where those negotiations are resumed. I share Mr. Clark's view in regarding this development as being an important step ahead.

However, yesterday the minister, in replying to a question urging him to ask the United States to exercise some restraint in the pursuit of research on space-based defensive weapons, stated that it would be unpardonable for this country, this government, or this Parliament to take a position that would throw those negotiations off course. Of course, I agree that it would be unpardonable. However, at the same time, Canada has had some reputation for taking an independent course, particularly in the pursuit of arms reductions.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government why the government feels that it would be unpardonable for Canada in these circumstances to urge the United States to show some restraint in entering upon a new phase of arms development in the undertaking of research on space-based defensive weapons. Can the minister assist us in providing some clarification on that point?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I acknowledge the fact that my honourable friend is probably the expert in this chamber in the field of foreign affairs. Therefore, I listen carefully to what he says. I do not, by any means, feel that I have the same background and experience in this important matter that he has.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, I am not able, on my own authority, to say exactly what the minister meant when he used those words which, indeed, I have in front of me now.

It seems to me that we should bear in mind the goal of the American government. What is that goal? It is not simply star wars. It is not simply any freeze. The goal of the American government in the negotiating session is to eliminate nuclear weapons entirely. That is my understanding of their ultimate aim. One has to admit that it is an ambitious goal to set, and probably it is out of reach at the present time and they may have to settle for something else.

I believe the Canadian government's attitude is that the responsibility for conducting those negotiations is the responsibility of the American government, and in the course of those negotiations all kinds of factors will come into play, because there will have to be trade-offs. One party will have to concede a point here and the other party will have to concede a point there. Therefore, I do not believe it is at all unreasonable to suggest that the Americans should be allowed to enter the negotiations with a full quiver, with a full range of items to be considered for negotiation. Probably the question of star wars is one such item.

That certainly is an argument which has some legitimacy and, I believe, some value, as one enters the negotiations. I would be bold to say that the minister's intention was to convey the government's position that we did not wish to appear to be interfering in the negotiations by making issues of matters that were on the negotiating table. I believe that is the point the minister was trying to make. I stand to be corrected, and I will certainly ask him to review my statement in the Senate to see whether I have misunderstood the matter. However, that is the answer I would give at present.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for his comments. I look forward to receiving any further comments that might be made by the minister on this point, because, on the face of it, it does not appear to be self-evident that Canada is precluded from pressing forward certain views to influence both sides of the table, realizing, of course, that we do have a special relationship with the United States, as with other countries, in the defence of the West.

I draw the Leader of the Government's attention to a statement that was made by the head of the Soviet Union, Mr. Chernenko, when he commented upon the intention of the United States to press ahead with the space-based defensive systems. He said:

Attempts in some American quarters to foist a star wars era on mankind are creating a new additional threat to peace. If the United States militarist forces prevail on this issue, an irreversible situation will arise fraught with baneful consequences.

Admitting the element of rhetoric in that statement made by the leader of the Soviet Union, it is still a reflection of the apprehension that is felt by the Soviet Union at the prospect of a new escalation in space weaponry.

I noticed that the minister, Mr. Clark, said that the conduct of Canada should be calculated to encourage the success of the process. I would ask the Leader of the Government: Is it not more likely that the success of the process will be achieved if some understanding is shown by Canada of the views of the Soviet Union as well as those of the United States, which the minister seems to have embraced 100 per cent, contrary to what I consider to be the independent character of Canadian foreign policy? Perhaps the Leader of the Government would reflect on how we accommodate the fears of the other party in embracing totally the views of the United States.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am not quite as optimistic as my honourable friend, who seems to suggest that if Canada were to make a statement on nuclear disarmament, it would be felt with equal force and effect around the desks of the Kremlin as around the desks of Washington. I do not happen to think that. I believe that what we have to say on this matter has little impact in Moscow and that it has much more impact in the United States.

So for us to take a position with respect to items that might be on the bargaining table at this stage does not, I believe, mean that it would affect the negotiations from the Russian point of view, in the way that my honourable friend suggests.

I take the statements by the General Secretary of the Soviet Communist Party with a grain of salt, because I recall very well the time when the Soviet Union positioned S-20 missiles in Europe. It was thought to be an intolerable imbalancing of the arms situation on that continent. At that time the United States decided that it would put missiles of its own in Europe, with the consent of NATO, which, indeed, it did. The Soviet Union then declared that it would take no further part in any discussions on disarmament until they were removed. But we see that was not the case. We see that they do respond to arguments, but they are not verbal arguments; they have to be arguments that are based on something more solid than that. I do not like that situation. I regret it. I wish it were something else. If I thought that any good purpose could be served in our stating a position with respect to any particular aspect that is on the table right now that would improve the prospects of getting a bargain, I would be much inclined to do so.

At the present time I cannot see it. I do not think it would be appropriate, merely for the sake of saying we have an independent policy of some kind, to do something that might distort the balance of bargaining at the present time. Everybody knows our views on nuclear weapons—we do not want them. The aim of this conference is to eliminate them, or, if it cannot eliminate them, somehow reduce the pressure. I think we have to let the bargainers go at it for a while to see what happens.

Senator MacEachen: I regret that the minister sees no role for Canada; that, indeed, Canada should opt out and remain silent on the arms question and particularly on these very arms negotiations. That is, I hope that the government will not adhere to that position very long because the people of Canada expect not only the government but the Parliament of Canada to encourage the process by activity and policy statements.

Yesterday Mr. Clark told us that he had received assurances from the Government of the United States that there would be consultation regarding any nuclear action in time of crisis which might affect Canada, and that no such action would be taken without the agreement of Canada. I have two questions on this matter. First, what type of nuclear action did the Government of Canada seek assurance about? I want to know what we said to the United States and what kind of action we received assurance about.

My second question flows from the minister's statement, that the United States will not contemplate any such nuclear action without the agreement of Canada. What I want to know is whether this government is open to the possibility of reaching agreement at some future time in some future circumstances with the United States on nuclear action in Canada. I thought that we all agreed that we should get rid of nuclear weapons. There is a suggestion here that we might in some circumstances reach agreement with the United States on nuclear action in Canada, obviously by nuclear weapons. Is the government open to that possibility or has it ruled out completely that possibility?

Senator Roblin: I am not the Secretary of State for External Affairs so my honourable friend will have to excuse me if I do not give specific answers to some of the questions he has raised. I shall deal with his first point; namely, that Canada has no independent policy in respect to disarmament or that I am suggesting that we should never say anything or that we should completely follow the American lead wherever it may take us. That is not what I said, it is not what I intended, and I am certain that it is not the policy of the Government of Canada. When we have a case to make and we can make it, we shall make it and my honourable friend can rely on us to make it. However, we will use our best judgment and make our point at the time and place it is most effective in the interests of the people of this country.

The second matter I want to deal with is the honourable senator's question as to what these nuclear possibilities are. I must tell him that a nuclear possibility to me means anything in the nuclear line. Subject to verification by reference to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that is what I understand the position of the government to be, that the use of any nuclear device would require the consent of the nation. As for whether or not we have any intention at the present time of deploying a nuclear device in Canada, the answer is decidedly no.

Senator MacEachen: Has the government ruled out that possibility entirely, or is it open to agreement with the United States at some future time?

Senator Roblin: When my honourable friend can tell me what the future will bring, I might have an answer to his question.

Senator MacEachen: Is the minister now saying that at some time it is conceivable that the government will reach an agreement with the United States to establish nuclear action in Canada? It seems to me that he is saying that the government is open to such a possibility, and I think we are entitled to know whether that is the case or what the government is open to.

Senator Roblin: The last time the Government of Canada made an agreement with the United States on nuclear weapons, it was for the Bomarc. My honourable friend and his colleagues will understand fully how that agreement was arrived at. I have nothing to say about the question of what the future policy of the government may be because it is a hypothetical question and everyone knows that it is not possible to give valid answers to hypothetical questions.

Senator MacEachen: It is obvious that the government remains open to seeking agreement with the United States at some future time on nuclear action in Canada. That is the clear implication of what has been said.

Senator Roblin: I doubt that it is clear to everybody because I do not think it is clear that the Government of Canada is seeking an opportunity to make a deal with the Government of the United States on nuclear weapons for Canada.

ENERGY

NEW PRICING AGREEMENT—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I am sure that the Leader of the Government will realize that there are a large number of people in the region of Canada that I come from who are interested in the energy agreement which will replace the current one which expires in January 31. Therefore, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if we can expect a new energy agreement on February 1.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is doing her best to see that agreement is reached at the earliest possible moment. Beyond that, I have no information.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators I am sorry that there is no more information because a lot of questions have been asked outside this chamber during the past few days. There is some indication that there may not be agreement by February 1. If that happens, could the leader tell us what agreement will be in effect?

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that in the past when time limits had to be taken into account, the usual practice has been to extend the current agreement until the new one has been decided upon.

Senator Olson: Does that mean that the prices in effect now will go beyond January into the month of February or will it be retroactive to the day when the current agreement expires, in the event there is some change in the agreement, even though it may not be reached until some later date in February?

Senator Roblin: As my honourable friend is undoubtedly aware, a good many of the prices under the present energy agreement are variable. They are not fixed prices but prices that are set on the recommendation of the National Energy Board and they vary from month to month. I am sure those prices will continue to vary.

Senator Olson: I am also aware that there are certain formulas set down for arriving at these prices which have a very significant effect on a number of people and companies in the business. Therefore, I wonder if the minister will take as notice the questions I have raised so that not only myself but people in the industry who are vitally concerned will know when to expect a reply to the questions?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can rely upon the minister to make a statement in good time before the deadline is reached.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has not answered my question, which is not new. I would like him to give me the undertaking that he will make an inquiry. He has not done that. All he has said is that the minister—and I presume he is referring to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—will make a statement. I want him to give me an undertaking that he will make inquiries on the questions I have raised.

Senator Roblin: I would be glad to oblige my honourable friend.

THE SENATE

TELEVISION OF SITTINGS

Hon. David A. Croll: Now that television cameras are present in the House of Lords, can we be far behind?

• (1510)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think that the members of the Senate are best qualified to decide whether or not cameras should be allowed into this chamber. Perhaps I can express my old-fashioned prejudice and say that I feel that we get along well as we are.

DISARMAMENT

SPACE-BASED DEFENSIVE WEAPONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate what he meant when he referred to the desire of President Reagan to abolish nuclear weapons or to make them unusable or obsolete through the so-called star wars defence system. Was the Leader of the Government in the Senate referring to that statement by President Reagan that, if those weapons can be shot down, then obviously they will not be used?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Perhaps I did not express myself as clearly as I should have if my honourable friend is taking that meaning from my remark. My remark had nothing to do with the star wars issue per se; it had to do with the policy of the American government, as stated publicly, that what they would like to do about nuclear weapons is to get rid of them entirely. The star wars defence question is a separate issue.

Senator Gigantès: I would point out to my honourable friend that that is the issue; the defence against nuclear weapons by using space devices to shoot them down is the issue that is concerning the Russians right now and it does take two sides to reach an agreement. If those weapons are to be established, there are a great many experts who say it will lead to a new arms race more dangerous than the previous one; that it will increase the possibilities of accidents. I say to the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Is this not an issue on which Canada could perhaps speak quietly to the United States and say to them, "Let us not escalate the arms race to a new level."

Senator Roblin: Perhaps if my honourable friend is correct in saying that the Soviet negotiators fear the star wars concept, it is possible to conceive that that might be an inducement for them to concede some reduction in the regular nuclear activities in order to avoid that kind of development. That is a possibility one cannot ignore and I think it is one of the factors that is on the table at the present time.

As for star wars weapons themselves, I have no idea whether or not they will be brought to fruition. However, speaking perhaps philosophically, I might perhaps be comforted by the thought that at least the research is on a defensive weapon and not an offensive one. There are problems, and my honourable friend and I know what they are, but at least these concepts cannot be dismissed out of hand.

Senator Gigantès: I thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for his answer. However, I would refer him to an article which appeared in the Sunday Star from Toronto this past Sunday by Mr. Paul Warnke, who was the chief negotiator for the United States on these issues, where he pointed out that the same objections that the Soviet Union is now raising towards anti-missile defence were raised by the United States when the anti-ballistic missile treaty was signed. At that time, the Soviet Union said: "It is good to develop a defence. This is the development of a defensive weapon." According to Mr. Warnke, the United States then answered that the minute you develop a defence system, the other side will have as its first reaction the building of more offensive weapons in order to saturate the new defence. That is how the arms race multiplies and the prospect of this new star wars concept is worrying many experts in the United States, in Europe and in this country.

It seems to me that this issue is tailor-made for Canada, in view of the fact that we are friends of the United States but we are also a country that has taken its deserved place in the role of peacemaker.

Senator Roblin: I might say to my honourable friend that there are two sides to the question. We have been debating it and I think we must leave it at that.

STATISTICS CANADA

RESTORATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity to offer my congratulations and best wishes to all of the new senators in the chamber and to wish them a long and happy life among us.

It is also a pleasure to start the New Year by congratulating a minister of the government on the announcement of the reversal of a policy on December 21 last, namely the decision to restore the 1986 census. This decision makes me extremely happy, as it makes a great many people whose research depends upon it.

My question today also concerns the 1986 census. In announcing this reversal of policy, the minister also announced that there would be an effort to make the equivalent saving which had been projected, namely $100 million over five years, by increasing the costs of census products. The Canadian Homebuilders Association has said that they are quite happy to pay these extra costs, but the extra costs present a very great hardship indeed for people whose academic research depends on the use of census data and other Statistics Canada products. It is a hardship for all researchers who are performing their tasks for scholarly or academic purposes. It is particularly difficult for graduate students who are attempting to write their theses dependent upon Statistics Canada data. It seems to me—and I think the minister will agree—that the more students who rely on this official source of data, the more of the kind of research that we need in analyzing the economic and social issues of this country will be available.

Therefore my question is: Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate ask the government to waive these increased costs of census products to people, and particularly to students, whose academic or scholarly research is dependent upon these data sources?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am waiting for the time when some member of the other side will actually agree with the government that some item of expense should be reduced. There may be some support for reduction in expenditures on the other side, but any time we decide to make a reduction, then all kinds of objections are raised as to why that particular reduction should not be made. This is certainly one of these instances, and I think it is fair to say that one can make a respectable argument against any kind of reduction. The only thing is that when one is in the position in which this government finds itself, namely where reductions have to be made, then a benefit cost must be established and a decision made as to whether the benefit that you receive is worth the cost.

In connection with the census, $100 million is a great deal of benefit. I do not know what the cost would be of the exception proposed by my honourable friend. However, if she can give me further details as to whether or not it is a significant matter, there is no reason why it cannot be looked at.

Senator Marsden: I have a supplementary comment, if I may. I would like to point out that those people who are within the Canadian post-secondary system are already being supported out of the public purse so that the additional cost here is, in the long run, of no benefit to the government at all.

DISCRIMINATORY HIRING PRACTICES AGAINST VISIBLE MINORITIES

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I would also like to add my words of welcome to the new senators, and particularly to Senator MacDonald whose reputation for non-partisanship and fairness is well known to those of us on this side of the house. I am sure that he and his new colleagues will add lustre to our deliberations and I welcome them all very warmly.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I am glad my honourable friend is talking for that side of the house.

Senator Grafstein: I should have said, "... in this corner of the house."

I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In light of Prime Minister Mulroney's promise during the last election campaign to create jobs in the private sector, and in light of the rather disturbing and clear findings arising out of a study published in Metropolitan Toronto entitled Who Gets The Work, which was sponsored by the Urban Alliance on Race Relations and the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto which described very pervasive discriminatory hiring practices against visible minorities in the private sector of Metropolitan Toronto, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform the Senate whether steps are now being taken by the government to accelerate the review of the recommendations of the Abella Report and the recommendations of a committee report of the House of Commons entitled "Equality Now" to ensure that legal standards are constructed that would suffocate this type of cancerous discriminatory conduct?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think that my honourable friend can rest assured that these matters will receive prompt consideration by the administration.

Senator Grafstein: Just as a supplementary to that: Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate could also inform the Senate of the type of special recommendations that he as Leader of the Government in the Senate would make to the government in light of the constitutional responsibilities of this chamber to uphold minority rights and to eradicate this type of behaviour.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that it is appropriate for me, as Leader of the Government in the Senate, to presume to say what the Senate thinks about these matters. I may have an idea as to what I think the Senate thinks about these matters, but the Senate is able to express itself, usually in the form of a study before a committee or something of that kind, and I think I would be inclined to defer to the opinion of the Senate in that respect, rather than express my own.

But I can say, on the general question of multiculturalism, racial prejudices and the racial discrimination of the kind mentioned, that we do not require any opinion of mine to alert the government to the undesirability of the situation and the necessity of trying, as best we can, to come to grips with it. I think I can assure my honourable friend of that.

UNEMPLOYMENT

ARMED FORCES—SUGGESTED RECRUITMENT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

During the Christmas recess there were some suggestions in newspapers that it might be desirable to increase Canada's armed forces as a means of reducing the deplorable level of unemployment prevailing in the country.

My question to the Leader of the Government is this: Could he insist that any increase in Canada's armed forces be justified entirely on the basis of our defence requirements, and that that whole question not be tainted and distorted by the quite separate matter of our unemployment problem?

Those of us who have studied the situation of the 1930s know how very tempting it is to build up armed forces as a means of coping with domestic economic problems. We also know the disastrous consequences that can flow from that kind of remedy to a very serious problem.

Will the leader give us assurances that these two serious matters will be kept quite separate? Will he insist upon that with his colleagues.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not know the source of my honourable friend's information, but I have no information that leads me to believe that these two matters are being assimilated within the government.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a considerable number of delayed answers—28, to be precise.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Senator Frith will probably ask me whether I am going to read them all, and I can say that I am willing to read those that honourable senators would like read.

I will start by giving the details of the question, and then the honourable senator who raised it can signify whether he or she wants it read or not—Senator Frith, take note.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That's the way to do it; I agree with that.

RULES OF THE SENATE

RULE 20—ORAL QUESTIONS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The first delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 15, 1984 by the Honourable H. A. Olson regarding the role of the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate.

[Senator Roblin.]

A practice has developed in Parliament of persons who are not Ministers of Her Majesty answering for the Government in the Houses. The question to be addressed is, therefore, which members, who are not Ministers, are entitled to so answer. The key to the answer is that they are members who are authorized by the Government to speak for it and for whose answers the Government will accept responsibility. Subsection 23(2) of the Interpretation Act reads in part as follows:

23(2) Words directing or empowering a Minister of the Crown to do an act or thing, or otherwise applying to him by his name of office, include a Minister acting for him, or, if the office is vacant, a Minister designated to act in the office by or under the authority of an order in council, and also his successors in the office, and his or their deputy, but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize a deputy to exercise any authority conferred upon a Minister to make a regulation as defined in the Statutory Instruments Act.

Subsection 23(2) is informative because it is a codification of our constitutional practice in this regard. It advances the proposition that, subject to exceptions that are specified, a deputy is entitled to speak for his Minister.

The only statutory acknowledgement of the position of Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate is to be found in subsection 42(2) of the Senate and House of Commons Act which, in providing for additional remuneration for the incumbent, refers to "the recognized position of Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate". A recognized position has recognized responsibilities. The title "Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate", itself, the fact that the Government expects him to answer questions for it in the Senate, the fact that it will accept responsibility for his answers and the fact that the Opposition will accept answers from him, all lead to the inevitable conclusion that the Deputy Leader is authorized, if not explicitly, then by convention, to speak for the Government in the Senate.

EMPLOYMENT

DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 21, 1984 by the Honourable B. Alasdair Graham regarding employment and decentralization programs.

The move was cancelled for two main reasons:

First, there would be no improvement in service to the public realized by the move.

Second, given the above, the estimated cost of the move ($8-$10 million over three years) was deemed an unwarranted expense in light of the Federal Government's current fiscal position.

The Premier, all M.P.s from the area, Senator Muir, and the Mayor of Sydney were among the recipients of a letter from the Honourable Jake Epp, P.C., M.P., Minister of National Health and Welfare, hand delivered at 9:00 a.m. local time, November 9th, informing them that the move was being cancelled, and explaining the rationale for the decision, but not consulted "in the process".

The impact on unemployment (in Sydney) was taken into consideration when the decision was made.

Under the Public Service Employment Act, the Department of National Health and Welfare was under no legal obligation to provide employment to those individuals either undergoing training for positions in the Sydney office, or scheduled to undergo training for same, at the time the move was cancelled.

However, the Minister was of the view that he and the Department had a moral obligation to assist those whose personal circumstance gave rise to a legitimate expectation of employment. Twenty-two such employees were identified. To date, five of this number have accepted employment in the new regional office of ISP, currently being completed in Chatham, Ontario. A further thirteen of this group have been assisted in securing employment in other government departments in the Sydney area. The remainder have been offered employment with the Public Service in the area, but have been unable or unwilling to accept those offers.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare wrote the Minister of Public Works, on November 9th, 1984, indicating that the move was cancelled, and his Department had no need for a new building.

It is not possible for the decision with respect to the Income Security Branch to be changed.

STATISTICS CANADA

CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 21, 1984 by the Honourable Ian Sinclair regarding the cancellation of the 1986 census.

On Friday, December 21st, 1984, the Hon. Harvie André, Minister responsible for Statistics Canada, announced that a Census of Population and Agriculture will be conducted in 1986.

It was intended to limit the 1986 Census to minimal constitutional requirements and to cancel the 1986 Census of Agriculture, as announced in the November 8, 1984 economic statement.

In keeping with the Government's commitment to reduce expenditures, Statistics Canada has developed an alternate plan in order to realize the full $100 million savings.

This decision is a result of extensive consultations with both the public and private sectors. It is the Minister's intention that the funding of Statistics Canada will be consistent with the Government's commitment to control the deficit and will enable Statistics Canada to fully meet its mandate.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 27, 1984 by the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen regarding access to information and government guidelines for public servants.

The purpose of changing the words in the second paragraph of the Guidelines was for greater clarification. The intent of the Guidelines is to assist Public Servants to explain with impartiality and responsibility the policies of their departmental administration.

The circumstances under which Public Servants may grant off the record interviews will be determined by the Minister involved.

The Guidelines do not apply to the Exempt Staff of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 27, 1984 by the Honourable Jeremiah S. Grafstein and the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen regarding access to information and government guidelines for public servants.

It is clearly indicated in the Guidelines and accompanying letter to Deputy Ministers that they are policy guidelines agreed on by Cabinet and applying to Public Servants.

They are guidelines instituted within the authority of Cabinet to set policy for the management and conduct of the Public Service.

Mr. Tom Gould and his group are not public servants, and therefore the guidelines do not apply to the group consulting with the CBC.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POSSIBILITY OF CANCELLING INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 27, 1984 by the Honourable Royce Frith regarding the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the possibility of cancelling its international service.

Senator Roblin was correct in his understanding that there are two streams of information going to the Minister. One is through the report of Mr. Gould and his group which deals with the allocation of fiscal resources within the CBC during the 1985 to 1986 budget year. The Minister also receives information from the President of the CBC through his report.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EQUAL PAY FOR WORK OF EQUAL VALUE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 28, 1984 by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding government policy on the status of women and equal pay for work of equal value.

The report of the Ottawa Citizen is false. Treasury Board is conducting an overall review of policy in this regard. Naturally, no instructions can be issued regarding the application of the equal pay rules until this review has been completed.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 28, 1984 by the Honourable Jeremiah S. Grafstein regarding access to information and government guidelines for public servants.

The Guidelines do not require Public Servants to obtain consent or approval of the Government to provide Senators with information they require. The intent of the guidelines is to assist Public Servants to explain with impartiality and responsibility the policies of their departmental administration.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PLACEMENT OF FORMER MINISTERIAL ASSISTANTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on November 28 and November 29, 1984 by the Honourable Pierre De Bané regarding the public service and the placement of former ministerial assistants.

Senator De Bané has been incorrectly informed.

[Senator Roblin.]

Neither the Public Service Commission nor any department has been instructed not to make job offers to staff members of former ministers who qualified under section 37 of the Public Service Employment Act.

Following the change of government, 51 people became entitled to priority in mid-October, of whom 3 did not exercise their priority entitlement and 8 are unavailable for referral. Of the remaining 40 people, 8 or 20 per cent were placed within the first two months of the priority period.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 4, 1984 by the Honourable Len Marchand regarding government policy respecting the Native Economic Development Program.

The Program will remain unchanged pending the review of all Federal Government programs directed at native people. This review will be carried out in the broader context of the present review of all federal programs.

With respect to projects now awaiting ministerial approval, decisions will be forthcoming in the early new year.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 4, 1984 by the Honourable Ian Sinclair regarding government policy with respect to the economy and interest rates.

Given the large financial requirements of the government over the past few years, the debt program has had to offer a variety of debt instruments as well as to tap as many sources of funds as possible in order to avoid adversely affecting any particular sector of the financial markets. This implies offering a wide variety of maturities. Nevertheless, the debt program has taken into account concerns regarding the effect of today's high interest rates on future public debt charges.

In this connection, it is worth noting that over the past three fiscal years, close to seventy-five per cent of the government's financial requirements have been satisfied through the issuance of debt with not more than one year to maturity (since the interest rate on Canada Savings Bonds is adjusted annually, they are considered a one-year instrument from a debt management perspective). As a result, almost 70 per cent of the government's outstanding debt is comprised of securities with less than three years to maturity, while the average term to maturity of all outstanding debt is currently less than four and one-half years. Excluding Canada Savings Bonds, the average term to maturity of the outstanding debt has fallen to about five years, four months from six years, ten months at the end of 1980. This implies that any future reductions in interest rates will very quickly feed through to lower public debt charges.

If the term to maturity of all new government debt were limited, for example, to five years, a massive annual refinancing program would become necessary. It is quite likely that such a refinancing program would displace other borrowers from the market. In contrast, the offering of longer term debt instruments has allowed the government to distribute the refinancing task over several years. As well, it is worth noting that the regular presence of the federal government in the long-term market keeps the market operational so that other borrowers can access it when they wish. As a result, it has on many occasions been suggested that long-term borrowing by the federal government actually facilitates the issuance of long-term debt by other borrowers.

Finally, despite a strong investor demand for long-term bonds, the government regularly limits the proportion of these bonds offered at the time of any given issue. Recently the proportion of long-term bonds offered for sale to the general public has been limited to around one-third of the total amount offered.

In connection with the issue of long-term bonds, Senator Sinclair suggested he would like to get some further information from the Minister regarding what proportion of the public debt is going to be kept short-term and what proportion is going to be long-term, say over five years.

In reply, it should be noted that, counting Canada Savings Bonds, Treasury bills and bonds with a term to maturity of three years or less, almost 70 per cent of the government's outstanding debt is comprised of securities with less than three years to maturity. Developments in the future will depend on circumstances that are difficult to predict. Nevertheless, the government will continue to ensure that there is an appropriate balance between long and short-term and floating and fixed rate debt, given the restraints imposed on it by the market and by the size of the financial requirements.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FUTURE ROLE OF CANADIAN FORCES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 5, 1984 by the Honourable Henry D. Hicks regarding the future role of the Canadian Armed Forces.

The Minister of National Defence on November 19th, 1984, during his intervention when the House of Commons was debating the Speech from the Throne, announced that early in the new year, a Green Paper would be presented to the House. It is the Government's intention that a new White Paper on Defence be completed and made public before the end of the calendar year.

A Green Paper is intended to put forward options while a White Paper is a statement on Government Policy. The Minister outlined the content of the Green Paper during his November 19 speech.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 5, 1984 by the Honourable Leo E. Kolber regarding the government's policy with respect to the economy and interest rates.

In the economic outlook which was tabled with the Economic and Fiscal Statement of the Minister of Finance on November 8, 1984 short-term interest rates in Canada were projected to average 10.6 per cent in 1985 and to fall to an average level of 6.5 per cent between 1986 and 1990. As Finance Minister Wilson stated, the key assumption underlying the projected decline in Canadian interest rates is the U.S. interest rates will be lower in the medium-term as the United States administration and Congress take steps to reduce the U.S. budgetary deficit. Such action would allow greater scope for the Federal Reserve Board to lower interest rates as the pressures from government borrowing requirements on domestic credit markets subsided.

Though it is too early to tell how much progress will be made on deficit reduction in the United States in 1985, or how the Federal Reserve Board will react to such measures, it is likely that some steps will be taken by the current administration. Many private sector forecasters would accept that such conditions would lower interest rates in both the United States and in Canada. In Canada, the government has recognized that deficit reduction is the key to rebuilding confidence and has already taken steps, and will be announcing further measures, to minimize the borrowing needs of the government.

FINANCE

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "JOHN TURNER AS MINISTER OF FINANCE: AN ERA OF ECONOMIC DECLINE"

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 5 and December 12, 1984 by the Honourable Keith Davey regarding the document "John Turner as Minister of Finance: An Era of Economic Decline".

The document in question was prepared by P. C. Research. All three political parties are allocated funds by the Federal Government for private research. These funds are dispensed according to a formula based on the number of seats that the parties hold in the House of Commons.

These funds are advanced for research purposes without conditions as to what form that research takes.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES—UNIFORMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 6, 1984 by the Honourable Louis-J. Robichaud regarding uniforms in the Canadian Armed Forces.

The Minister of National Defence confirms the Government's intention to provide Armed Forces with distinctive uniforms for each of the 3 elements. The cost related to the acquisition of these distinctive uniforms is in the order of $36 million and will be spread over a number of years.

DEPARTMENTAL BUDGET—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question asked in the Senate on December 6, 1984 by the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen regarding government policy respecting the Department of National Defence's departmental budget.

The Minister of National Defence has stated on numerous occasions that what is referred to erroneously as "cuts" are really savings which have resulted essentially from lower inflation than anticipated. There are therefore no reductions in DND activities resulting from these savings.

The Government intends to fully meet NATO obligations, and to re-establish Canada's credibility with its allies. To this end, the government has already mentioned that additional military personnel will be based in Europe and that the total numbers of Armed Forces personnel will increase beyond what the previous government had planned for. It is the government's intention also to provide adequate resources and equipment for the Armed Forces to meet defence commitments.

As to the "multi-billion dollar program to improve ground facilities and remedy shortages of ammunition", approved by the fourteen Ministers of the NATO Defence Planning Committee, this is part of the cyclical process which occurs every six years and is intended to meet the future infrastructure requirements. Canada joined the consensus in approving this new "slice group." The Canadian financial obligations related to the NATO Infrastructure Program have been taken into account for the coming years within the defence envelope.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 6, 1984 by the Honourable John B. Stewart regarding government assistance for post-secondary education.

In 1983, the weekly loan limit for full-time Canada Student Loans was increased from $56.25 to $100.00 per week. In 1984, the limit was increased again, this time to $105.00 per week.

When you examine the current limit of $105 per week, it means that if a post-secondary student qualified for the maximum amount, based on an average 32-week academic year, he or she could receive, per year, up to a maximum of $3,360, in addition, to the assistance provided by provincial programs.

Considering the 1983-84 average Canada Student Loan award is in the neighbourhood of $2,300, it would indicate that the current maximum weekly loan limit of $105.00 should be adequate to assist needy students.

For the number of students who qualify for the maximum loan, the limit may have an effect, but the total difference would only be $160.00 per year, at most. Given the lower rate of inflation prevailing, there should be no significant consequences.

JUSTICE

QUEBEC—APPEAL OF SPEEDING CONVICTION—DECISION OF MINISTER

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 6, 1984 by the Honourable Royce Frith regarding Quebec and the appeal of a speeding conviction and the decision of the minister.

There should be no suggestion that the federal government has discontinued its financial support to Mr. MacDonald under the Court Challenges Program. Mr. MacDonald's application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada as well as the appeal itself are funded under this Program and the federal government is continuing to provide substantial financial support to him for his appeal.

The object of the Court Challenges Program is to permit important issues regarding language rights under the Constitution to be tested in the courts, regardless of whether or not the federal government happens to agree with the position put forward by a supported litigant.

Regarding the legal position taken by the federal government on the constitutional question raised in the MacDonald case, the Minister strongly believes that, having regard to the circumstances, in deference to the Supreme Court of Canada, it would be highly inappropriate to discuss in the Senate a case that is currently under consideration by the Court.

Finally, there has been no change in the federal position over the years on this legal issue. Under our Constitution the English and French languages have the same status in Quebec and Manitoba Courts. Thus, it is not surprising that the former government, in the Bilodeau case of 1981, felt obliged to take the very same position in the Manitoba Court of Appeal on the rights of a French-speaking Manitoban to receive a summons in French in Manitoba as we have taken in the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the rights of an English-speaking person to receive a summons in English in Quebec in the MacDonald case. In the Bilodeau case, this view of the law was adopted by all the judges of the Manitoba Court of Appeal. In the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Bilodeau did not raise this issue and restricted his argument to the question of whether unilingual Manitoba statutes were invalid.

GAS PRICING POLICY—PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 6, 1984 by the Honourable Earl A. Hastings regarding a proposed committee study of energy and gas pricing policy.

The Committee referred to by Senator Hastings is not a government committee, neither does it have a mandate to implement a gas pricing policy in Canada.

Rather, this is a private, informal consultative group, made up of representatives of the oil and gas industry who are offering their suggestions on a new natural gas pricing policy to the Minister. The Committee will receive no public funding nor will it have access to any confidential information.

In this sense, this committee is similar to other committees which advised Miss Carney when she was energy critic and which continue to do so today. In addition to this source of advice, the Minister meets regularly with her colleagues from both producing and consuming provinces, with industry representatives and others to develop a broad cross-section of opinion on energy issues.

In response to the question of whether COGLA has been instructed to cease negotiation of further exploration permits, that is not the case.

In fact, on December 20, Federal Energy Minister Pat Carney and her Nova Scotia counterpart, Joel Matheson, agreed to proceed with an immediate call for proposals on two parcels of land for oil and gas exploration off Nova Scotia, and with a call for nominations from the industry for future land issuance.

New lands issuance on Canada Lands is being done in a manner which will not result in an overrun on the amount budgeted for PIP expenditures for the current year.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SALE OF CF-104 AIRCRAFT TO TURKEY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 11, 1984 by the Honourable Philippe Deane Gigantès respecting the sale of CF-104 aircraft to Turkey.

It is necessary to point out that when discussing the acquisition by Turkey of the CF-104s, the term transfer and not sale should be used. In accordance with Canada's NATO obligations, the CF-104s based in Europe and which will be considered surplus to our requirements once the CF-18s become operational in that part of the world, were offered to other members of the Alliance in 1981. Soon after, the Turkish government approached the Canadian government with the view of acquiring these aircraft.

The possibility of transferring other CF-104s which are presently based in Canada to Greece is being reviewed as a result of a recent request by the Greek government.

THE ENVIRONMENT

PUBLIC ENVIRONMENT GROUP

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 11 and 12, 1984 by the Honourable Keith Davey regarding the Public Environment Group.

(The answer follows:)

The Minister of the Environment advises that her office is in the possession of no information regarding the Public Environment Group, and that none appears to be available.

INVESTMENT CANADA

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 12, 1984 by the Honourable Douglas D. Everett regarding Investment Canada, foreign investment and government policy.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: May I have that answer read.

Senator Roblin: I thought you might be interested in this answer. I apologize for not putting it at the top of the list. It will take me a moment to find the answer, so you will have to be patient.

This delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on December 12, 1984, and the answer is:

Although Bill C-15 generally exempts from review takeovers of small businesses whose assets are less than $5 million, there is significant exception. The minister responsible for the proposed Act may apply to the Governor in Council for authority to review the takeover of small businesses whose activities are those related to Canada's cultural heritage and national identity, and which have been prescribed in regulations. Examples might be the publication and/or distribution of books or films.

In practice, small businesses in Canada are quite capable of protecting themselves and of making their own decisions in their dealings with foreign investors. The choice of whether or not to sell out to non-Canadian investors is theirs to make. As the Prime Minister noted recently in New York, the Foreign Investment Review Act was "indicative of the misguided belief that regulation by politicians and bureaucrats was superior to the decisions of individuals and firms competing in the global marketplace."

In 1983, in the case of acquisitions of businesses under $5 million, 1.5 per cent were disallowed by FIRA. In 1984, the figure is 1.4 per cent.

Senator Everett: I thank the honourable senator for the answer, but I wonder if he can tell me what my question was.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend. That is the best question I have had in a long, long time. Isn't it a pity that I do not have an answer. He will have to look that up.

PUBLIC WORKS

UNITED STATES EMBASSY PROPERTY—POSSIBLE ACQUISITION BY GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer I have is to a question raised in the Senate on December 12, 1984 by the Honourable Frederick W. Rowe regarding the United States Embassy property and the possible acquisition of that property by the Government of Canada.

An exchange of this property for two acres of land on Cartier Square was negotiated with the government of the United States in 1979 and approved by Treasury Board on January 25, 1980 (T. B. Minute 769187).

Subsequently, an alternate location for the new embassy, on Sussex Drive, was negotiated with the government of the United States and Treasury Board approval obtained on July 16, 1981 (T. B. Minute 778055).

With the impending arrival of a new American ambassador the exchange was not completed at that time.

[Senator Everett.]

Negotiations have since resumed, the design for the new embassy has been submitted to and approved by the National Capital Commission Advisory Committee on design and funds for construction have been committed.

A final decision on the exchange is expected from U. S. officials in the near future.

JUSTICE

QUEBEC—APPEAL OF SPEEDING CONVICTION—DECISION OF MINISTER

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer I have is to a question raised in the Senate on December 13, 1984 by the Honourable Philippe Deane Gigantès regarding the government's opposition to official languages and linguistic rights.

The Federal Government strongly believes that the requirement of a bilingual summons would be the most desirable policy.

The Attorney General of Canada made it clear during the hearing of the MacDonald case that the concept of natural justice requires that an accused understand the charge and proceedings taken against him or her and that this is now reflected in the The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

THE DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT OF CANADA LIMITED AND CANADAIR LIMITED—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 13, 1984 by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz regarding government policy with respect to de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited and Canadair Limited.

The Government's objective is to sell these two companies to new private sector interests who will revitalize them and create new jobs and new technology in the Canadian aerospace industry.

In negotiations with prospective buyers, the issue of jobs and technology will be given full and proper consideration by Cabinet.

ENERGY

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS AGREEMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 13, 1984 by the Honourable Frederick W. Rowe regarding the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Agreement.

On December 12, Federal Energy Minister Pat Carney and her Newfoundland counterpart Bill Marshall reached agreement in principle on a 62 clause deal that will be approved some time in the new year. Nearly all substantive matters were agreed to and mostly technical points, which required input from other departments, remained to be settled.

Details of the agreement will not be released until the deal is formally signed. It can be said, however, that the draft agreement does not deviate significantly from the Atlantic Accord, reached between the Opposition Leader Brian Mulroney and Premier Brian Peckford last summer.

On the question of Premier Bill Davis' allegedly having been given advance details of the agreement, this is untrue. After the signing of the Atlantic Accord, Minister Carney, in her former role as Opposition Energy Critic, did phone Premier Davis along with representatives from other provinces.

Miss Carney makes it a point of speaking regularly with her provincial counterparts, apprising them of developments and seeking their input. Her conversation with Premier Davis was part of this consultative process.

In sum, then, we have a draft agreement which outlines:

- 1) The ultimate decision-making responsibility;
- 2) The role of self-sufficiency in determining the ultimate decision-making authority;
- 3) The legislative means by which to enact the agreement;
- 4) The nature and structure of the joint management agency; and,
- 5) The fundamental principles for establishing the royalty regime.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF COMMUNICATIONS—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 19, 1984 by the Honourable Jack Austin regarding the termination of employment of the Director General of Communications, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Miss Jamieson was not fired; she was redeployed. Matters concerning the employment of senior personnel fall under the purview of the Deputy Minister.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTS ON FEMALE EMPLOYEES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer I have is to a question raised in the Senate on December 20, 1984 by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding the effect of budgetary cuts on female employees.

The budget cuts have eliminated a total of 84 positions in the Canadian Wildlife Service. The number of persons affected is 73. The reduction of person/years in the Canadian Wildlife Service amounts to 21.8 per cent of the total number.

Of the 73 people declared surplus, there are 14 women, of whom 7 are biologists.

The proportion of positions affected, occupied by women: 19.2 per cent.

Within the framework of the budget cuts, it would be impossible to take specific measures to protect the number of positions occupied by women, since it is complete programs that have been cut.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that completes the list of delayed answers. In order to answer a question that I know is on the lips of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, I will say that there are eight answers to come.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, one of the comments that is often made in politics is, "Too little, too late," but I am bound to say in this case, "It's not too much; it's quite a lot; it's a bit late." However, someone has been very busy over the recess and I congratulate the Leader of the Government and his office on obtaining answers to those questions. The only senators who are in the chamber and who were referred to are Senators Graham, Marsden, Marchand, Robichaud, Stewart, Gigantès, Haidasz and myself.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): And Senator Everett.

Senator Frith: But his answer was read.

Speaking for myself, I shall be happy to read the answers and to have the opportunity to ask further questions on them. Senators Graham and Marsden have now left. Senators Marchand, Robichaud, Haidasz, Stewart and Gigantès are satisfied to have the answers incorporated in the record.

Senator Roblin: I find it odd that my honourable friend should find it necessary to call the roll. These ladies and gentlemen are here and they can speak for themselves, as Senator Everett in fact did. If they want an answer read they will ask me. They do not need any prompting from my honourable friend.

Senator Frith: The best method would be for the Leader of the Government to pause after mentioning the question and turn to the senator involved to see if he or she wants the answer read. That is the only reason I did it. I quite agree that the best way, and the way I think we have always done it, is simply to turn to see if the senator is present. If not, it is taken as read. If the senator is present and says that he or she would like to have the answer read, then it can be read. The only reason I said what I said is because my friend had so much material and ran through it in a rather machine-gun-like manner.

Senator Roblin: Of course, I thank my honourable friend for his instructions. They are always welcome.

Senator Frith: It is just friendly advice, not instructions.

Senator Roblin: I have to say that Senator Everett found no difficulty in intervening when he felt he wished to.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would be equally diligent in soliciting an answer to a question seeking important information that I put on the order paper on November 15, the answer to which a number of senators are expecting and awaiting.

Senator Roblin: Yes.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, as a follow-up to the question asked by Senator Bosa, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he would consider going back to 1981 and 1982 to get answers to questions that were placed on the order paper and remain unanswered.

Senator Bosa: We were put out of office because you said we were not as diligent as you are. You are not supposed to do what we were doing.

Senator Roblin: That is what I like to hear.

THE SENATE

RECEPTION FOR NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before calling on Senator Yuzyk, I am pleased to invite all honourable senators to a reception in the Speaker's Chambers in honour of the three new senators, when the Senate rises.

UKRAINE

SIXTY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, today, January 22, marks the sixty-seventh anniversary of the proclamation of the independence and freedom of Ukraine, a beautiful and bountiful country, larger than France, with a population of 50 million, 75 per cent of whom are Ukrainian. This great event is celebrated by some 700,000 Canadians of Ukrainian origin across Canada and by approximately 3 million Ukrainians in various parts of the world, who live in democratic countries. A knowledge of the struggle of the Ukrainian people for their freedom would give Canadians a better appreciation of their achievement of freedom and independence.

[Senator Frith.]

Canada, which originally was an integral part of the British Empire, did not choose the revolutionary course of the United States to achieve freedom and independence. Instead, she chose the evolutionary course, coming into being on July 1, 1867, by means of the British North America Act, passed by the British Parliament in London, which, however, had been voluntarily drawn up by the delegates of several colonies. This act recognized representative and responsible government, based on democratic freedom for the citizens. Subsequently, at the end of World War I, Canada gained complete control over all external relations. It was by the Statute of Westminster, passed in London in 1931, that Canada achieved sovereignty, full control over all her affairs. The apron strings still tying it to the British Parliament were finally cut in 1982, when Queen Elizabeth II signed the new Canadian Constitution which was passed by the Canadian Parliament in 1981, providing a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and an amending formula for the revision of the Constitution.

Thus Canada has evolved constitutionally from colonial status to independence and sovereignty and from an unknown entity to a leader among the middle nations of the world. Today, she is a free state and a voluntary member of the Commonwealth, NATO and the United Nations.

Canada was able to gain her freedom, gradual independence and sovereignty because she had been part of an oceanic empire. Britain was far away. Although the mother country exploited her colonies economically, she brought to them the civilization, culture and democratic forms of government as these were developing in the British Isles. When these colonies matured they won control over their own affairs and proclaimed independence, mostly without bloodshed and with the approval of Britain. This was the case with Canada, who even assisted other British colonies to attain their freedom and independence and who often speaks out in world forums for the recognition of human and national rights of the nations of the world.

Ukraine's situation was entirely different. She had the misfortune of becoming part of a land or continental empire. Tsarist Russia, unlike Britain which gradually developed a democratic constitution, was an autocracy with a totalitarian type of political system, employing terror as an instrument of policy to carry out the economic exploitation of subjugated peoples and their national territories. Ukraine, with her higher culture, civilization, a democratic government and vast agricultural and mineral resources, fell victim during the Cossack era in the seventeenth century to a backward, tyrannical and ruthless Muscovite Russia. Under Russian tsarist domination Ukraine's democratic freedom was crushed and she became a mere Russian province, deprived of her rights and even her name. Ukrainians were forcibly subjected to Russification, and the Ukrainian language was forbidden by the decrees (ukazy) of 1863 and 1876.

The soul of the Ukrainian nation, however, could not be destroyed. From the exploited mass of peasants there emerged a great spiritual leader, the greatest poet of Ukraine—the immortal Taras Shevchenko. He advocated the dignity of the human being, freedom, truth, equality, justice, the brotherhood of man, the freedom of the Ukrainian people and the restoration of the Ukrainian state. His poetry spread like a prairie fire and was memorized by the Ukrainians. The spirit of Ukraine was thus revived, and the people responded at the appropriate time.

When the tsarist empire came crumbling down under its own over-burdensome weight of tyranny, despotism, bureaucracy and inefficiency, the Ukrainians were the first to break out of the "prison of nations." Ukraine, true to her democratic traditions, followed the course of self-determination. At first, the Central Rada, the Ukrainian Parliament, in Kiev, the capital, in September 1917 demanded a reconstruction of the empire into a free federation of autonomous republics. The so-called democratic Russian Provisional Government of Kerensky outrightly rejected this demand and upheld an indivisible, monolithic Russia. When the Bolsheviks seized power under Lenin, they reluctantly recognized the Ukrainian National Republic in December 1917 and declared:

"Everything that touches national rights and the national independence of the Ukrainian people, we, the Soviet of the People's Commissars, accept clearly without limitations and unreservedly."

This evidently was duplicity, for when the Bolsheviks failed to take control of the Ukrainian Parliament, they set up what they called a "Ukrainian government" in Kharkiv and called upon the Russian Red Army to help conquer Ukraine.

● (1540)

It was under these difficult circumstances that the Ukrainian Parliament, in the name of the people, proclaimed the Fourth Universal Proclamation in Kiev on January 22, 1918. This act established an independent national democratic republic of the Ukrainian nation. A year later on January 22, 1919, the Ukrainian Parliament proclaimed the union of all Ukrainian territories, as some sections had previously been under Austria-Hungary and other countries. Thus was established a united Ukrainian National Republic, which in reality restored the Ukrainian State of the Cossacks and the original state Rus-Ukraine of Prince Volodimir the Great in medieval times.

The Ukrainian National Republic was a modern state, modelled upon those of the western world. It recognized the highest principles of democracy—freedom of speech, press, religion, assembly, association and personal freedom. All minorities, including the Jews, were granted "national-personal" autonomy and representation in the government. The Ukrainian National Republic was the very antithesis of totalitarianism, despotism, colonialism and imperialism, and, therefore, has much in common with Canada.

The National Liberation Revolution, which first began in Ukraine, spread rapidly throughout the Russian empire to the nations imprisoned by the Russian tsarist regime. One after the other, the non-Russian peoples proclaimed their independent states in the following order: Idel Ural (Tatar), November 12, 1917; Finland, December 6, 1917; Ukraine, January 22, 1918; Kuban Cossacks, February 16; Lithuania, February 16; Estonia, February 24; Byelorussia, March 25; Don Cossacks, May 5; North Caucasus, May 11; Georgia, May 26; Azerbaijan, May 29; Armenia, May 30; Poland, November 11; Latvia, November 18; Far Eastern Democratic Republic of Siberia, April 4, 1920; and Turkestan, April 15, 1922.

This was a democratic, anti-imperio-colonial manifestation. Gradually, however, the Russian communist regime subverted and conquered by force most of these independent states, except the Baltic nations, for two decades, and compelled them to join the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1922. The former Russian tsarist empire was thus transformed by conquest into a totalitarian Russian communist empire, more despotic and reactionary than the previous one, in spite of paying lip-service to democracy and adopting a constitution that is meaningless in its application. In reality, the Soviet constitution, as a guarantor of democracy, is a farce; it is a guarantor of the power of the Russian Communist Party.

The Ukrainian state and the other non-Russian states should normally have received the recognition of the western allies, who unfortunately applied the Wilsonian principle of self-determination of nations only to central Europe, that is, Germany, Austria and Turkey. This principle was not applied to the Russian Empire, except in the case of Poland. The communist régime continued the policy of an indivisible monolithic Russia under the name of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and crushed by force the many independent states that emerged after the fall of tsardom.

By failing to support the new national states, the western powers allowed communism to win in the Russian Empire, and the principles of Russian imperialism, colonialism and totalitarianism to continue on a larger scale. Thus, the U.S.S.R. emerged as the largest colonial power in the world and the greatest threat to western life, democracy and freedom. Today we are facing the grim consequences: constant warfare of the Cold War and the "peaceful co-existence and détente" of the Helsinki Agreement which leaves no illusions regarding Soviet Russian hegemony behind the Iron Curtain, disarmament and the realization of peace on this planet.

The Ukrainians, under the domination of the Soviet Russian régime, have been paying a tragic price in defence of their freedom. On the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the concealed black famine of 1933 in Ukraine, Mr. Brian Mulroney, Leader of the Opposition, made the following statements to a large audience of over 10,000 people, who were gathered at the Maple Leaf Gardens in Toronto on December 4, 1983, sponsored by the World Congress of Free Ukrainians:

We mourn for the dead; we grieve for the suppression of human dignity and human life; we lament for the insensitive and deliberate acts of cruelty and slow torture and death of 7 to 10 million bodies . . . The Famine that swept Ukraine in 1933 was man-made, orchestrated and directed from Moscow, and enforced by a regime dedicated to creating a new Soviet order.

We rejoice that everywhere inside Ukraine and in the hearts of Ukrainians living around the world, the dominance of the human spirit has prevailed, that freedom lives on and that liberty . . . remains an ongoing ideal for Ukrainians.

In this respect, the Ukrainians have much in common with the Jews. In a joint press release, dated Toronto, July 4, 1983, signed by Mr. Milton Harris, president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, and Mr. John J. Nowosad, president of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee, and undersigned by Senator David Croll and myself, the following statement is significant:

Canadians of Ukrainian and Jewish origin, whose roots go back to similar areas in Europe, are very much aware of each other's losses in the past generation—the murder of six million Jews, solely because they were Jewish, by the Nazis, the denial of religious, cultural and national rights to both Soviet Jews and Ukrainians and to all other minorities in the Soviet Union, in addition to at least six million victims in Ukraine of the forced famine of the early 1930s, whose 50th anniversary is being commemorated this year.

Acknowledging each other's historical losses, we shall continue to work together towards mutual understanding between Canadians of all origins . . .

The acts of January 22, 1918 and January 22, 1919 marked the victory of principles now written in the charter of the United Nations, of which Canada is a signatory. Free Ukrainians and the free people of all the subjugated nations of the Soviet Russian empire and its satellites will continue to celebrate their independence days and impress upon the western world that freedom is indivisible. The principles of the United Nations must be applied by all the other members of the UN to the Soviet Union, which is a member, that self-determination, human rights, freedom, sovereignty and integrity of national territory must also be granted to the non-Russian captive and satellite nations.

The Canadian government, Parliament, legislators, leaders and people in general must constantly reassert their faith in the principles of democracy, human rights, justice, freedom and independence, without which there can be no lasting peace. At the same time, we should proclaim sympathy and readiness to give feasible aid to all those nations who are still struggling for the realization of these, the highest principles of humanity. The blue-yellow flag of free Ukraine is today flying over the City Hall of Ottawa, Canada's capital. Mayor Marion Dewar has issued and read a proclamation with salutations to the Ukrainians. This recognition of the justness of the Ukrainian struggle for freedom and democracy serves to make Ukrainian Canadians proud to be citizens of our great country, Canada.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to compliment my colleague from Manitoba, Senator Yuzyk, on having brought to our attention this most important date for the Ukrainian people. The date, however, is important to all those who believe in freedom and democracy, and the outline given so ably by Senator Yuzyk of the long struggle of the people of the Ukraine is a signal to all of us that we must be ever vigilant. Senator Yuzyk is particularly well qualified to give that historical background, namely the development of freedom in the Ukraine, and I would not for one moment attempt to trespass on that territory. I am fortunate, however, as are many of my colleagues, in being aware of the tremendous contribution that the Ukrainian people have made to the development of Canada. Starting with those first two settlers in 1896, the Ukrainian people who came to Canada—mainly seeking, like most of us in western Canada, a new opportunity and free land—have made major contributions to every aspect of Canadian life.

While it is true that the largest number of Ukrainian people are in the province of Ontario, it is in western Canada that we have seen the Ukrainian community flourish, and whether it has been in the cultural, economic, professional or political life, those original settlers, starting with that small group, have made an immense contribution. Apart from the English and the French, at the present time the Ukrainian people in Canada represent the third largest ethnic community, and they lead a rich cultural life. My own province of Manitoba is probably a leader in this regard because that province contains the largest percentage of Ukrainians in comparison with our total population. We, as Manitobans, are proud that Canada's national Ukrainian festival is held in our province. Next summer will be the twentieth anniversary of the festival, held annually in the town of Dauphin. Last summer Her Majesty the Queen distinguished the festival with her presence. I know that I speak for all of my colleagues on this side of the house in commending Senator Yuzyk for bringing this important date to our attention, as a reminder to all of us that we must be ever watchful to maintain our freedom, and we must compliment the Ukrainian people in Canada on their participation in that regard.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

EXCISE TAX ACT EXCISE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of the Bill C-17, intituled: "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act".—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would ask that this order stand until tomorrow in the name of the Honourable Senator Murray.

Order stands.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT PUBLIC LANDS GRANTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Walker P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, for the second reading of the Bill C-13, intituled: "An Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act".—(Honourable Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour)).

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I join with my colleagues in welcoming the new senators. I would underline in a special way the arrival of my colleague, Senator Brenda Robertson. It is no mean feat that she has survived and stayed on top of a short list, which I suspect is the longest short list in the history of any human institution. Therefore we welcome her and we look forward to her being a strength among the New Brunswick delegation in this institution.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator LeBlanc: I regret that Senator MacDonald had to leave, because I have a couple of nice things to say about him. I see him joining the media contingent in this institution, which I suspect is becoming an ever increasing group. In fact, I can see three former journalists sitting across from me. On my immediate right is a distinguished former journalist and there are many others in this house. So if we cannot get the press gallery to cover us, we can at least get them to attend our meetings by joining us.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Senator LeBlanc: Honourable senators, in May 1982, the then Minister of Public Works, the Honourable Paul Cosgrove, introduced in the House of Commons a bill to amend and update the Public Works Act. The Speaker of the House of Commons, Madame Sauvé, considered this bill as being inadequate to allow certain activities of the Department of Public Works.

[English]

As my distinguished colleague, Senator Walker, stated in this chamber before the Christmas recess, Bill C-13 is a housekeeping bill. I would be in an awkward position to oppose today what I supported a year ago. I do not have the habit of some opposition parties of changing points of view when they change from one side of the house to the other. In fact, having read the debate that took place in the other house, I now understand why there were few government speakers when the bill received approval in the Commons before Christmas.

I should like to say a few words about the Department of Public Works in general. I am told that the law of relevancy in this institution is quite elastic, and I will try to be as brief as possible.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It is tighter than in the House of Commons, but still elastic.

Senator LeBlanc: In fact, the Department of Public Works is asking for more authority and more flexibility in its operations, and, of course, on behalf of our side I would support their request. But the Department of Public Works is a distinguished institution. It is an historic department and one has only to visit the departmental office to be impressed with the sense of history that is provided by a wall of photographs at the entrance. Some of the names are familiar to us. They include the Honourable Bob Winters, the Honourable Howard Green, the Honourable David Walker, the Honourable George McIlraith, the Honourable Paul Deschatelets, the Honourable Maurice Bourget and the Honourable Bud Drury. Modesty compels me to say that the more recent title holders were of more humble stature, perhaps in keeping with the somewhat amputated functions of the Department of Public Works, which, over the years, has seen other departments and agencies assume some of its historical roles. Yet the history of the building of Canada represents the history of the Department of Public Works, with its daring engineers and architects, whose proud record still stands in the existence of many beautiful buildings.

Each member of the Senate and the House of Commons has a Public Works problem. In fact, some of us are meeting this week to try to advance a public works problem in the Victoria Building.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator LeBlanc: Many communities have public works involvement, be it an old post office building coveted by a community organization, a basement used for sea cadet training, or a prison water system that is integrated to a community aqueduct. During my short term as minister, I was amazed by the variety of requests from all corners of the house and of the country. I happen to have a naive view of government, that we are elected first to serve the people and not those who make the rules at Treasury Board, that we are elected to help communities.

● (1600)

It was sometimes difficult to resist the requests of those who saw the presence of government as a positive contribution to their community. Cities like Saint John, Halifax, Moncton, Quebec, Winnipeg and Vancouver wanted a say in the location and the appearance of a Public Works building. Small towns especially can be very badly disfigured if a major Public Works building, probably the only one, stands out like a sore thumb. In fact, I overruled some of my officials by saying that where a city has only one public building we have a duty to try and make it a challenge of good taste. So to me Public Works was also public sensitivity. Sometimes it was slightly more expensive to renovate and beautify rather than to put up another pre-cast concrete edifice.

I found immediate and enthusiastic response to my suggestion that the Government of Canada should walk on tiptoes when it proposes to build or to restore buildings in Canadian cities. I suggest that the most cost-effective choice is not always the one that respects the desire of the community. There is a cost to uncontrolled speculative development. If you doubt this, take a walk for some 15 or 20 minutes down the hill and talk to some of the National Capital Commission staff who have not become completely traumatized by some of the Treasury Board dictates. I hope some day we will have a chance to discuss the National Capital Commission and its role in the capital of this country.

Reading the debate which took place in the other place I was left saddened on one score, and reading some of the press comments which followed the shift of senior officials from different portfolios increased my sense of malaise. In the debate of September 17, 1984—and I am told that I am not allowed to quote from what is said in the other place—some NDP members attacked a Deputy Minister of Public Works at a time and in a place where he could not defend himself. I would like to be on record—and I am sure those who know him will support me—in saying that John McKay was and is a devoted, loyal and competent public servant. No minister was better supported than I was by him. The basic unfairness is that officials of Public Works, including the deputy minister, have thrust upon them impossible and contradictory demands. At one point in the discussion on space requirements in the National Capital Region I discovered that some 20 possible combinations were on the table. Cabinet and beauracrats have always begrudged—and I suspect that this applies to all parties—the authority of Public Works to decide who should go where. The ballet of the Ottawa prima donnas, the uncertainty of legislative timetables—for example when will a building be ready for the Security Service when the legislation is still before Parliament—the uncertainty of decentralization decisions, the removal of asbestos, consolidation, government shrinkage or expansion; all these needs for more or less space fall upon officials and the minister who are supposed to guess accurately the space requirements, the swing space and, of course, to adjust with some mysterious radar to the unknown decisions of Parliament, of cabinet and of senior bureaucrats.

In the real world, which is not always responsive to Treasury Board regulations, space optimization, rug ranking and the absolutist rules of chartered accountants, including the Auditor General, the juggling act which I have described goes on. I am not surprised that sometimes there are mistakes and sometimes there are errors. Journalists, and I happen to be one of them, should try to understand when they write stories about these issues, the inherent difficulties of running a full occupancy bus system with no knowledge of the number, size and fantasies of the passengers, or they should try to make up a timetable without the knowledge of the miles involved and the number of stops to be made.

Honourable senators, I support the substance of this bill because it gives more flexibility to those who are trying to serve their clients which are the people of Canada. This Department of Public Works under the difficult conditions which prevail has done a good job for successive governments. I for one look forward to seeing my picture put up on one of the walls.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

[Senator LeBlanc.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill C-21, to amend the Currency Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill may set a record in terms of brevity. It adds about two lines to the Currency Act which permit the Royal Canadian Mint to produce a $20 silver coin. It would be the first time that a coin in this denomination has been minted. The purpose behind the minting of the coin is to produce a series which will be known as Olympic Coins.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Can I have the first one?

Senator Nurgitz: For $20 you can. There will be ten issues of the $20 silver coin. I would also point out that a 22 carat $100 gold coin will eventually be minted in 1987, but that is not the concern of this bill.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is this your new business?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes. According to the marketing plan of the mint the ten issues of the $20 coin will feature ten of the better known Olympic events. The mint assures me that the idea behind the program is based on the results of extensive research conducted not only in this country but also in the United States, Europe and the Far East where more than 15,000 people have been surveyed. The results of this survey would indicate that interest would be high and there is every reason to believe that the marketing program would be a success.

I suppose the currency part is of less interest than the question of the games. I see sitting in the chamber the Honourable Senator Perrault who, in another life, was the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport and, perhaps, one of the early fathers of the Calgary Winter Olympics. There are many in the chamber who would have an interest in these various games and the financing of them. I am thinking in particular of the Leader of the Opposition who was Minister of National Health and Welfare when Fitness and Amateur Sport was within his jurisdiction. I see him walking into the chamber with my leader, Senator Roblin who had much to do with the 1966 Pan-American Games in Winnipeg and, if my recollection is correct, Senator MacEachen represented the Prime Minister of Canada at those games. Introduced today in the Senate was Senator Finlay MacDonald who was the Chairman of the First Canadian Summer Games in Halifax. Senator Buckwold was the Mayor of Saskatoon, I believe, during the 1971 Canadian Winter Games. I think I have now pretty well covered the waterfront for sport.

You will recall, honourable senators, that when the Winter Olympics were awarded to the City of Calgary and the costs were disclosed to be in the neighbourhood of $400 million, the government of the day indicated that it would contribute some $200 million. It was certainly the understanding in the former administration—and is so in the current administration—that the $200 million contribution of the federal government would be from non-tax sources. To this end, we are here today talking about the sale of coins. There will also be the sale of stamps and the sale of such things as television rights. Those engaged in the marketing study project a profit of anywhere from roughly $30 million to $50 million and, in fact, if every coin that was minted were sold, the actual contribution that could be made to the Calgary Olympics would be in the vicinity of $52 million.

It is the hope to attract as buyers not only the traditional coin collector but also those who have, over the years, been collectors of Olympic Coins and those who, maybe, have a sports interest. The marketing program extends over two to three years and it is thereby hoped that this would catch every conceivable kind of buyer from those who buy birthday gifts to those who buy for various gift-giving occasions.

I should mention that the theme being advanced on these coins will, of course, be winter sports in Canada. In the past, the same winter sport designs have appeared on other Olympic Coins and it is therefore planned that this new issue of ten coins will be of new designs, and it is believed that if there is originality and interesting designs, combined with the craftsmanship and the metal content, which of course is silver, this kind of sales program could be successful.

It may be of interest to senators that the ten selected sports are hockey, curling, ice skating, downhill skiing, acrobatic skiing, cross-country skiing, ski jumping, speed skating, snowshoeing and tobogganing. It should be remembered that both acrobatic skiing and curling, I believe, are demonstration sports in this Olympics. The gold coin will have a general winter Olympic theme.

The question of urgency on this particular bill is that the mint requires as much lead time as possible, not only for the purchase of the vast quantity of silver necessary but also for the completion of design and marketing strategies that must be put in place. Of even more relevancy is the fact that, in 1988, Korea will be the host of the Summer Olympic Games and that country will also be producing a coin. As I understand it, the name of the game is to be in the market first with the coin.

Very briefly, these various $20 silver coins will be offered twice in 1985, four times in 1986 and four times in 1987, with the gold coin appearing at the end of 1987. Honourable senators, that is my very brief and, I believe, pertinent presentation with respect to this amendment to the Currency Act and, as all honourable senators know from having read their copy of Hansard, this Bill C-21 passed without opposition and with the agreement of all three parties in the House of Commons.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Hastings, debate adjourned.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85 (No. 2)

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-11, to provide borrowing authority.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today on behalf of the government to present Bill C-11, a bill to provide borrowing authority. At the outset, I should say that I was tempted to unearth one of Senator Frith's speeches from last year to use as a model.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You could do worse than that.

Senator Doody: That is right. He covered it very quickly and succinctly and never failed to remind us that this was not a borrowing; it was simply permission to borrow and that we should not get the two confused. This bill will not cost the government a red cent; it will not cost the taxpayers a copper. All we are simply doing here, as Senator Frith kept reminding us, is asking for authority to borrow. Whether the government actually uses that authority, of course, remains to be seen.

Senator Frith: Let us not go back into history. I suppose it is possible that I was wrong.

Senator Doody: It never entered my mind. It must be the 211 seats.

In any event, honourable senators, the government obtains new borrowing powers every year. Since Parliament has examined quite a number of borrowing bills in the past, I do not think it necessary to go into a great deal of detail. I would point out that I am not selling any coins.

Honourable senators will note that in order for the government to continue with its regular debt program to meet its financial requirements, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament. Specifically, Part IV, Section 36 of the Financial Administration Act states that: "No money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament." That, however, does not exclude Letters of Comfort. This refers to new money only because, pursuant to Section 38 of that act, the government has continuing authority to raise funds to repay maturing debt, commonly known as the rollover.

As honourable senators will recall, the previous government's estimate of financial requirements for the 1984-85 fiscal year was $25.5 billion and Parliament granted borrowing authority for $24.6 billion, an amount slightly less than the financial requirements. However, as the Minister of Finance pointed out in his economic and fiscal statement, our government's inherited financial requirements for the present fiscal year have increased to $29.9 billion. Moreover, the financial requirements for 1985-86—the coming year—are now projected to be $29.2 billion; an increase of almost $6 billion from last February's estimate.

In light of our inherited increase in financial requirements for fiscal 1984-85, Part I, Clause 2(1) seeks additional borrowing authority for the remainder of this fiscal year of $7.3 billion. Of this total, $5.3 billion represents the difference between the revised cash requirements of $29.9 billion for fiscal 1984-85 and the $24.6 billion of authority already granted. The remaining $2 billion represents a reserve. I notice that the verbiage has changed. Last year it was called a contingency; this year it has been called a reserve. This may be a symbol of the new régime.

Clause 2(2) states that all borrowing authority conferred by the above section that remains unused to the extent that the unused portion exceeds $2 billion shall expire on March 31, 1985. The purpose of this clause is to enable the government to carry forward into 1985-86 an amount not exceeding the $2 billion reserve.

This reserve is intended to cover contingencies only. It does not permit spending beyond what has been approved by Parliament or has been given ongoing authority by acts of Parliament. The reserve amount is designed to accommodate the possible impact of the large unpredictable changes in financial requirements caused, for example, by foreign exchange operations designed to maintain an orderly market in the Canadian dollar. When the Canadian dollar is under upward pressure, Canadian dollars are sold into the market and the Exchange Fund Account accumulates U.S. dollars. In order to finance this increase in official reserves, Canadian dollars must either be taken from cash balances or borrowed and charged against the borrowing authority. On the other hand, when the Canadian dollar is weak, U.S. dollar reserves fall and must be supplemented by drawing on the two standby credit facilities the government has with both the Canadian and international banks, or by other types of foreign borrowings. Any of these borrowings must be charged against borrowing authority. Insufficient borrowing authority could potentially constrain the government's ability to maintain an orderly exchange market for the Canadian dollar. That deals with Part I of the bill, the borrowing requirement for the remainder of this fiscal year.

In Part II of the bill, clause 4(1) requests borrowing authority of $12 billion for fiscal 1985-86. Honourable senators may be aware that the original bill, as introduced in the House of Commons, sought $16 billion of borrowing authority for 1985-86. However, the government, being a very reasonable one, agreed to amend this clause so as to provide $12 billion of borrowing authority for fiscal 1985-86. This amount should be sufficient to cover the government's expected financial requirements through to the end of June. I have no doubt that later this year we will be looking for more borrowing authority. The Minister of Finance will introduce further borrowing authority legislation following his up-coming budget to seek the balance of the borrowing authority for the full 1985-86 fiscal year. As many honourable senators know, the government's financial requirements are unequally distributed throughout the fiscal year. They are very heavy in the first part of a fiscal year mainly because of the large number of income tax refunds issued at that time of year. Thus, we expect the $12 billion to be used up fairly quickly.

Clause 4(2) states that all borrowing authority conferred by clause 4(1) which remains unused by the end of the 1985-86 fiscal year shall expire on March 31, 1986.

Finally, clause 5 states that Part II of the bill shall come into force on April 1, 1985, the date on which the next fiscal year begins.

Honourable senators, I should like to outline how the government has utilized the borrowing authority already granted by Parliament for the current fiscal year. As you are aware, the total amount of authority provided for 1984-85 was $24.6 billion. To the middle of January domestic borrowing operations used about $23.4 billion of borrowing authority; $8.2 billion through the issue of treasury bills; $10.4 billion through the sale of marketable bonds; and net sales of Canada Savings Bonds in the amount of $4.8 billion. I would like to advise honourable senators that the sale of marketable bonds includes the government's recent bond issue which was sold on January 15 and which will be delivered after February 1. Foreign borrowing has added a further $470 million net to the use of borrowing authority. As a result of these domestic and foreign financing operations, the total use of borrowing authority to date in this fiscal year has been $23.9 billion, leaving only $700 million of unused borrowing authority remaining.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): There was a time when you would not have used the word "only" to describe that.

Senator Doody: It is amazing how the perspective changes when one changes position in this chamber. I can remember a time when I would have fallen off my seat in Newfoundland even mentioning one of those figures.

As honourable senators are aware, the government has an ongoing debt program and the amount remaining will be used up very quickly. In order to achieve the government's goal of minimizing public debt charges, it is imperative that a regular debt program be carried out. Thus, honourable senators, I ask for your support of this bill on second reading, and I would suggest that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

CHRISTMAS

BUREAUCRATIC AND POLITICAL COMMENTS—INQUIRY WITHDRAWN

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, December 11, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to certain bureaucratic and political comments concerning Christmas.

He said: Honourable senators, in order to save the time of honourable senators I mailed that small Christmas story to them with my best wishes, and I see no reason for reciting it now.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GIFT OF WAR PLANES TO TURKEY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, December 18, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the question of the gift of Canadian war-planes to Turkey.

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to bring to your attention certain facts concerning the gift of 20 war-planes by Canada to Turkey.

On December 12, 1984, the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Clark, said in the other place: "We would not be entering into those kinds of arrangements if we thought they would cause a heightening of tension or making the situation more dangerous." Moreover, the Department of External Affairs has stated that in Ankara, the capital of Turkey, the Minister of Defence, Mr. Robert Coates, said with regard to these war-planes: "The matter is still under study. Canada intends to assist in every way possible to strengthen NATO's Southern flank. The Greek option is therefore not closed, but we are nonetheless aware that Turkey wants the transfer of the entire fleet."

I do not doubt for one moment the good faith of Mr. Clark and Mr. Coates when the first says we do not want to heighten tension in the Aegean and the other says that Canada intends to assist in every way possible to strengthen NATO's southern flank.

But distant situations are not easily understood and, I submit, that with all the goodwill in the world, the Government of Canada will, inadvertently, heighten tensions in the Aegean and weaken NATO's southern flank if those 20 planes are given to Turkey. Greece is right to feel alarmed. Its fears of a possible Turkish attack against Greek islands are not fanciful. They are based on Turkish acts and on threatening statements by Turkish personalities. Let me give you a few examples.

The islands of the Aegean "constitute a part of Anatolia—of Turkey in other words—and for centuries have belonged to the state which was sovereign over Anatolia," said Mr. Demirel in June 1974. He had served as Prime Minister of Turkey, and at the time he spoke he was Leader of the Opposition.

• (1630)

On January 18, 1975, Mr. Irmak, then Prime Minister of Turkey, said: "Half the Aegean belongs to us."

We all know that the press in Turkey is controlled by the state. Therefore, Greece could not fail to be alarmed when it heard Mr. Pelek, President of the Turkish Union of Journalists, say in February 1982:

The Islands of Lemnos and Lesvos which are at a distance of a few miles from Anatolia, which were for centuries capital cities of Turkish provinces, are lands necessary to us not only as part of the heritage of the Ottoman State but for our security as well. We want these islands which are owned by the Greeks unjustly.

On January 18, 1975, Mr. Sadi Irmak, then Turkey's Prime Minister, said: "The Aegean belongs to us. This is something that must be understood by all."

The Turkish foreign minister at the time, Mr. Melih Esenbel, said, "Cyprus is the first step towards Aegean." He was referring, of course, to the invasion of Cyprus by Turkish forces in 1974. Since then, Turkey has stationed 150,000 troops along her western shore, facing the Greek island. Among other NATO equipment this Turkish army has are 150 landing craft.

In view of what happened in Cyprus, can the Greeks safely assume that Turkey is not planning to attack the Greek islands or the Aegean? These islands were declared to be Greek by the Treaty of Lausanne signed on July 24, 1923. Turkey was one of the signatories. This treaty followed the Greco-Turkish war in which Turkey was victorious. Therefore, the conditions of the treaty were not and could not have been imposed by Greece on Turkey.

What has changed since then? Why are they disputing the terms of that treaty which they accepted in 1923? Mr. Esenbel said, in 1975, when he was foreign minister:

In the Aegean, we must necessarily follow a dynamic policy. Conditions today are different from those of 1923. Turkey has grown in strength.

And, indeed, Turkey has grown in strength and population. There are 45 million Turks against only nine million Greeks. By and large, Turkey has between two and three times more planes, more tanks, and more warships than has Greece. It is, therefore, highly unlikely that any Greek leader would think of attacking Turkey. Yet, in 1978, Turkish defence minister, Hasan Isik, said:

The entire nation depends on Greek pressure which is trying to strangle the country, encircling Turkey from the west and preventing access to the Mediterranean Sea . . . The Turkish nation must unite, face the problem of the Aegean and of Greek pressure which will encircle western Turkey with the aim of strangling it.

One cannot help thinking of Lafontaine's fable in which a wolf accuses a lamb of polluting the stream from which both drank. At the end of the fable, the wolf, of course, eats the lamb.

The official Greek position is that the Aegean does not belong to Greece or anybody else. It is an international waterway. Greek islands in the Aegean are surrounded by territorial waters that extend six miles from the shore, no more. Ships of all nations pass through these territorial waters as they pass through international waters in the Aegean, without any interference from the Greeks.

Inevitably, as with any body of water between two nations, there can be two differing interpretations of who owns which part of the continental shelf. Greece has repeatedly offered to let this issue be decided by the World Court. Turkey refuses.

In the matter of who controls air traffic over the Aegean, the International Civil Aviation Organization decided in 1952 and in 1958 that the Aegean is subject to air traffic control from Athens. Turkey was present when this decision was taken and accepted it. Now Turkey rejects it.

It is understandable, under the circumstances, that Greece should feel nervous about Turkey's intentions in the Aegean. Turkey already enjoys military superiority. Adding to this military superiority is likely to make Turkey less restrained, the Greeks fear.

This increase of tensions is contrary to the objectives of the Right Honourable Mr. Clark not to heighten tensions in the Aegean or make it more dangerous. Giving these planes to Turkey will also go counter to the laudable objective of our Minister of Defence to strengthen NATO's southern flank.

If Greek islands were invaded by Turkish forces—and I have read some of the threats which at no time have been repudiated by any official of Turkey—there would be war between two NATO partners. The southern flank of NATO would crumble, and an opportunity would be given to communist countries to attempt some interference in the dispute. If Turkish troops cross the Greek border in Thrace, there is no guarantee that Bulgarian troops would not intervene, possibly with Soviet support. It would be an excellent opportunity for communist mischief.

Such scenarios may seem farfetched to some honourable senators, but in early 1974 many NATO leaders scoffed at the idea that Turkey would possibly invade Cyprus, using NATO weapons. Yet, that is precisely what happened in the summer of 1974.

I would strongly urge the Canadian government not to go through with this gift of war-planes to Turkey. I recognize that this gift might be a sweetener so that Turkey will buy a nuclear reactor from us rather than from another country. Such international deals often require sweeteners. But I should like to submit, in all humility, that, at this time, our choice of sweetener is the wrong one.

Again, let me repeat that I have no doubt at all about the good intentions of the Canadian government, of our Secretary of State for External Affairs and of our Minister of Defence, but the situation in the Aegean is one in which the Greeks feel threatened by the vast Turkish army facing their islands and by the aggressive statements of Turkish politicians and journalists.

Instead of strengthening NATO we run the danger of weakening it by increasing the tensions and the dangers in the Aegean.

We have been told that the reason these planes were given to Turkey is that Greece did not show interest when they were first offered in 1981, but in 1981 it was not made clear to Greece that the planes Canada was offering would be reconditioned and made fighting-fit. In 1981 the Greeks assumed that Turkey would be given disused air frames.

Canada, as both Mr. Clark and Mr. Coates have said, is interested in reducing tensions in the Aegean and strengthening that part of NATO. Canada enjoys considerable credibility in the Aegean because of the fairness and good judgment our troops have displayed in Cyprus where they act as peacekeepers.

Greco-Turkish tensions in Cyprus and in the Aegean would be considerably reduced, or even eliminated, if each member of NATO solemnly undertook not to attack any other member of NATO. Currently, as the treaty stands, an attack by one member against another member is not prohibited. Back in the sixties, George Papandreu, who was then Prime Minister of Greece, said that this was tantamount to an agreement which prohibits murder but does not prohibit fratricide.

Greece has repeatedly declared that it is willing to sign an undertaking not to use its armed forces against another member of NATO. Let Canada's diplomats try to obtain a similar undertaking from Turkey. Then, both Turkey and Greece could greatly reduce the forces they have facing one another in the eastern Aegean. Part of these forces would then be available for their basic NATO duty, which is to protect the members of NATO against a possible attack from communist countries. Should Turkey stop threatening the Greek Islands, it could reduce its expenditures on armaments, thus improving its economy which is in crisis. Similarly, Greece could cut its military expenses and improve its economic situation. This is a worthy mission for Canadian diplomacy. If successful, such a mission would greatly contribute to the success of Canada's other mission in the eastern Mediterranean, the achievement of some solution to the Cyprus crisis which would be satisfactory to both the Turkish and Greek communities on that island.

I believe that both the Right Honourable Mr. Clark and the Honourable Mr. Coates care about preserving Canada's enviable record as a peacemaker. They could enhance this record and receive the credit they deserved if they convinced Turkey to forswear any designs on Greek territory.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, we have heard an interesting inquiry in which the Honourable Senator Gigantès has regretted and refuted actions of the previous government. It was that government which initiated the program of military aid to Turkey and made a firm commitment to supply that aid.

In moving his inquiry, Senator Gigantès has moved me into an unenviable position. As he well knows, I would much rather criticize the previous government than defend its action. It is much easier and much more enjoyable.

Senator Gigantès: Would the honourable senator suggest that the present government do something better?

Senator Phillips: I will come to that in a moment, if the honourable senator will hold his enthusiasm.

Senator Gigantès: I am trying to make my enthusiasm boil over.

Senator Phillips: In 1981, when Canada acquired the F-18A fighter, it declared its CF-104s, based in Europe, to be surplus, and, in accordance with NATO policy, offered the aircraft to the less advantaged countries in NATO—namely, Portugal, Greece and Turkey. As the honourable senator stated, only Turkey expressed an interest.

In 1982 the then Minister of National Defence, the Honourable Gilles Lamontagne, made a firm commitment in writing to the Turkish Minister of Defence committing the aircraft to Turkey when Canada no longer had use for them in 1985. I am sure that the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Allan MacEachen, was well aware of that agreement. I cannot imagine a situation where defence ministers would deal with another country and not make the Secretary of State for External Affairs aware of the situation. Again, NATO was notified of that action and no further objections were received from Greece or any other country within NATO.

Since the new government has assumed office, there has been a meeting between the Minister of Defence and the Greek Prime Minister in Brussels. There has also been a meeting between our Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Honourable Joe Clark, and his counterpart in Greece. At neither meeting was the subject raised, which indicates that Greece does not give the matter a high priority.

As my honourable friend stated in his inquiry, Greece did make a request for aircraft frames during the summer of 1984. I emphasized that the Canadian government had by then made a firm commitment. I would ask honourable senators what can be done in this situation. If Canada rescinded its agreement, what would that do to the previous government? It would destroy an already tarnished reputation. Let us imagine the concern throughout NATO—for all subjects, not just aircraft—if Canada were to repudiate the agreement made by the previous administration. Therefore I do not believe that Canada really has a great deal of choice but to keep that firm commitment.

I do not believe that Greece should worry unduly about Canada's commitment. I had a certain trust in the Honourable Allan MacEachen when he was in External Affairs, but I did not trust him in Finance. I thought that in External Affairs he was in a relatively harmless position. Obviously my honourable friend, Senator Gigantès, does not agree with me. However, if he reflects upon the situation, I am sure he will feel that he is able to trust his present leader in his former position.

Senator Gigantès expressed some concern about changing the balance of power between Turkey and Greece. I can understand that from a Greek viewpoint. But the honourable senator knows Greek history far better than anyone else in this chamber. He would know that in the tradition of the history of Greece, the Greeks would not consider it to be a fair fight unless they were outnumbered; and if he were to consider the matter from the Turkish side, I am sure he would want to have a superiority on that side or he would be worried about the Greek Air Force.

Perhaps I should explain to honourable senators the proposed use of the CF-104s that Canada will be transferring to Turkey. They will be stationed on the Russian border for approximately two years and they will then be replaced by Mirage fighters from France. Senator Gigantès was quite right in saying that Turkey did use some NATO equipment during the invasion of Cyprus. That was indeed unfortunate and it was contrary to NATO policy. Consequently many NATO nations, particularly the United States, cut back on military and economic aid to Turkey as a member of NATO. That aid to Turkey is now being restored, and I am sure that Turkey has suffered because of its action in using NATO equipment during the invasion of Cyprus and will think very seriously before using NATO equipment in any invasion of Greece or in any dispute arising with Greece.

Senator Gigantès surprised me when he suggested that Canada was using the transfer of aircraft as leverage in persuading Turkey to buy a Canadian nuclear reactor. It is my understanding that the commitment to Turkey was made prior to negotiations for the purchase of a nuclear reactor. I am sure that if the honourable senator were to reflect upon it he would want to keep the nuclear reactor and the transfer of CF-104s as separate items. Senator Gigantès seems to find a Trojan horse in this transfer. The Greeks are familiar with that tactic because they learned it centuries ago. Therefore, I am sure that if they were concerned about this matter they would have mentioned it in 1981.

The Government of Greece has contacted the Government of Canada regarding the possibility of the Greek air force receiving certain aircraft. They have received assurances from the government that the remaining CF-104s will be made available to the Greek air force should they desire them when they are removed from service in Canada. Those negotiations are proceeding at the present time on what is known as a best-effort basis and I am sure that if we keep cool, calm and collected this matter will be resolved to the satisfaction of both Greece and Canada. We should not attempt to make a narrow, partisan issue out of this matter and that is why I have gone to such great lengths to defend the previous government.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if Senator Gigantès speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to thank Senator Phillips for his solicitude toward the previous government. I hope he pursues his interventions in that vein and continues to feel protective toward the reputation of the Liberal Party and to show the previous government the affection and respect he has manifested today. I suggest to him also that we call a truce on horses. The last time he referred to Caligula's horse and now it is the Trojan horse. I know that he loves horses for that is what his name means.

What I was trying to say is that there is inevitably in Greece a certain anxiety. Greece is an ally of Canada. There is a problem in Cyprus. Canadian troops are contributing to keeping the peace there and we are negotiators in good faith with both sides, a referee. A referee must not only be fair but must be seen to be fair. This transaction looks different to Senator Phillips, to the Canadian government and to all of us in the Senate from the way it will look to Greek military men contemplating the fact that Turkey can now put 20 planes from Canada on the Soviet border and take 20 planes from the Soviet border and put them on the Aegean Coast as part of its forces that are menacing Greece. I have not suggested that the present Canadian government or the previous one were acting out of any ill intent toward Greece. All I am saying is that this is a very difficult situation. It goes back a very long time. It creates anxiety and it could possibly handicap the efforts of Canada as a peacemaker, if Canada is seen by Greeks who might not know all the information, as favouring Turkey over Greece. We do not want to give the appearance that we are favouring one of our allies over another. I am quite sure that this is far from the thoughts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Defence, but that is how it might be interpreted in Greece. Therefore, it might strain Canada to maintain its excellent record as a peacekeeper. That is all I want to emphasize on this issue.

I would like to conclude, since this matter refers to Greece—and not to bring into the discussion my new colleague of Greek descent Senator Barootes, for he can speak for himself—but to say that I am delighted he is here. He is living proof, better proof than I, of what people of Greek descent can bring to this country and what they can derive from it, for he has prospered and become an authority not only in his chosen field of medicine but in the political field. I would like to warn Senator Phillips, who is his whip, about the real meaning of Efstathios Barootes which is, a well placed explosive charge.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): He is certainly well placed.

Senator Gigantès: Let me now express my welcome to Senator Finlay MacDonald whose career I have followed for many years with great admiration. I think he will be an ornament to the Senate. I have read about Senator Robertson and it has been said that there is only one of her. I think we should clone her. The Senate will be totally tolerable and desirable only when half the members are women.

FINANCE

ITALIAN AND NEWFOUNDLAND VOTERS—COMMENTS OF MINISTER

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, December 18, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the comments made by the Honourable Michael Wilson, Minister of Finance, about Italian and Newfoundland voters.

He said: Honourable senators, this matter is painful to me, although I am in no way involved. I would like to quote some excerpts from a recorded statement made by the Minister of Finance last December. He said:

The election campaigns that we fight in downtown Toronto are, 'Don't vote for the Tories or they are going to send you back to Italy' . . . that's the politics of fear. That's the politics that people will play . . . And they, the Liberals are still playing the politics of fear . . . If we said we're going to cut back on the IRDP (Industrial Regional Development Program) in Toronto, you know what people would be saying in Newfoundland? They're going to cut back on the IRDP, period.

This statement was made by the Honourable Michael Wilson in answer to questions as to why his party had not talked about cutting expenses during the election campaign. What is sad about the whole episode is that it is insulting to all Canadians, especially to Canadians of Italian descent and to the wonderful people of Newfoundland. Why should anyone assume that Canadians of Italian descent are so stupid that they could believe that they would be sent back to Italy if they voted the way they wanted to vote. Are these Canadians of Italian descent so ignorant, so uneducated, so unsophisticated that they could be so easily frightened? Does not Mr. Wilson know that the Italian-Canadian community has among it able-bodied lawyers who cannot be intimidated and who would assure any immigrant that Canada does not expel people for voting the way they want to vote?

Italian-Canadians have brought to this country their ability to work hard, their enthusiasm, their gaiety and their fine brains and Canada is the richer for having them here. Nor have they come from a country where politics and politicians are unknown. After all, Italy is the land of Machiavelli. A Canadian of Italian descent would treat any threat of deportation for exercising his right to vote as a preposterous idiocy and that is what it would be, a preposterous idiocy. Nor are the people of Newfoundland less intelligent or less informed than the rest of us. The Newfoundlanders I know are not only adorable, hospitable and witty but they are intelligent and canny. They cannot be fooled. They know when they are being conned. They may elect politicians with the gift of the blarney, but they are not fooled. To say such a thing as Mr. Wilson said so as to avoid revealing his agenda—and this is, in effect, what he said—is hiding the facts from the voters. It is a manifestation of contempt for the people. It diminishes the stature of elected politicians. It rots the foundations of democracy. If it was an inadvertent slip of the tongue, then Mr. Wilson should apologize. He has been asked to apologize; the Prime Minister has been asked to seek whether such an apology could be made even in a benign form if it was a slip of the tongue, but no such apology has come and personally, I think that is a shame.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE HON. FREDERICK W. ROWE

FELICITATIONS ON PUBLICATION OF "THE SMALLWOOD ERA"

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, with your leave, before we begin the business of the day I should like to call your attention to an event of which I am sure all of us can be proud.

Our colleague, Senator Frederick W. Rowe, has just had published a book entitled The Smallwood Era. Although I have only had a copy in my hands for little more than 24 hours, I have read a good portion of it. It starts off very briskly. It is a factual and, Senator Rowe assures me, completely unbiased account of the years from 1949 to 1971 when Joe Smallwood dominated the political scene in Newfoundland and exercised a tremendous influence on the political scene throughout Canada.

I have been an admirer of Senator Rowe and his publications in relation to Newfoundland for some time. He has written a book on the Beothuks, the early Indian tribe of Newfoundland which is now extinct; he has written a book on education and culture in Newfoundland, with which I am familiar; and he has written a history of Newfoundland and Labrador. This account of the Smallwood era must be one of the most interesting political commentaries published in Canada in our generation.

I wish to commend Senator Rowe for his enterprise, for his good writing, for his sound research, and, yes, so far as I can tell, for his apparent objectivity in this work.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to take just a minute or two of your time to join in the congratulations expressed so eloquently by my esteemed friend, Senator Hicks.

Although I have not yet read it, I am sure this latest laudable work by my friend and fellow Newfoundlander, Dr. Rowe, is well done. However, I have some reservations as to whether it is impartial and unbiased, but perhaps I am a little biased in another direction.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You are probably mentioned in it.

Senator Doody: I hope not. If I am, it is undoubtedly in the context of Mr. Smallwood's referring to me as a "Liberal," which, to my embarrassment, he invariably did.

Senator Frith: If you are not referred to, it may be because of the laws of libel.

Senator Doody: Yes, or censorship.

Although Fred Rowe is best known as a most able and productive contributor to the political life of my province, I think his contribution to the scholastic, academic and literary life of Newfoundland is at least as great. From my point of view, I would like to think of it as being much greater.

I remember well Fred Rowe's career in Newfoundland public life. I think it is fair to say that, for at least a large part of his 20 years in the House of Assembly of the Government of Newfoundland, he was recognized as Mr. Smallwood's strong right arm. I think it is fair to say that he was considered by many of us in Newfoundland as the logical successor to Mr. Smallwood. Mr. Smallwood, however, deemed that the only logical successor to Mr. Smallwood would be Mr. Smallwood, and so the regime came to an end. That is not an unknown phenomenon in Liberal circles—the wish to succeed oneself. The result appears to be the same.

Dr. Rowe held many portfolios in Newfoundland most competently, but in the minds of many of us he is best known for his work in the field of education.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: In the post-Confederation years the most notable achievements of the Smallwood government—and I say this in all sincerity—were the great leaps forward in education and in public health services in our province. Up to that point we were badly behind the rest of North America. The successes in the field of education were in large part attributable to Fred Rowe. His fellow Newfoundlanders, among whom I include myself, thank him for that and for his many years of service to the province. I am pleased to note his latest accomplishment. I congratulate him and say we are proud of him. I look forward to reading it.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Paul C. Lafond, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence, tabled the following report:

Wednesday, January 23, 1985

The Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, November 27, 1984, to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to National Defence, has, in obedience to its Order of Reference, proceeded with a study and now tables an interim report, entitled: "Canada's Territorial Air Defence".

Respectfully submitted,

PAUL C. LAFOND
Chairman

He said: Honourable senators, I beg leave to make a few brief remarks in explanation of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, when I tabled the second report of what was then your Subcommittee on National Defence entitled Canada's Maritime Defence, on June 15, 1983, I said—and here I quote myself:

It seems to me that of equal priority in peacetime as in time of conflict are the preservation of Canada's sovereignty and the creditable fulfillment of her commitments to her allies.

Honourable senators, sovereignty is more than a concept to be repetitively proclaimed. It must be continuously asserted and exercised in tangible and visible fashion. Our geography dictates that this be done, particularly in our Arctic and our extended sea frontier.

I concluded my remarks by saying:

Your subcommittee now wishes to pursue its inquiries by examining Air Command, with particular attention to continental air defence, detection and resistance, and strategic and tactical transportation of personnel and equipment.

The first phase of this study has now been completed and is tabled before you today under the heading Canada's Territorial Air Defence.

May I at this time express my gratitude to the members of the committee who laboured so assiduously and successfully on the study and in the production of this report. That applies equally to the highly competent staff of the special committee.

In this report your committee focused on one specific point; the approach that Canada should adopt toward territorial air defence until the turn of the century, against the background which I outlined a moment ago of preserving Canada's sovereignty and fulfilling our commitments to our allies.

We reviewed the development of the threats and of the measures taken to counter them since the mid-1950s. We have been made aware of the growing obsolescence, inefficiency and cost of the systems now in place, and of the options available to Canada in seeking their modernization. We have recognized the need for Canada to maintain defence arrangements with the United States that will permit this country to promote its own interests and policies as well as to participate effectively in the common defence. We have been updated on the main features and components currently being negotiated with the United States to that end.

We recommend some courses of action which should be taken by Canada in the transitional years which will take us to eventual space-based systems. As has been our custom, we have costed our recommendations. I would like to caution honourable senators and all who may read and comment on this report not to be startled by large sums, and dismiss its recommendations out of hand. In this, as in our previous reports, the expenditures recommended are spread over a decade or more and we have satisfied ourselves that Canada can afford them without undue stress.

The report lifts a part of the curtain on the types of military activity that might characterize continental aerospace defence in the space age and the eventual relationship between Canadian military space policies and U.S. strategic postures and doctrines.

Honourable senators, there are many more facets of Canada's defence requirements and policies I would like to discuss at length, from uniforms to cruise testing via interpretation of some of the Auditor General's observations with respect to the administration of defence matters. We hope there will be opportunities to do so after we have seen the green or white paper announced by the government. The committee is gratified that one of its initial recommendations is finally being acted upon.

Whether these documents will bear on foreign policy and defence jointly or separately is not clear to me yet. I do hope that defence matters will not be buried in many long dissertations on foreign policy. Territorial defence of our country can and must stand on its own. This is one thing that your committee has tried to establish. This third report has attempted to analyze and expose a pressing problem. All Canadians should be made aware of its nature and of its possible solutions.

Honourable senators, I move that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

PREPARATION—ALLEGED NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND INDEPENDENT PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We heard today that the President of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada has been privy to negotiations that took place with reference to energy pricing. He is reported to have said that the industry has known for some time the intended plans, that an agreement between the oil producers and the government party has been in existence for some time and that negotiations started a year or so ago. Of course, it is no surprise that the Conservative government—and I can congratulate them for being true to their colours and traditions—do their business on the basis of what big business wants. However, when it goes so far as the IPAC president is reported to have said, namely, that the agreement has been in existence for some time and that he expects that it will be reflected in the budget, does the Leader of the Government not think that if IPAC and the government know about the agreement perhaps the Canadian public, including honourable senators, should be enlightened on it.

First, what is the agreement, and, second, does the leader not think that it is going too far to have an agreement with this one group of businessmen as to what is going into the budget?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can assure the house that there is no secret agreement or deal of any kind between IPAC and the government, as my honourable friend has alleged.

Senator Frith: Or the oil industry?

Senator Roblin: Nor the oil industry. There is simply no agreement of that kind.

Senator Frith: So he is wrong?

Senator Roblin: The gentleman's remark, according to him, has been misquoted. It is his contention that he did not say that, and he is in the process of making a statement which will clarify the situation insofar as he is concerned. That is his business.

However, insofar as the government is concerned, I can say that there is no secret agreement of any kind and no understanding of the sort that my honourable friend has mentioned. Any agreements that are to be made are to be made between the federal government and the provincial governments, not with the industry. The industry will be consulted; they have a lot to say, but that does not constitute any secret arrangement.

Senator Frith: Would my honourable friend agree with the second part of my question, that it would be improper for such an agreement to exist—that is, an agreement, the terms of which would be reflected in the budget?

Senator Roblin: I can simply tell my honourable friend that there is no such agreement. Therefore, it is not possible to reflect such an agreement in the budget. The budget will be established entirely on the basis of the negotiations that the federal government undertakes with the provincial governments. There is no secret agreement to be reflected in the budget. Secret agreements, of course, are quite out of bounds.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that still does not answer my question. My honourable friend will remember that when Walter Gordon was Minister of Finance there was a good deal of criticism about the fact that some three persons were hired as consultants and knew what was going into the budget. At that time, a good deal of fuss was made about that situation and a good deal of criticism was levelled at the government of the day because of it. This is why I want again to ask my second question, or a corollary to it: Does my friend agree that it would be improper for such an agreement to exist—that is, a private agreement that will be reflected in the budget, and an agreement that it be so reflected?

Senator Roblin: I would certainly agree with my friend that secret agreements of this kind are not the way in which we do business in Canada. They do not exist, and I do not approve of them.

PREPARATION—USE OF CONSULTANTS

Hon. H. A. Olson: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. May I ask him if there are people other than senior officials of the bureaucracy who are involved in the preparation of the budget, which is what Mr. Morgan seems to be implying?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Insofar as the oil industry is concerned?

Senator Olson: Insofar as any part of the budget is concerned, and particularly taxation in the oil industry.

Senator Roblin: The only person I am aware of who has entered the minister's office as a consultant is a gentleman who has come to the government under the general aegis of the exchange of personnel between the government and the private sector. He may have some studies to make in respect of general taxation policy. I really have no means of knowing what they are. However, the way these things are managed is that the person concerned takes the oath of secrecy. He submits all of his assets to a blind trust and, in other words, conducts himself in the way that a senior civil servant would.

Senator Olson: I have a further supplementary. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate assure us that the person he is referring to—and I am assuming that he was an officer in the Bank of Nova Scotia—has submitted to all of the stringent requirements that are applied to senior officials in the government with respect to a situation such as this?

Senator Roblin: Yes. The gentleman's name, as I recall, is Mr. Mackness, and he has complied with all of the regulations respecting this matter with which senior civil servants are expected to comply.

My further information is that he has also taken some further steps, details of which I do not have on the tip of my tongue, that go beyond what is required by the guidelines in order to make sure that the situation is perfectly clear.

Senator Olson: I have a final supplementary. Could the Leader of the Government articulate for us within the next few days what those restrictions are? The preparation of the budget is a very sensitive area, and if anyone outside of the government has access to that, then, of course, all of the questions that were raised with Walter Gordon will come to the fore in this instance as well.

Senator Roblin: Yes, I shall be glad to obtain for my honourable friend a statement on the restrictions that apply. However, I want to emphasize that this gentleman is not outside, in the sense that that word is sometimes used. He is, in fact, inside; he is part of the civil service mechanism which is examining various aspects of budget policy.

● (1420)

Senator Olson: I thought the last supplementary was going to be the final one, but I have one more.

I understand that that person is on what is termed the "exempt staff", which is significantly different from the senior bureaucracy. I wonder if the leader could look into that and also tell us whether his salary is being paid by the bank.

Senator Roblin: I suppose one could say that in some respects he resembles the dollar-a-year men who proved to be so useful in the operation of the Government of Canada in bygone days.

I can ascertain whether or not he is on the exempt staff at the present time, but I want to underline the fact that, whether he is or is not on the exempt staff, he has complied with the guidelines with respect to integrity that we expect of senior civil servants in the matter which my honourable friend mentioned.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): But you will obtain those two items?

Senator Roblin: Yes.

UNEMPLOYMENT

ARMED FORCES—SUGGESTED RECRUITMENT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, yesterday I was prompted by newspaper reports to ask a question concerning the government's policy on the armed forces. I asked for assurance that the matter of our armed forces was not being combined, confused or assimilated with the solution to our unemployment problem. The Leader of the Government in the Senate seemed to share my view that these two problems ought not to be assimilated or combined, and he gave me a very reassuring answer, which is to be found at page 426 of Senate Debates.

As I said, I found that answer very reassuring. However, I did not sleep so well after I read the newspaper again, because in the Chronicle Herald of January 11, 1985, I read a top line story in which the Honourable Minister of National Defence is said to have committed the Conservative government to "combining defence recovery with economic recovery."

The third paragraph of the story is a direct quotation from the minister, and reads as follows:

It (the defence dollar) can be invested to increase economic activity and thus it can create more employment opportunities for Canadians.

[Senator Olson.]

Honourable senators, what I said yesterday was that we know the results of that kind of thinking from what happened during the 1930s; we know what the results of a buildup of armed forces to solve unemployment problems, grave though they are, can be.

Honourable senators, I must repeat my question of yesterday to the Leader of the Government, which was:

Will the leader give us assurances that these two serious matters will be kept quite separate? Will he insist upon that with his colleagues?

I ask now whether he will insist upon that particularly with his colleague, the Honourable Minister of National Defence.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think my honourable friend's concern arises out of a question of definitions with respect to the problem. When I listened to him yesterday I was under the impression that he was talking about increasing the armed forces by recruiting unemployed youths, for example, when he used the phrase "to build up the armed forces". I thought he was talking about enlisting a group of young men and women as a means of alleviating unemployment among them, or giving them an opportunity to learn some constructive trade while so enlisted. My reply was to the effect that I had no personal knowledge that that was going on. I do not think it is.

I have a habit, though, that I think is a prudent one: When honourable senators ask me questions on a wide variety of subjects, I think it must be quite obvious to all that it is not likely that I have direct personal knowledge on all points raised that would enable me to answer with perfect confidence. So, while I give the best answers I can with the information available to me, my staff have a practice of sending those answers to the department concerned to see if, by any chance, I have misstated the situation. That being the case, I have an opportunity to be told about that and, consequently, an opportunity to inform the Senate of any change in what I had said on the first occasion.

So, that process goes on, and I would like honourable senators to know that I do that with all questions in the hope that it will prevent me from making too many errors in that respect.

What I think the Minister of National Defence was talking about was military procurement of equipment and particularly the sharing of defence contracts between Canada and the United States. There has been an effort, as my honourable friend knows, in the last few weeks to bring to the notice of Canadian manufacturers the opportunity for the sharing of defence production between our two nations which has been the policy between Canada and the United States for many years. The present minister has perceived an opportunity to increase the amount of sharing that comes to the Canadian manufacturing sector, and I think that is what he was referring to when he talked about using military expenditures as a means of improving the Canadian economy. I believe that is what he meant and not the point that my honourable friend was concerned about yesterday.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I was not complaining just now about the reply that the Leader of the Government in the Senate had given yesterday. I understood perfectly well what I remembered having read, but the response that the Leader of the Government has given now, I think, is quite alarming. On reflection he might agree with me. Years ago President Eisenhower talked about the danger of industrial considerations shaping defence policy. I suppose that today we might talk about unemployment considerations shaping defence procurement. I am not suggesting that anyone would be so sinister as to make the connection directly, but surely the Leader of the Government in the Senate will want to insist with his colleagues that the impact of defence procurement on the Canadian economy shall not be a reason for a buildup of the Canadian Armed Forces either in men or matériel. Surely he will agree that history has demonstrated that that is a very slippery slope for a nation to embark upon.

Senator Roblin: I find it a problem to agree with my honourable friend because it has been the settled policy of several Canadian governments to use the possibility of defence-production sharing as a means of providing the equipment that our forces require. In fact, one of the factors taken into account when placing defence contracts is this very issue, as to whether or not there should be a spinoff of production to the advantage of the Canadian economy. For example, when the F-18 was chosen as the aircraft for the Canadian Air Force, one of the reasons that enabled a successful bidder to get the contract was his specific undertaking to ensure that a substantial volume of production in respect of that particular machine was placed with Canadian firms. That is what is continuing to happen these days. That is what the Minister of National Defence was talking about, and I do not really see the basis of my honourable friend's fear that this is going to land us on some slippery slope of militarization of the country, because I doubt that it is. I simply reassure him that the policy being followed now has been a consistent policy of Canadian administrations over time.

Senator Stewart: I am not arguing with the notion that the buildup of the armed forces might have an incidental effect upon the economy. I think that is pretty obvious. What I am concerned about is when the cart starts pushing the horse—when the reverse relation sets in. One has only to read this story to see that the Minister of National Defence, contrary to what the Leader of the Government has just said, is proposing to charter a new course for the expenditure of defence dollars. The clear implication of the story, as I read it, is that defence spending is to be used to re-energize the Canadian economy. That this is one of the explanations given for what the Solicitor General refers to as “the great miracle” that happened south of the border.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend has the argument completely reversed. We do not spend defence dollars because doing so has satisfactory economic consequences; we spend defence dollars for the defence of the nation. That is not to stop us, it seems to me, from making the best use of that expenditure in terms of the Canadian economy. I do not regard that as a bad policy; I regard it as a good policy. It is a natural policy.

I would assure my honourable friend that, if he is concerned that economic considerations will decide what defence policy is going to be, I think he is right in saying that that should not be the way it goes, and it is not the way it goes. Defence policy is established and then whatever economic advantages can be gained from that follow; not the other way around.

Senator Stewart: I have one last supplementary. Will the Leader of the Government insist that the Minister of National Defence listen to the enlightened position the Leader of the Government has now put forth?

Senator Roblin: I will do better than that; I will make sure the Minister of National Defence reads not only what I have had to say but what my honourable friend has had to say.

SPORT

TORONTO—PROPOSED DOMED STADIUM—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in the spirit of freedom of information and the great need for further clarification of press reports, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform this chamber what amount of Canadian taxpayers' money the federal government has committed, through the CN and in other ways, to the construction of the domed sports stadium in Toronto, even though there is a greater priority and need for housing, emergency shelters for youth and for daycare centres?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot assume any responsibility on behalf of the federal government for the decision that has been made to build a domed stadium. I think that decision was made by other competent authorities, namely the Government of Ontario and the Metropolitan City of Toronto.

The contribution that Canadian National may make is something clearly within the purview of that corporation to decide. If my honourable friend would like me to find out what they are going to do about it, I will do my best to get that information for him.

Senator Haidasz: I very much appreciate the Leader of the Government's intention to provide us with this information. However, while he is doing that, would he also find out to what extent the federal government, through the CN or in other ways, is going to cross-subsidize the private-investor sector in the construction of the domed stadium?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think that is a hypothetical question. I know of no cross-subsidization.

I will adhere to my undertaking to bring the honourable senator an answer to the first question, and that may clarify the situation for him.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MEXICO—REPORTED NUCLEAR PACT WITH CANADA

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, earlier this month, while soaking up ultraviolet rays in Mexico, I came across a headline in the Mexico City News stating that Mexican and Canadian lawmakers had signed a nuclear pact which they referred to as the Declaration of Querétaro. Would the Leader of the Government inform us what commitments this Canadian delegation made on behalf of senators and members of the House of Commons?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can accept no responsibility for a news report in a Mexican newspaper. I cannot accept any responsibility for news reports in Canadian newspapers.

If my honourable friend is asking me to find out whether there is such an agreement, based on whatever information he suggests, I will do my best to do so.

Senator Haidasz: I would very much appreciate it if the Leader of the Government would not only tell us about this agreement but also give us the details. Would he also let us know whether the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs knew about what was being signed for and on our behalf by the Speaker of the House of Commons and Senator Orville Phillips?

Senator Roblin: Good gracious, my honourable friend is full of interesting information today. I did not know that my colleague was in Mexico signing agreements on behalf of the Government of Canada. Although he may not like to hear me say this, I very much doubt that he was given that responsibility. However, I will check my honourable friend's information. I would again refer to the fact that often news of Canadian interests appearing in foreign publications strays somewhat far from the facts.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, while the Leader of the Government in the Senate is investigating the situation regarding Senator Haidasz' question, would he double-check and try to find out what government officials Senator Haidasz contacted, while in Mexico enjoying the sun, to ascertain how many more thousands of tonnes of the best rails produced in Canada by Sydney Steel we could sell to the Government of Mexico?

Senator Roblin: I do not think Senator Haidasz will confide in me. If I want to sell steel rails to Mexico, I know darn well whom I would send to do it.

THE SENATE

RETIREMENT OF MEMBERS—STATISTICS

Question No. 3 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Peter Bosa:

Since the constitutional amendment in 1965 made compulsory retirement of Members of the Senate at age 75:

1. (a) How many Senators have been appointed since 1965, and (b) how many of them have retired?

[Senator Roblin.]

2. How many of those Senators that have retired are still living?

3. Of those Senators that are still living (a) how many of them have qualified for a Senate pension, and (b) how much are their pensions?

4. What is (a) the average length of time, and (b) the amount of pension that has been drawn by retired Senators who have died since 1965.

Reply by the Leader of the Government in the Senate:

1. (a) 127; (b) 24.

2. 19.

3. (a) 16; (b) 2,023.32; 2,848.44; 6,082.56; 6,410.76; 7,042.68; 10,350.48; 10,982.28; 11,167.08; 12,770.28; 13,132.68; 13,682.64; 14,621.76; 14,796.96; 16,241.28; 39,617.52; 49,156.32. Total $230,927.04 per annum.

4. (a) Two senators, an average of 2.65 years; (b) $26,570.44.

EXCISE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 4:

Hon. Lowell Murray moved second reading of Bill C-17, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-17, which I have the honour to present on behalf of the government, would, among other things, amend the Excise Tax Act in a way which will realize a net gain to the federal treasury of $295 million in the fiscal year 1984-85; $815 million in the fiscal year 1985-86; and $915 million in the fiscal year 1986-87.

Of the various tax measures in this bill, the biggest and best revenue raiser is, of course, the increase of one percentage point in the general rate of federal sales tax. This measure will have raised some $300 million in 1984-85; approximately $900 million in 1985-86; and approximately $1 billion in 1986-87.

I may say that the tax, which was originally introduced as a "special recovery tax" by the Honourable Marc Lalonde, is to expire on December 31, 1988.

This increase of one percentage point in the general rate of federal sales tax will bring the tax on construction materials to 6 per cent; on wines, alcohol and tobacco products to 13 per cent; and on all other taxable products to 10 per cent.

Having been announced in the Lalonde budget of 1983, this increase in the sales tax took effect on October 1, 1984. I hasten to acknowledge, because we will no doubt be reminded in the course of the debate, that when the tax was announced by Mr. Lalonde, it was opposed by Progressive Conservative members of Parliament and for very good reasons.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Of course.

Senator Murray: However, the situation that faced the present government, when it took office, was as follows: Our predecessors had committed funds in the 1983 budget that they counted on recouping—

Senator Frith: Mother Hubbard.

Senator Murray: —by levying this tax increase. As Mr. Wilson said shortly after taking office, when he announced that we had no option but to proceed with the tax increase:

In effect those funds have already been largely spent. They have left us to pay the bills and the cupboard is bare.

Senator Frith: We have a Mother Hubbard fairy tale. That's all it is, a fairy tale.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there are several other revenue measures that I would mention in passing. There is a 6 per cent tax on telecommunications programming services, cablevision, pay TV, and so on, which came into force on April 20, 1983. That also was a measure originating in Mr. Lalonde's budget of that date. That tax is payable by the retailer, but the bill provides that the retailer may pass on the cost of the tax to the subscriber. The tax applies to amounts charged on or after April 20, 1983 for services delivered on or after July 1, 1983, and I may say that the tax will have raised some $40 million in 1984-85, some $50 million in 1985-86, and some $55 million in 1986-87.

There is one important revenue measure in this bill that originates with the present government. Indeed, it was announced by our former senatorial colleague, the Honourable Robert René de Cotret, the President of the Treasury Board, as part of the revenue-raising program announced last November. That is the increase in the air transportation tax from 8 per cent to 9 per cent on domestic flights, to a maximum tax of $30, and on international flights from $12.50 to $15. Those increases will be effective on April 1 of this year and are to raise some $35 million in 1985-86 and some $50 million in 1986-87.

There are several amendments in the bill that will cost the treasury money. That is why I used net figures at the beginning of my remarks when I stated the global figures for the impact on the treasury.

The change in the federal tax on motor vehicles, for example, will cost the treasury approximately $20 million in each of 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, as from March 1, 1984. That again is a measure that originated in the Lalonde budget of April 1983.

The federal tax on motor vehicles is imposed at the wholesale level or on the importation by a retailer. This had always been the case for Canadian-made cars, but imported cars had been taxed on the duty-paid value at the border and were sold to the retailer as tax-paid vehicles. When he made his budget speech, Mr. Lalonde presented this measure as one that would remove a tax advantage that was enjoyed in respect of cars imported from Europe and Japan. He reckoned that under the old system the tax paid on Japanese and European cars could be $100 to $200 lower than the tax on comparable cars made in Canada or the United States.

The biggest cost item to the treasury in this bill will come from the fuel tax rebate proposed for farmers, fishermen, loggers, trappers and mine operators. That is a sales tax rebate of three cents per litre on gasoline or diesel fuel purchased for off-highway use. Honourable senators will be aware that many of our primary producers are in some difficulty because of interest rates, markets, and the relative devaluation of the currencies of many of our competitors and customers, except for the United States, vis-à-vis the Canadian dollar. Therefore it is hoped that this sales tax rebate will provide some relief to them from increasing costs. It is a temporary measure to help the primary producers. It expires on January 1, 1987. It is expected to cost the treasury $25 million in 1984-85, $160 million in 1985-86, and $170 million in 1986-87.

There are a number of other provisions and technical amendments contained in the bill, but I will mention only three of them. First, the air transportation tax sections of the Excise Tax Act are being amended to prevent the double incidence of the tax in cases where more than one ticket is issued at the same time for a journey that is regarded as a continuous journey. Secondly, henceforth interest will be paid on refunds and overpayment of taxes from 60 days after a valid refund application has been filed. At the same time, the penalty for late payment has been changed from 1.5 per cent per month to one-half per cent per month effective when the bill receives Royal Assent. Taxpayers will be able to apply for a refund of federal sales and excise taxes paid in respect of sales that become bad debts. That will apply to sales after February 15, 1984.

Honourable senators, I trust that I have touched on the most important points contained in this bill. If not, no doubt honourable senators opposite will draw my attention to those that I may have neglected to mention. They are eminently well qualified to do that, since they share a large part of the paternity of this bill. I trust there will be no false modesty on their part with regard to it.

Senator Frith: That is an interesting theory—mixed parentage.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, on your behalf I thank Senator Murray for his, as usual, lucid explanation of the bill. First, I wish to welcome the new senators who joined us yesterday. We are more than delighted to have them here. No doubt they will contribute a great deal to the deliberations of this chamber.

As Senator Murray has said, Bill C-17, which started as Bill C-12, is an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. In many of its provisions it is almost identical to legislation that was proposed by the previous government in the budgets of April 1983 and February 1984, and in a motion in respect of the Excise Act in May 1984. The present government has added certain provisions to the original proposed legislation. I suppose the most important is the fuel tax rebate to which Senator Murray has referred. That allows a rebate of three cents per litre to primary producers, specifically farmers, fishermen, loggers and mine operators. There is also the continuing relief that was in the act before, of the 1.5 per cent rebate on excise tax. As I understand it, the three cents per litre rebate will be given from bulk plants by way of a lower price, but the 1.5 per cent rebate will still require the application by the primary user. It seems to me that if it is possible to have this new system, that does not require an application for the three cents per litre rebate, then it should be possible for the government to figure out how to do the same thing for the 1.5 per cent rebate.

Honourable senators, in their fight for power, the Conservatives promised to remove the sales tax from primary producers. In fact, this is a very conditional removal. While the three cents is virtually equal to the sales tax, nonetheless it is not exact and it will expire after a certain length of time. They also stated that they were prepared to include the same rebate for the oil and gas sector. I would be interested to know why the upstream oil and gas sector was excluded from the benefits of this tax rebate. There is also a change to the air transportation tax, as Senator Murray has mentioned, which will go from 8 per cent to 9 per cent or a maximum of $30 from $23 for domestic flights and up to $15 from $12 for international flights. Senator Murray has mentioned the telecommunication programming service tax of 6 per cent. Those are the items introduced by the present government.

The previous government made some proposals which are now included in this bill. It proposed that the tax on highway motor vehicles be moved from the manufacturers level to the wholesale level. Senator Murray explained how it works, but the net effect will be that foreign importers—those other than Canadian and American manufacturers—face a rise in the price of their vehicles in Canada by an average of $250. The Liberal government also proposed a sales tax increase of 1 per cent to offset the cost of special recovery capital projects. It is to run from October 1, 1984 until December 31, 1988. The resultant rates will be 13 per cent on alcohol and tobacco products, 6 per cent on construction materials and building equipment and 10 per cent on all other taxable goods.

As Senator Murray has stated, the government will pay 1 per cent interest on all outstanding refunds 60 days after a valid claim has been made, a measure introduced by the Liberal government. Under this legislation sales and excise taxes are also recoverable on bad debts which have been written off. The Liberal government introduced a system of formal assessment and appeals. What that means is that the right of the taxpayer to appeal an assessment would be entrenched in the legislation. This measure has been excluded from the bill.

Senator Frith: Shame.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Shame.

Senator Everett: After all the racket made by the Conservative Party in the last Parliament about the rights of taxpayers, one cannot help but be a little mystified as to why they would leave out the entrenchment of the taxpayers rights to appeal.

[Senator Everett.]

Senator Frith: What perfidy.

Senator Perrault: Shocking!

Senator Everett: Senator Murray has stated that the Conservatives were somewhat against this legislation while in opposition but, having assumed power, they decided that they should introduce the legislation. I thought that he played this opposition down and from what he said it did not seem to be very serious opposition to the legislation at the time.

Just to refresh his memory I would like to read some excerpts from speeches by the Honourable John Crosbie, who was at that time the finance critic, in respect of the sales tax increase. On December 31, 1983 Mr. Crosbie is reported to have said:

This . . . is a huge regressive tax bite, far greater than the hospital insurance premiums collected by Ontario or any other province, that this Government has now introduced legislation to try to stop. Hypocrites, cynics, manipulators guilty of deviousness, deviates; this is what the Government is composed of.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That could not be the same John Crosbie.

Senator Everett: That is the mild criticism.

Senator Doody: That is not the mild-mannered Crosbie I remember.

Senator Frith: Those were their constructive suggestions.

Senator Everett: He reconsidered the word "devious", I guess. On February 16 he said:

The Minister calls it the special recovery tax. He should rename it the special recession tax. There is no recovery. This tax is not going to help it, this special recession tax—

Where does the Minister help domestic demand in this Budget? . . . He might help consumer demand if he did away with the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax that is coming in October. It is a regressive tax that bears more heavily on lower income people.

Again, on March 30, he said:

One thing I would not have done is to bring in the tax increases which the Minister of Finance brought in in April and which he confirmed again in February. How could this be the right time to have tax increases when there is not any kind of vigorous recovery going on in the economy? I would not impose another 1 per cent increase in the sales tax on the Canadian people in October, and I would not have made the changes in the Child Tax Credit and the other changes which were introduced in the Budget last April.

Senator Perrault: Shocking. By their words you should know them.

Senator Everett: And again on June 28 he still has not repented:

In the next three years the Government is going to take $2.4 billion from Canadian consumers through the new special recovery tax, a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax. This year the Government will take $300 million. How can the Minister justify these increased taxes on Canadian consumers whom he is crucifying with increased interest rates at the same time? How can he justify that, the unemployment it will bring, and the recession that will follow it?

Senator Perrault: Oratorical bounders.

Senator Everett: That is the mild criticism that was directed against this bill when the Conservatives were in opposition. Of course, they come into power and change their minds immediately. I have no objection to the government doing what it sees as being the right thing. However, what I and so many Canadians object to is that the Conservative Party went to the people and said they would do one thing and then, when they become the government, they do exactly the opposite.

Senator Perrault: Shame.

Senator Everett: You have created a feeling of cynicism amongst the Canadian people, that they just cannot trust anything the government says. I think that what the government has done here is a great tragedy.

Honourable senators, it is true that what we are doing here is raising taxes to support government spending on unemployment. I am not in favour of this kind of policy. I think raising taxes has the effect of slowing the economy, and the jobs which are often created by government intervention are not long-term jobs. To determine what perhaps should be done, we should look at today's economy. We are now enjoying a very low inflation rate. I think it was 4.4 per cent in 1984 and in December it was as low as 3.8 per cent over the rate for the same month in 1983. I believe that was the effect of a long-range application of monetary policy.

Senator Frith: By the previous government.

Senator Everett: I recall how much we were criticized at the time for that policy, and I recall the protestations from the other side that the monetary policy applied by the Central Bank was not working. However, now we do have the benefit of low inflation; we do have a certain rate of growth. It is not sufficient to sop up the unemployment, but there is some growth. We have high interest rates which are impeding further growth, a low exchange rate, which is aiding our exports and our export industries, and a deficit of $34 billion to $36 billion.

Today, the deficit is what is getting the greatest attention from everybody. I wonder what the effects of a deficit really are. Certainly, in terms of fiscal policy, they are stimulative. They do have an effect on interest rates, given that when the economy does grow to a certain extent, there is a demand both from the private sector and from the government sector for borrowed moneys, and that does have an effect on increasing interest rates.

Deficits of this magnitude have an effect on expectations. For some, they look at the deficit and assume that interest rates will remain high. For others, they see the deficit as contributing to long-range inflation. In both cases, the effect is, again, higher interest rates. However, the real issue with respect to the deficit is none of these things. The real issue is whether or not that deficit is monetized. The real danger of deficits is that, in order for them to be met, the Central Bank must increase the rate of growth in the money supply at a rate faster than it would otherwise do so. In other words, the options to control the growth of the rate of the money supply are, to an extent, removed from the Central Bank, and that is the important issue with respect to deficits.

If the Central Bank is determined to increase the money supply to meet the deficit, then the long-range effect is increased interest rates and increased inflation. Up to this time, the Central Bank has not reacted to the deficit. The growth of the money supply is very much under control and it is that control over the growth of the money supply that has brought down inflation over the last few years.

What can we do about the deficit? We can raise taxes, or we can decrease spending. Alternatively, we can embark on policies that will result in a real growth in the economy. However, to achieve real growth, it is likely that we must lower taxes and raise spending. So we have that dilemma: If we want to get rid of the deficit, then we raise taxes or we decrease spending; if we want real growth, we must look at lowering taxes or raising spending.

The question is whether or not that dilemma can be resolved. I believe it can, but in a slightly different way. I believe that it can be resolved by the application of a steady and controlled growth of the money supply; by a commitment from the government to middle and long-term growth and the willingness and the guts to eschew any quick fixes. That is, an increase in the money supply to lower interest rates in the short run, but then to have interest rates rise again in the long run and also to see inflation increasing once again.

Present monetary policy is proscribed by the deficit and by the exchange rate but, interestingly enough, at this stage not by the rate of inflation. It seems to me that that particular condition now permits the steady, controlled growth of the money supply. If that happens, then regardless of the deficit, interest rates will drop over a period of time; the increase in the money supply will largely translate into real growth and the result will be a reduction in the deficit. However, beyond that policy of a reasonable and controlled steady growth in the money supply, we must have policies which will encourage the growth of the economy itself.

As far as government policy is concerned, our options are to increase government spending or to reduce taxes, as I have said. I would opt for lowered taxes over increased spending, the reason being that I believe that lower taxes will encourage an increase in investment and in private sector activity, while government spending so often has a short-range effect which wears out. I have seen studies where it was said that an investment by the government would produce 70,000 jobs at a cost of $13,000 per job, as compared to the private sector where they would produce 11,000 jobs at a cost of $60,000 per job. I really doubt what is in that type of study and how well it is done. One of the difficulties with government jobs is that, while they can be produced, they rarely last. They are a short-term palliative, and then you are back in the same situation and faced with the same problem. Far better to encourage the investment by the private sector in new facilities because that is what creates long-term employment.

At this stage I think the problem with increasing government spending or reducing taxes is, of course, that they will exacerbate the deficit and, once again, we are faced with the dilemma. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that there is a third way, and that third way is to be found in a neutral tax system. Sometimes it is called a flat tax system. I am not sure that the term "flat tax" is the most descriptive term for it. I would prefer to call it a neutral tax system. Such a system would permit decisions to be made on economic reality. It would also allow the government to increase its revenues and yet not have the deleterious effect that increasing marginal tax rates would have under the system that exists today. The system that exists today is a system of high rates that are reduced by incentives and by concessions.

To give you some idea of the magnitude of those concessions and incentives, I would like to read to you some material I have on tax rates paid by two or three of the larger firms in Canada. In 1982, TransCanada PipeLines Limited, with $4.7 billion in assets and pretax earnings of $182 million paid an effective tax rate of 7 per cent; Husky Oil, with assets of $561 million and pretax earnings of $22 million paid an effective tax rate of 5 per cent; Consolidated Bathurst, with pretax earnings of $79 million paid no tax in 1982, and in fact claimed a tax credit of $3.6 million; Shell had a tax credit in 1982 of $47 million.

I am not decrying that. There is nothing wrong with that; they made their investments under the rules of the Income Tax Act, and they were able to defer their taxes, and their rates were brought down to those levels. But the size of the deferred tax account in Canada will perhaps stagger you: In 1978, deferred taxes totalled $2.78 billion; in 1980, they had risen to $24.24 billion. As any good tax accountant will tell you, a tax deferred is a tax saved. Beyond that, the Economic Council of Canada has pointed out that the total of the tax reductions and tax incentives to corporations in Canada is approximately $18 billion a year.

There has been a transfer of the burden of tax from corporations to individuals which is really quite astonishing. In 1974, individuals paid $1.17 billion in taxes and corporations $1.05 billion, just about the same amount; in 1982, individuals paid $26 billion and corporations paid $8 billion, less than a third of the amount.

Again, there is nothing wrong with what corporations are doing. Those incentives were granted to them so that they would go out and make investments and do things, and they have simply taken advantage of those incentives, and that is why their tax rates have been lowered. Individuals do the same thing.

What we have actually done is created the impression that we have a high tax rate system, that corporate rates, other than the low rate for small businesses, are roughly in the 50 per cent level, and that individual top marginal rates are in the 50 to 55 per cent level. But through a series of incentives, we have encouraged certain investments and, thereby, have distorted the economy.

I cannot feel that government has such precise knowledge or omniscience about where the economy is going that they can create an incentive and say that that is in the best interests of the economy. I would have thought it was a lot better if governments decided to leave the matter to the decisions of investors and individuals and not tell them that they ought to be able to lower their taxes by investing in MURBS—where, for the most part, what people have done is overpaid for a minority interest in a housing or apartment development that is now illiquid. That is not what we want government to do; what we want government to do is to create the right climate for investment.

That is why I espouse the idea of the neutral tax system. I think it would be possible to lower rates substantially for corporations and for individuals and to get away from all of these tax incentives which so distort the economy and the decision-making that they create a non-growth situation rather than a real growth situation. So, I suggest to the present government that they give some real consideration to that, and I want to warn them that it will not be easy. People do not like to give up the right to throw their money away on cockamamie oil deals or on movies. The present Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, you will recall, tried in a budget to reduce the overall tax rate in Canada to a maximum of 50 per cent. While he succeeded in that, the quid pro quo was to get rid of many tax concessions and tax incentives. The fact of the matter is that we ended up with a tax rate around 50 per cent, but we still have the concessions. People love the concessions; corporations love the concessions, and the more money you have the more you seem to love the concessions, and that is what is really wrong with concessions. The concessions are taken advantage of by people who have bigger incomes; people with smaller incomes do not take advantage of them. Now, would it not be far better to have a tax rate that was low, was fair, and was as neutral as possible and, at the same time, allow people to make their own decisions?

It was reported that five or six thousand people with incomes over $250,000 a year did not pay a cent in tax in Canada last year or the year before. You cannot tell me that people do not look at that and say that the tax system is unfair, and if those people earning $250,000 a year can beat the tax system, then sure as hell they will try to beat the tax system, and that is what has happened.

The former government took the first step when the Honourable Senator MacEachen was the Minister of Finance to move towards a lower rate and a more neutral system and tried to remove some of these incentives that are in the system.

I hope the present government does something to move in that same direction, because through that there is the opportunity for real growth. You are not going to get growth in this country by raising government spending; you are not going to get growth in this country by raising taxes; however, I think you will get growth in this country through a neutral tax system and, at the same time, you will reduce the deficit.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Murray speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have a few words to say in closing the debate.

Having listened to a brilliant and somewhat devastating analysis of the gerry-built taxation system which we have inherited in this country, I wondered whether Senator MacEachen might feel moved to spring to the defence of the system which he and his colleagues are responsible for putting in place over these many years.

Little did I think when I was given the assignment of introducing this bill to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act that I would be confronted with a challenge to deal with such exotica as the proposed flat tax rate. The honourable senator will forgive me if I am not prepared to present a detailed argument today on such a matter as that. I will say, however, that as usual the honourable senator has combined his discussion of this particular bill with a very interesting and sound analysis of the economic situation of the country for which we are all grateful. I believe he correctly identified many of the questions, indeed, the dilemmas that are confronting the Minister of Finance and his colleagues today as they prepare their budget. I did notice that while he called upon the government to give consideration to attacking in an organized, coherent and comprehensive way such matters as distortions in the system that are caused by so many tax expenditures, incentives and so on, he cautioned us that it would not be easy. He would have noticed, as most of us have, that within the past few days the Minister of Finance was at some pains to make it clear that while corporate tax reform is certainly on his agenda, it is not going to be found in that comprehensive fashion without consultation and it is not going to be found in the budget that will be presented in the spring of this year.

In stating his own preference for lower taxes over increased spending as a way of stimulating economic growth, I thought that the honourable senator effectively disowned the philosophy espoused by his party when in government and the programs that lead us today to implement this increase in taxation. We are implementing an increase in taxation precisely to pay for a philosophy on the part of the previous government that held that the way to stimulate economic growth was to spend more government money on it.

In any case I was very interested in everything he had to say about the state of the economy and the effect of the policy of the Bank of Canada in recent years on the rate of inflation which, as he noted, has been going down. Real interest rates, I think he would agree, are still too high if you look at the level of interest rates over the rate of inflation, but it is to be noted that in the past 19 consecutive weeks the bank rate has fallen. Even there the indicators seem to be moving in a healthy direction. I continue to think, and some of us continue to insist, that the previous government made the situation much worse than it need be. There is some argument whether the Governor of the Bank of Canada was following a monetary policy or an exchange rate policy during most of that time. I think that the argument can be validly put forward that the previous government implemented policies which had the effect of putting downward pressure on the dollar, and that one of the reasons for high interest rates is that the Governor of the Bank of Canada felt impelled to take measures that had the effect of keeping interest rates high in order to stabilize the Canadian dollar and to protect it from falling further.

To come back to the bill which is before us, and without foreclosing the opportunity which, I trust, will come to us one of these days for a longer and more organized debate on many of the interesting points that the honourable senator has put forward on the economy, economic policy and monetary policy in general, I should like to deal with some of the specific points that he made concerning the bill. I thank him for enlivening our afternoon in the Senate by quoting so copiously from the Honourable John Crosbie, although I must observe that he has a lot of work to do on his accent. Quoting John Crosbie, I kept thinking, is to imagine the devil quoting scripture. One could quote John Crosbie in favour of or against almost any proposition. Everything depends upon the context in which the statements were made. In any event, it was a very entertaining episode in the debate this afternoon.

I repeat that the situation that faced the new government was as follows: Mr. Lalonde in his budget of April 1983 set out a spending program which he called a special recovery program. He stated very directly that he proposed not to impose the tax to raise the revenue to pay for the program until October 1984 so that his spending program could have its full effect and work its way through the economy, and so that the increased taxes would not impede economic growth. The funds were either committed or spent. We were left to pay for the programs and, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, he had very little choice but to proceed with the scheduled increase of 1 per cent in the general rate of federal sales tax.

Senator Everett asked about the new appeals system. I am aware that the previous government proposed, as Senator Everett pointed out, that a new appeals system be incorporated in the Excise Tax Act. I simply remind him that the Minister of Finance in his economic statement last November indicated his intention to deal with the administration and appeals proposals relating to the Excise Tax Act at a later date and after further consultations. The position of the minister is that some private sector groups have expressed concern about certain aspects of the proposed system. His statement is that the government will be reviewing these concerns together with proposals made by the Progressive Conservative task force on Revenue Canada before proceeding, but our commitment to introduce a new appeals system stands. I am confident that in the life of this Parliament that new appeals system will be put in place.

The honourable senator also referred to the rebate of 1.5 cents per litre on the excise tax on gasoline and asked why we could not put in place a system similar to what we are putting in place for the sales tax rebate. In that respect I am informed by the government that a similar system will be put in place with respect to the excise tax on gasoline to enable retailers to recover the excise tax on behalf of customers holding bulk permits.

Finally, Senator Everett pointed out that we, the Progressive Conservative Party, had undertaken to remove the federal sales tax from gasoline and diesel fuel for the primary producers. That is the case. Implementing this undertaking is something else again. There is a technical problem with its implementation, and it is our contention that the rebate consists of an amount approximately equal to the tax. The explanation that is given by the minister is, of course, that this ad valorem tax is imposed at an earlier stage than at the point of sale to the end user. As Senator Everett has pointed out, the customer obtains the rebate through a lower price. The minister stated that the amount of tax paid is not readily determinable by either the end-user, that is, the purchaser, or the vendor at the time of sale, and that these factors affect the design of the rebate program: First, since the exact amount of the tax is not known in many cases, a rebate of a specific amount, approximately equal to the tax, is administratively simpler for both vendors and purchasers; and secondly, the minister said that, since the tax has already been paid by the manufacturer or wholesaler, it is necessary for either the retail vendor or the purchaser to file a refund claim. In terms of Bill C-17, it would be the retail vendor who would file the claim.

The position of the government is that we have gone as far as possible to facilitate recovery of the rebate to primary producers by allowing a direct rebate where the fuel is purchased from a person with tax-free inventories and by allowing bulk sellers to credit the amount of the rebate to primary producers and apply for the rebate where the retailer wishes to do so. In other cases, the only method remaining is for the primary producer to file a rebate claim and recover the amount directly from Revenue Canada.

One final question raised by Senator Everett had to do with a commitment which was made with respect to the fuel tax rebate program for the upstream oil and gas sector. I may say that the position of the government is that, given limited resources and the need to obtain the maximum benefit possible from any expenditure program, the government believes that other new initiatives, specifically related to the problems currently being experienced in the petroleum industry, are a more appropriate response to the needs of this sector at this time. That is the position of the government in reply to the point raised by Senator Everett.

[Senator Murray.]

Again, I thank the honourable senator for a most interesting contribution to this debate and a most interesting commentary on economic and monetary policy which, I hope, before too long, we will have an opportunity to pursue in debate. I note that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, of which Senator Everett is a former chairman, proposes, unless I am mistaken, to do quite a thorough study of the effects of deficit financing and of the public debt on the economy. Certainly, some weeks ago that suggestion was raised in that committee, and I believe it is being actively pursued by the committee. I might, therefore, suggest that Senator Everett may wish to return to his old stomping grounds and make the kind of informed and valuable contribution we know he is capable of making.

In thanking him, I have no hesitation in commending this bill to the support of honourable senators on second reading.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Murray, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT PUBLIC LANDS GRANTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved third reading of Bill C-13, to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CURRENCY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, for the second reading of Bill C-21, intitled: "An Act to amend the Currency Act".—(Honourable Senator Hastings).

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in place of Senator Hastings on a bill which is, perhaps, one of the shorter ones to come before the Senate in recent years.

Before I discuss the bill, may I join with the others who extended their warm congratulations to our new colleagues in the Senate. Senators MacDonald, Robertson and Barootes bring to this chamber excellent credentials, and I am sure they will make a distinguished contribution to our deliberations. All of us on this side join in these congratulations.

Honourable senators, I have a particular interest in this bill because, at one time, I was Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I was, in a sense, one of the federal "founding fathers" of the effort to bring the Winter Olympic Games to Calgary.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: This is certainly a bill worthy of the support of all of us. Senator Nurgitz ably and eloquently described the detail of the bill yesterday. The fact is that Olympic Games cost money. Indeed, some people look on the vast expenditures involved in Olympic Games as nothing but a wasteful outlay of public funds. The fact is that a well-run Winter or Summer Olympics can realize, in net, a great deal of money for the host country. Witness the Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

I have had the privilege of working with the Calgary Olympic Organization, a group of able, responsible and dedicated people who know what they are doing.

The proposal to be found in Bill C-21 calls for the addition of only two lines to the Currency Act to permit the Mint to produce a $20 silver coin which would form the basis for an Olympic series. There would be ten issues of this $20 coin honouring ten Olympic events—two in 1985, four in 1986 and four in 1987.

There is not only a domestic market for these coins, but a market in the United States and throughout the world. The sooner these coins are on the market, the sooner they will realize needed revenue for the Calgary Winter Olympics. Senator Nurgitz pointed out yesterday that time is of the essence, and it certainly is. We should not delay in giving our approval to this measure.

It is suggested that the potential revenue from the coin program could amount to over $50 million. Honourable senators, because of the high domestic and international interest, I have no doubt that that will be the case.

Already, the people associated with the Calgary Olympics have demonstrated their skill by virtue of the fact that they have negotiated the largest television contract in the history of the Winter Olympics, an agreement calling for over $300 million from the ABC television network. This was substantially beyond the original anticipated figure.

The people organizing the Calgary Winter Olympics are determined that the games will be a financial as well as an artistic success. The games are an opportunity to attract thousands of visitors to Canada. It is also an opportunity for Canada to showcase the finest athletic talent we are able to offer, and to showcase the finest talent the world is able to offer in Winter Olympic sports.

In conjunction with the Calgary Winter Olympics is a major "excellence" program designed to improve greatly Canada's showing at the Olympics. I believe at Lake Placid we finished in thirteenth place. At Calgary, we hope to move up to third or fourth place, at least. The efforts of some of our athletes in Sarajevo would indicate we are making splendid progress toward that goal.

We have a federal commitment to the Calgary Olympics of $200 million, and I am delighted to hear that the new government is going to honour that commitment. When we were in office, we said that we hoped to draw that revenue from non-tax sources and through stamps, coins and lotteries. I presume that is also the intention of the present government. I know that these are not easy times for any government. Money is in short supply. But I am sure that through ticket sales to these events, through stamp and coin programs, through television and radio revenues, and, if needed, through a special Olympic lottery to help pay the cost involved—the Canadian people will respond positively.

Before I resume my place, I wish to suggest something that I believe requires the attention of all of us regardless of party. When I was minister it was a source of continuing concern to me that many smaller Canadian communities have never had the opportunity of sharing significantly in any federal or provincial funds to build sports facilities of any kind. Existing policy means that if Canadian cities are large enough—and cities such as Montreal, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Toronto, Calgary or Vancouver are large enough—to host international events, then they automatically qualify for major programs of financial assistance from federal and provincial governments in hosting such events. World's Fairs, Olympics, Pan-American and Commonwealth Games are included.

During my time as minister I felt, and I still feel that we should put in place, if at all possible, a program to help some of the smaller Canadian communities to build facilities—a program to help amateurs in the first instance, but which, in an auxiliary way would assist even some professional teams and thereby help the economies of many communities across Canada through leases and rentals and game revenues. Such a program is needed. For example, the maritime provinces do not have a team in the so-called national Canadian Football League. I recall the negotiations that were held in Dartmouth and Halifax when people said "Can't you provide us with some loan money or some guarantee to help build a stadium?" But we had no mechanism in place then and we have none now to help the maritime provinces build a stadium, yet, they like the rest of us pay their taxes, are good Canadians, and have contributed richly to the athletic development of this nation. But those maritime communities are automatically disqualified from being in the CFL, because they require some kind of assistance to build the necessary stadium, and they are not in a position to host multi-sport world events.

Edmonton, of course, built the Commonwealth Stadium with federal and provincial help because it hosted the Commonwealth Games. That stadium represents a vast investment by Canadian taxpayers. I supported that investment, as did all of us. But I ask myself: Should there not be a program in place to help people in Saskatoon, for example, and through loans or guarantees, or even partial matching grants to enable them to have a facility to accommodate curling, amateur hockey and other athletic teams as well as trade fairs and conventions, and even ultimately to have an NHL franchise? Why should Saskatoon or Regina be excluded? Why should programs be only for the big "have" cities and not for the "have-nots"?

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Senator Perrault: A few months ago I attended the World Junior baseball tournament in Kindersley, Saskatchewan, and I have never seen a better community effort in my entire life. The whole community and surrounding towns turned out to host "the world" at this fine event. They did it through that splendid community initiative that we find in the great province of Saskatchewan. One town would host a team from Puerto Rico, another would do the same for a team from the United States, and another for the team from Taiwan. All participating national teams were similarly hosted. It was the greatest outpouring of community co-operation and support that I have seen. Yet, Kindersley did not receive any major help from the federal government, because it did not qualify under our stringent federal standards that somehow a centre must be in the "big leagues" before it can qualify for meaningful federal grants. So in Kindersley they have a deficit of $100,000. I saw that tournament and the people of Kindersley and district do not deserve to be burdened with that kind of deficit, which is significant for them but which is minuscule in comparison with some of the other deficits that have been faced by other federally assisted cities across this country in their hosting efforts.

There should be a program to assist such smaller centres. There should be a program in place whereby we can help the smaller Canadian communities on a matching grant basis, or through loans, grants or guarantees. We should help as many Canadians as possible, regardless of where they live, to have an opportunity to develop their athletic potential. If such a program went ahead—and I urge it on the government—I believe it would be a way to reduce substantially antisocial behaviour on the part of all age groups and it would be a constructive way to channel activities through athletic endeavour.

At the present time consideration is being given to building a domed stadium in Toronto. We built one in Vancouver, which did not involve one federal dollar bill. But Vancouver is a large centre and we were fortunate to be able to build that facility with provincial resources. We could not have done it had Vancouver been a small town. At some point in time we hope to have a major league baseball team there, which will bring in at least $85 million per year to the community. In its own way, a CFL football team in the Atlantic provinces would generate substantial economic activity and would help Atlantic communities such as Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John, St. John's, Moncton and others. It would attract many tourist dollars and would benefit amateur sport. A stadium built with provincial, local, private and federal resources would be a great asset. I support this bill, as I know all honourable senators will. The support will be unanimous, as it should be.

Following the Olympics in Calgary we will have a legacy of fine hockey, bob-sledding, speedskating and skiing facilities to train Canadians from coast to coast. Let us help to provide opportunities for everyone in this country regardless of where they live. If it means helping to build a small arena to seat 2,000 people, that will develop the athletic potential of many of our young people, then let us consider such a program.

[Senator Perrault.]

Honourable senators, I do not advocate what is merely another big giveaway program, lading out cash. At the present time we cannot afford to do that. But if there is community initiative to construct new sports facilities—construction that will mean jobs and thereafter a better community, then let us go ahead and support those initiatives.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Let us remember the smaller communities from coast to coast such as St. John's, Saint John, Moncton, Saskatoon, Red Deer, Halifax and Dartmouth and many others.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): What's the matter with Brandon?

Senator Perrault: Yes, Brandon, and a nearby even smaller community—Pearson—where some of my family originated. My comments on this bill have been prompted by my experience at the Kindersley baseball tournament, when that small Saskatchewan town hosted the world and did a wonderful job for Canada. They were superb ambassadors for Canada and they have received not one federal dollar bill to assist them in their present dilemma. I urge honourable senators to support this measure.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Nurgitz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Perrault for the confidence he expressed in the marketing program, and, more importantly, in the success of the games. I particularly thank him for pointing out, as I obviously failed to do yesterday, the long-term benefits that will follow from the games being held in Calgary. In this connection I am thinking, in terms of my own province, of the Pan-Am pool, which is a reminder of the 1966 Pan-Am Games, which has facilitated the training of many Canadian athletes. I thank the honourable senator for that.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Nurgitz, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85 (No. 2)

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), for the second reading of the Bill C-11, intituled: "An Act to provide borrowing authority".—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

● (1550)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, no one would describe a bill seeking authority to borrow a creative act emanating from the imagination of a new government with a fresh mandate to bring about change. Bills like this are hardy perennials, sometimes biannuals. Of course, we know that necessity itself drove the government to introduce this bill to finance its program. All that was required was to include these spectacular amounts in a standard form that rests on the desks of the officers of the Department of Finance. I had intended to take a somewhat technical approach to this question but the highly partisan approach of the previous speaker, Senator Murray, induces me to emulate his example and to make a few political comments.

Senator Murray talked about the former government. I would like to talk about a more relevant and current subject, namely, the present government. We know that the government has been in office for better than four months. We also know that even after that period of time it is still without a legislative program. Honourable senators need only look at the order paper of this chamber. Every item, apart from this standard proposal, is the work of the former government.

I suggest honourable senators also take a look at the order paper that was presented in the House of Commons on the first day of this week when Parliament returned after its Christmas break. There were four items under Government Orders. There was Bill C-15 dealing with investment in Canada. This is a new bill. There was Bill C-19 dealing with the re-organization of Bell Canada—old stuff! Bill C-20 is to amend various communication acts, also old stuff. What was surprising was the appearance of Bill C-22, a bill to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development in Halifax. That centre is in operation. It is unnecessary to bring in a bill. It is clearly an effort to fill the pages of the order paper in the absence of a legislative program. There have been a few odds and ends brought forward since Monday of this week and we shall see later whether they too are not old stuff!

Honourable senators, the fact is that the government is paralyzed either by indecision or inactivity.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Or both.

Senator MacEachen: It passes my understanding why a new government with a fresh and impressive mandate should have lost its momentum so early, why it has wasted its time, these past precious four months, on surface matters and has virtually neglected the substance of policy formulation. Policy momentum and policy decisions are implemented through legislative action, and we do not have any legislative programs. The clear signal from this legislative unpreparedness is that the government is stalled. I have not seen anything like it since the Diefenbaker era when Gordon Churchill brought the House of Commons together to deal with a blank order paper. Of course, the public is not yet aware of the situation. Certainly the government has shown us that it has no agenda, let alone an agenda for change.

In addition to that, there is increasing confusion in important areas of public policy. The handling of the question of social programs has been an epic farce. Defence and foreign policy is also in a state of confusion. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pushes for peace and the Minister of National Defence pushes for a defence build-up. The Secretary of State for External Affairs extols the peace movement and the Minister of National Defence scorns it. He ingratiate himself with his counterpart in the United States by belittling Canadian citizens who hold views different from his own. I have been asking myself, "Who speaks for the government in the field of foreign policy and defence?" Is it the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the defence minister, the Ambassador for Disarmament, Mr. Roche, or the Ambassador to the United Nations, Mr. Lewis? Who really speaks for the government, because each holds and expounds views different from the other? If I had time I would document them.

I want to tell the Leader of the Government that we are prepared to deal with this item but we want more than a borrowing bill. We want a legislative program here and in the House of Commons, but we have not had it yet. In fact, this bill carries a number of messages. First, it reveals, standing as it does as the only genuine government bill before us, that the lack of preparedness on the legislative front is acute. Of course, the second message is that the government is prepared to disregard almost blithely the policy positions and the commitments it espoused while in opposition. In fact, it is prepared, as we have seen in a number of instances, to treat with contempt its past approaches and positions.

Senator Doody reminded us that when this bill was introduced in the House of Commons it sought additional borrowing authority not only for the current fiscal year ending on March 21, 1985, but in addition it made the bold request that authorization be given now for borrowing of $16 billion for the fiscal year 1985-86. That was a brazen ploy. Brazen because the government embraced a course which it fiercely condemned and resisted when its members were in opposition. Brazen because the minister and the senator who introduced the bill provided no economic or financial information for the fiscal year for which the $16 billion was requested. Of course, the amount has been reduced to $12 billion. Honourable senators will recall that in 1978 the then Minister of Finance, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, sought borrowing authority to cover two fiscal years. The Conservative members of the House of Commons, in minority, forced the government. I would like to read to the senators on the other side of this chamber the motion in amendment to the bill which was put forward by the members of the opposition on that occasion, since it summarizes better than I can the objection which still prevails against seeking borrowing authority for a subsequent fiscal year. The amendment, moved by Mr. Stevens, who is now the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion, was and I quote:

● (1600)

This house holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for massive borrowing in a future fiscal year in advance of any budget presentation for that year is objectionable in principle.

Yesterday, Senator Doody asked us for $12 billion for the next fiscal year, in the absence of any budget presentation.

What happened in 1978? The opposition, which was in minority in the House of Commons, persisted until the bill was subsequently amended and the reference to the subsequent fiscal year, which was 1979/80, was totally dropped. I have been asking myself for some time now, as I have been considering this bill, whether we ought not to take a leaf from the book of the opposition of that day—then the minority—and request that the granting of borrowing authority for the subsequent fiscal year be reconsidered by the government. We know, as Senator Doody pointed out, that because of the strong opposition voice in the other place, the amount sought for the next fiscal year was reduced from $16 billion to $12 billion, but the taint is still there. It is a request for borrowing authority in a subsequent fiscal year, a procedure which members of the opposition found objectionable and succeeded in purging from the bill in 1978. Senator Doody comes forward, I think, with a great show of brazenness in saying: "Give us $12 billion for 1985/86. On the other hand, we will not give you any financial or economic information upon which your judgment should be reasonably based; we will not give you a fiscal plan; we will not give you a budget."

Honourable senators, I suggest that the government is flouting the rights of Parliament in order to meet its own dilatory timetable. The government has been in office already for four months. We have not yet had a budget and none is expected until April. Why the delay in the presentation of a budget when, as the Conservatives said, the situation cried out for correction and change? This delay causes this predicament. Why is it not possible for us to have a budget in February, for example, in order that we could have the necessary information before approving the $12 billion estimated for borrowing for the first three months of 1985/86? I say, honourable senators, that an earlier budget than now proposed would satisfy urgent national requirements; it would satisfy parliamentary requirements and, in my opinion, it would permit the government to avoid the cynical repudiation of its former views. We intend to press for that in order to discharge our responsibilities in an informed manner.

I do not object to the government coming forward and seeking parliamentary approval for its borrowing requirements in a timely manner. However, the government has put itself and Parliament in a predicament by its unjustified delay in producing a budget and by taking an inflexible and uninformed approach. I doubt whether any of us thought that the government, with a fresh mandate, would ever delay for seven months in bringing in a budget.

[Senator MacEachen.]

The defence of the government's case in the other place was left to the Minister of State for Finance. She argued basically that debt management factors made the passage of the bill mandatory and, by inference, that the rights of Parliament to adequate information were a secondary consideration. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that good debt management requires good political management. They go hand in hand. Good political management required that the relevant information, both economic and financial, should be available for the fiscal year 1985/86 and in the hands of members of Parliament before they were asked to authorize $16 billion in additional borrowing.

In this case, we have had bad political management. The fact of the matter is that the government argued that the rights of Parliament must be subordinated to the principles of good debt management. I suggest that both should be respected, and they can be respected by the presentation of a budget which is justified on that and other grounds. It is Part II of the bill which I find as objectionable as the Conservative opposition found in 1978 and which they fought to the point where the provision was dropped. Would they now object if another opposition stood on principle and asked that a similar provision be dropped for the same arguments?

I would like to turn to Part I of the bill, because it shows how unreasonable members of the present government really could be in opposition. I hope that I shall never be as unreasonable. If the Conservative Party had behaved reasonably in opposition, there would be no need for the government today to be asking for additional borrowing authority for the current fiscal year. Here again, the government created its own problem. We know that the Minister of Finance told us that the total financial requirements for this year are $29.8 billion, a very large amount. That is the sum in the statement of the Minister of Finance. The former Minister of Finance sought borrowing authority for the current fiscal year in the amount of $29.5 billion. At that time, he made a reasonable case, but the unreasonable opposition insisted that that amount be reduced by $5 billion. That mistake is haunting them today. If they had accepted that amount, they would have found it unnecessary to come to Parliament today for additional borrowing authority for 1984/85.

I ask them again to take a look at the $2 billion non-lapsing contingent in the bill. I think that is all right. Mr. Lalonde, the former minister, had a $4 billion non-lapsing contingent in his former bill which was deleted at the request of the opposition because they found it outrageous. However, once again they have swallowed themselves by initially having opposed the $4 billion non-lapsing contingent and now by coming themselves and asking for $2 billion. It was not the amount that was in question. It was the principle of the thing.

I would like to move on now to discuss a number of other considerations quite apart from the legislative considerations. The Minister of Finance projects the deficit for this fiscal year to be $34.5 billion. That is $5 billion higher than that projected by the previous Minister of Finance for the same year. That is a very large discrepancy, and we have had no adequate explanation from anybody as to why that discrepancy exists, and we need explanations. We have not received any from ministers or from officials. We do know one thing, that while ministers take the flak, officials prepare the projections.

I want to know how they could have been so wrong back in February, and that leads to another question, which is: If they were so wrong in February, then could they have been right in November? Can we have any more confidence in the projections and the economic data upon which the Minister of Finance prepared his proposals to Parliament in September than we had in those of the preceding February?

Of course, when one turns to the next fiscal year, one knows that the budgetary deficit forecast for that fiscal year, 1985-86, is $37.1 billion. The former Minister of Finance, for the same fiscal year, projected a deficit, but the new deficit projection is $9 billion higher. It increased by $9 billion from February to November, and we have not been given any explanation for that. We have been told, however, that these abrupt and massive changes in the amount of the deficit emanated from an updated set of economic assumptions.

I want to quote to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, as I believe I did before, a few sentences from the document entitled "A New Direction for Canada" tabled by the Minister of Finance on the evening he made his financial statement. At page 95 the following appears:

The projections are based on an updated set of economic assumptions, and can be viewed as status quo projections assuming no change in government policy. They reflect the "state of the books" as the government found them and do not reflect the policy changes announced in the Economic Statement of November 8.

I have been asking, without success, since November 14 for the date of the updated set of economic assumptions. I noticed that yesterday the Leader of the Government in the Senate made a good effort to table responses, but absent from that series of replies was information on when the government received those updated economic assumptions.

I think that now is the time to insist upon answers. What is the date of the "updated set of economic assumptions"? When were they first conveyed to the new government? That reluctance to provide information is only matched in the pursuit of secrecy by the refusal of the Minister of Finance to give information on the impact of his so-called new policies on jobs and growth. I must say that we are going to ask for this key information. Evasion is no longer credible. Even worse is the minister's plea that increased confidence is not measurable. I agree with that because there has been no increased confidence in the form of new investment since the new government took office.

We will be asking the ministers and the officials when the bill is before committee for the impact on growth and employment arising from the policy changes introduced by the Minister of Finance on November 8. We want to know what is the impact of the withdrawal of $4.2 billion from the economy in the form of reduced expenditures and revenue recovery measures. We know that that kind of a withdrawal from the economy will reduce economic activity, and will reduce the number of jobs in the country. We want to know by how much. We want to know from the officials the projections which they have prepared and which they have said they have on jobs and growth as a result of the impact of these policy changes.

The minister will not tell us now. We may hope that the full confession will come when the budget comes, but we cannot wait that long because we have been confronted with a bill that asks us to provide borrowing authority for the Government of Canada for the fiscal year 1985-86.

I must say that the Minister of Finance has developed what I consider to be a one-dimensional economic policy; it is to achieve economic growth and jobs through expenditure cuts and deficit reduction. Before one can embrace unreservedly that one-dimensional economic policy of the Minister of Finance, one must know what impact the pursuit of that policy will have on social programs, on foreign policy, on defence policy, and on all of the components of the total spending system of Canada. We have not had that yet. The Minister of Finance told us on the evening of his economic statement that he intended to seek savings in the area of social programs in order to effect deficit reduction. In fact, he said that the government could focus more money effectively on those who need it and also "save some money for the federal treasury in order to contribute to the overall goal of deficit reduction." He had in mind the erosion of universality in order to achieve reductions in the deficit.

We know that over the past weekend the Minister of Finance was repudiated by his colleagues, and we are now assured that no encroachment whatsoever will be made on total expenditures in the social envelope, and that there is nothing in there for the Minister of Finance in order for him to implement his one-dimensional economic policy.

Where will it come from if it does not come from the social envelope? Will he implement his policy through reductions in the defence budget? But we have been assured that there will be a defence buildup. Will he achieve his policy by a reduction of transfers to the provinces? Will the Prime Minister permit any breach in the party-driven harmony that exists between the provinces and the federal government in order to achieve savings that will permit the Minister of Finance to achieve his one-dimensional economic policy? Time will tell.

I think the Minister of Finance has put himself in a box, and he has been kept in the box by his colleagues in government because they have shown their first reaction by rejecting his proposal that he would achieve savings through reduction in the social programs area. What we need now, honourable senators, is a comprehensive economic policy. We need a budget. We need leadership that will show the country that somebody is in charge and knows where this government is going. At the present time every indication is that the government is in confusion and that it is adrift four months after it has received such a spectacular mandate from the people of Canada.

● (1620)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have little to add to what was said earlier in our discussions. I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his comments. I should like to assure him that we take no pride or pleasure in this bill. It is an ongoing tradition in Canada, and has been for some time, that a large and unfortunate borrowing bill is necessary to finance the ongoing maintenance and sustenance of our country and our economy. The money must be found to finance the programs and policies that are in place. This government has absolutely no choice but to borrow money to finance its debt management program and to help finance its programs.

I take some pride in saying that this country is blessed with a tremendous social support structure. I am pleased to see that the government has made a commitment that it will not be tampered with. However, we must be prepared to face the fact that in paying for this social support structure we will have to pay the price somewhere along the line, and sacrifices will have to be made in some areas. We have been living high off the hog for quite a while. This government has pledged itself to come to grips with this.

The Leader of the Opposition outlined with some clarity the terrible dilemma that the Minister of Finance finds himself in in trying to establish a coherent, sensible, logical and sane economic climate in this country out of the chaos that he inherited when he took office. It is not a pleasant or an easy task. It can be said with a great deal of assurance that the population of Canada felt that the time had come for change. They made that decision abundantly clear on September 4. A legislative program is being put together and an economic policy is being developed.

The honourable gentlemen opposite are asking that this resolve itself in the four to six months that the government has been in office, and that answers should be found to all the problems that the honourable gentlemen opposite busied themselves with in creating over the past twenty years. I think that that is quite unreasonable.

I think that the anguish and the frustration that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition expresses with this government is quite understandable. Being in opposition is a new role for him and is not one that he finds himself comfortable in. I

I have a great deal more difficulty in trying to understand the attitude of the opposition toward the government in terms of information, policy outlines and budgets. An economic statement was brought forward a short time ago in which the Minister of Finance outlined the position of government. He laid before the people of Canada the economic situation as we see it. He explained it, and he assured us that a budget would be forthcoming. In a few months' time that budget will be presented and it will chart a course which this government will follow during the coming year. In order for that to happen, of course, money has to be found to finance the ongoing programs and to clear this huge debt that we are saddled with. This borrowing bill attempts to address that problem.

I can only commend the bill to you. As I said, I take no pride in it. I have had occasion to sponsor many borrowing bills of a minute nature compared to this one, but I have always been worried about them and I never did like them. I must say that the surprise that the honourable leader shows at the difference in the actual deficit and the projected deficit amazes me. All of us at one time or another have been victims of projections of officials and finance departments and occasionally, but rarely, do you come out on the right side of it. I know that from time to time it has happened that the projections will be wrong in the right direction but more often, unfortunately, they are wrong in the wrong direction. Whether that trend will change, I cannot say. Sometimes I am too cynical for my own good. At any rate, I doubt very much that perfection will be found in estimates or in projections. However, I am sure the struggle is ongoing.

This bill will be referred to committee. I understand that the committee is meeting tomorrow morning and that the Minister of State for Finance announced that she will be available with officials from her department to answer questions of a technical or policy nature. I commend this bill to the Senate for second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Senator Doody bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

HEALTH

ILL EFFECTS OF SMOKING—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Inquiry:

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, January 24, 1985, I will call the attention of the Senate to the ill effects of smoking on smokers and non-smokers alike.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, January 24, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Hon. Rhéal Bélisle, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented the following report:

Thursday, January 24, 1985

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT (Statutory Instruments No. 29)

Your Committee submits again to both Houses of Parliament the criteria it will use for the review and scrutiny of Statutory Instruments:

Whether any Regulation or other Statutory Instrument within its terms of reference, in the judgment of the Committee:

1. (a) is not authorized by the terms of the enabling statute, or, if it is made pursuant to the prerogative, its terms are not in conformity with the common law, or
(b) does not clearly state therein the precise authority for the making of the Instrument;
2. has not complied with the provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act with respect to transmittal, recording, numbering or publication;
3. (a) has not complied with any tabling provision or other condition set forth in the enabling statute, or
(b) does not clearly state therein the time and manner of compliance with any such condition;
4. makes some unusual or unexpected use of the powers conferred by the enabling statute or by the prerogative;
5. trespasses unduly on the rights and liberties of the subject;
6. (a) tends directly or indirectly to exclude the jurisdiction of the Courts without explicit authorization therefor in the enabling statute, or

(b) makes the rights and liberties of the subject dependent on administrative discretion rather than on the judicial process;

7. purports to have retroactive effect where the enabling statute confers no express authority so to provide or, where such authority is so provided, the retroactive effect appears to be oppressive, harsh or unnecessary;
  8. appears for any reason to infringe the rule of law or the rules of natural justice;
  9. provides without good and sufficient reason that it shall come into force before registration by the Clerk of the Privy Council;
  10. in the absence of express authority to that effect in the enabling statute or prerogative, appears to amount to the exercise of a substantive legislative power properly the subject of direct parliamentary enactment, and not merely to the formulation of subordinate provisions of a technical or administrative character properly the subject of delegated legislation;
  11. without express provision to the effect having been made in the enabling statute or prerogative, imposes a fine, imprisonment or other penalty, or shifts the onus of proof of innocence to the person accused of an offence;
  12. imposes a charge on the public revenues or contains provisions requiring payment to be made to the Crown or to any other authority in consideration of any licence or service to be rendered, or prescribes the amount of any such charge or payment, without express authority to that effect having been provided in the enabling statute or prerogative;
  13. is not in conformity with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms or with the Canadian Bill of Rights;
  14. is unclear in its meaning or otherwise defective in its drafting;
  15. for any other reason requires elucidation as to its form or purport.
- Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Joint Chairman

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—QUORUM

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g):

That the quorum of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Official Languages Policy and Programs be six members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when four members are present so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the motion could be put again.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The motion is as follows:

That the quorum of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages Policy and Programs be six members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition, are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when four members are present so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition, are represented;—

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, that certainly has not been the practice in the past in the case of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, where we have always acted in a completely non-partisan way. We have always resisted and have never in 11 years had the requirement that you had to have the government and the opposition represented. That was one of the reasons, I might say, why we were able to carry on during the bell ringing episode because the government side could not, in effect, veto the committee meeting by not attending. I should like to inquire whether this is the way it has always been in the case of the Official Languages Committee. Do they act in a partisan way and, therefore, have to have this in?

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Or why do they not follow the same practices as the Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps the honourable senator would let the joint chairman of the committee respond to that.

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, the same motion has been passed for the last four or five sessions.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, I want to say a few words about this motion.

The honourable senator opposite has just said that this motion is necessary so that a review of the Official Languages Policies may be undertaken. He mentioned the bell ringing incident at the other place. The honourable senators might recall that I was at the time co-chairman for the House of Commons while my honourable friend, Senator Murray, was co-chairman for the Senate on the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages.

I listened carefully to the wording of the motion. Of course, I would rather have the text before me, but as I understood it both co-chairmen must be present for the committee to operate.

I listened to the English version, and I thought, Mr. Speaker, that you said "chairmen" and not "chairman". Could I have some clarification on this point? I shall continue my comments afterwards.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If you wish, honourable Senator Corbin, I can read you the French version to help you understand it better.

That the quorum of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Official Languages Policy and Programs be six members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when four members are present so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose.

Senator Corbin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The French version is much clearer than the English version. I must say that I am completely satisfied. In my opinion, the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons should not sit, whether there is a quorum or not, unless the co-chairmen are in agreement. The bell ringing incident concerned the fact that the co-chairman representing the Senate had decided, against the wishes of the co-chairman for the House of Commons, to hold a meeting of the committee even though the bells were ringing to call in the members for a vote.

No matter how long the bells ring, that is not the point. When the bells are ringing to call in the members, they have to be there for the vote.

I presume that the same rule would apply to the Senate. When the senators are called in for a vote, they should leave the committee room. This is not a question of partisanship, but rather a question of properly organizing the affairs of the committee so that everyone will know where he stands.

I wanted to make this comment about these past incidents, but I take this opportunity to say that I find today's motion completely satisfactory. I submit that both co-chairmen must be in agreement for a meeting to be held. In fact, I think that both co-chairmen should be present.

Thank you, honourable senators.

● (1410)

[English]

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, Senator Corbin has noticed something I overlooked. If he is correct, it means that, in addition to agreement, both chairmen have to be physically present at a meeting. That could be very awkward.

There have been many occasions when, with the complete agreement of both of the joint chairmen, the Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee has met with one of the joint chairmen present. I am sure Senator Nurgitz would be most unhappy if a precedent were established whereby both of the joint chairmen had to be physically present in order to hold a meeting of his joint committee. Apart altogether from the other considerations, I think this matter should be clarified.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I do not have the copy of my text with me, since I surrendered it to the page. Nevertheless, as I read it at the time, it meant that both of the joint chairmen had to agree that the meeting take place. I do not think it says that both of the joint chairmen have to be present. I stand to be corrected because I do not have the text with me.

Senator Frith: I do have the text, and the honourable senator is right.

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, because of past incidents, I think it is important that we agree on the scope of such implications.

If one of the co-chairmen were to tell his colleague that by reason of events occurring in either house of Parliament, a meeting cannot take place, it seems to me that his opinion would have to be respected. This is what is at stake in this case.

Where, for any reason, one of the co-chairmen cannot attend and there is agreement for the meeting to take place under the other co-chairman, it goes without saying that there is no conflict, no difference of opinion. The meeting can then take place. But if there is any valid reason—and I think that the bell-ringing incident was a valid reason—then the members of both houses should respect the important events going on in the other place, and thus the MP's privileges will not be infringed upon. It seems to me that a summons for a vote is fundamental. The privileges of the members of the other place are being infringed upon if the other house decides to proceed notwithstanding.

Senator Godfrey referred to the non-partisan spirit prevailing in the committee he has the good fortune of co-chairing. To my deep regret, the bell-ringing incident was indeed, an occasion for partisanship to seep in. For that I take part of the blame. But I also blame my colleague at the time. Both of us allowed ourselves to introduce an element of partisanship, by reason precisely of all the aspects surrounding the bell-ringing incident.

Furthermore, I want to stress the fact that if in the future any such incident were to happen again, I would ask that the comments I am making today be referred to. If one of the co-chairmen has some objection to the holding of a meeting, then let his opinion be respected, and let not the meeting be held.

Senator Frith: I think that Senator Corbin's concerns should be lifted by the very wording of the motion itself. In the English text, there is—that the joint chairmen—

“chairmen” is plural. It was hard to hear, but perhaps it should be “chairperson.” However, perhaps I should not pursue that at this moment. The wording continues —be authorized to hold meetings

It seems very clear that both of them have to agree.

[Translation]

And in the French text:

Et qu'on autorise les coprésidents à tenir . . .

As Senator Corbin pointed out, the French text is very precise, and the English text also because there is the word “chairman”.

[English]

Senator Wood: Honourable senators, may I add that a similar motion was adopted in 1980 and 1983, and it goes without saying that joint chairmen are authorized to hold meetings, but they do not both have to be there. That had been agreed to by ourselves and the joint chairmen.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I am completely satisfied with the explanation. From the discussion we have had it is understood that we can go ahead.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I agree completely that it should take the two joint chairmen to convene a meeting. But I would insist also, in the light of the incident to which Senator Corbin has referred, that it should also take both joint chairmen to cancel a meeting that has been duly called.

[Translation]

If I remember well, the problem arose when my friend tried to cancel a meeting that had been duly called by the co-chairmen, without my having been consulted as co-chairman for the Senate.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, my colleague Senator Murray is partly right. This is how things happened. The main thing is that when the bells are calling in the members in the other place—especially where they could ring indefinitely—the co-chairman has no other choice but to cancel the meeting, in consultation with his colleague. The co-chairman representing the Senate should bow to the obligation for Members of Parliament to be in the House of Commons for a vote, no matter how long the bells have to ring. I was guided by that in those circumstances.

Motion agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION TO MEET DURING SITTINGS AND ADJOURNMENTS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is with some trepidation that I rise to move another motion. Cognizant of the fact that I possess neither of the two official languages, I shall endeavour to speak far more slowly! With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), I move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

I do not know what that motion will provoke, but there it is.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 5th February, 1985, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

● (1420)

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?:

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am not opposing the motion, but I imagine that it is motivated partly by the very thin order paper that we have here and that they have in the other place. Could the deputy leader tell us what the government has in mind for when we come back on February 5? I was looking at the Speech from the Throne the other day. Perhaps during this adjournment the government can try to give us some idea as to when all the things that were promised in the Speech from the Throne will happen.

I draw your attention to the following: "During this session, you will be asked to consider an innovative employment strategy." Perhaps we can look forward to that. "You will be asked to consider a number of important legislative initiatives, including removal of the discriminatory clauses in the Indian Act." Might we expect something on that? When can we expect the "amendments to the Divorce Act and measures to control pornography and sexually abusive broadcasting"? It says that we will be asked:

to establish a Parliamentary task force on the future of child care in Canada . . . to consider legislation to extend the income tested spouse's allowance to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 regardless of the age of their spouse at death. My Ministers will introduce measures to improve the financial situation of Canada's war veterans . . . Legislation will . . . be placed before you to eliminate certain problems and abuses in the corrections system.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Dispense.

Senator Frith: Thank you for asking, but no. "Parliament will be asked to consider amendments to the Criminal Code."

Senator Doody: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: The Speech from the Throne was delivered on November 5 and the government has been in power for some time. As the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate pointed out, we are hearing a lot more talk and posturing than we are seeing legislation, which is one of the reasons for this lengthy adjournment. So I am asking if, when we come back, the deputy leader will tell us more about the legislative program relating in particular to the promises the government made during the election campaign and then enshrined in the Speech from the Throne. This adjournment gives them a good opportunity to get their legislative act together.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, in the interest of nonpartisan management of the house I am only too happy to assure the honourable gentleman that the universe is unfolding as the voters have dictated it should. The programs and policies of the government are being put together, and carefully thought out legislation with due consultation with the public, as was the commitment, will be introduced from time to time. The parts of the Throne Speech that are pertinent will certainly be dealt with and honourable gentlemen and ladies of this chamber will have the pleasure of dealing with the legislation as it comes forward.

Senator Frith: It seems to me we have heard that song before.

Senator Doody: And you might hear it again if you ask questions with preambles of the kind you just gave.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MEXICO—REPORTED NUCLEAR PACT WITH CANADA—
CORRECTION TO STATEMENT BY LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a lively sense of self-preservation prompts me to rise on an egregious error that I made yesterday in response to a question by Senator Haidasz in reference to the activity of my colleague, the government whip. I thought that the honourable senator was talking about the government whip signing papers on behalf of the Government of Canada, and I made the perhaps offhand remark that I did not think he possessed the authority at this particular time, that he was not in the signing mood. I find on examination that he did sign a document in Mexico, but it was not a government document. It was the communiqué issued by the Canada-Mexico Parliamentary Association and it is a communiqué which is the responsibility of that association alone. However, I would like to say how pleased we are with the contribution made by my colleague as co-chairman of that important meeting in Mexico a little while ago, and before the matter got out of hand, I thought I had better let the Senate know what the actual situation was.

• (1430)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Did he sell any Cape Breton rails?

Senator Roblin: We are planning to send Senator Muir down. With all due respect to the Leader of the Opposition, he is the best salesman for Cape Breton.

Hon. H. A. Olson: In thanking Senator Roblin for his explanation, I would like to ask if we can expect, at the next sitting of the Senate, a tabling of that document which was signed by representatives of both houses of Parliament?

Senator Roblin: I am sorry, but that particular communiqué does not fall within the ambit of the authority of the Government of Canada. Perhaps if my honourable friend were to address himself to the association concerned, they would be happy to give him the information.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, following up on some questions that were asked yesterday, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not there is a deal, an agreement, a commitment, or whatever it might be called, that the government is intending to replace the PGRT.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): There is no deal. That I can report to this house in respect of this matter. I stated the situation clearly yesterday: There is no deal. Any deals that are going to be made in connection with taxation of the oil industry are matters that must be discussed and decided between the two levels of government in this country, namely the federal government and the provincial governments. It is only after those discussions are concluded that one will know the details of policy.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is reported to have said yesterday that it was true that she and the Prime Minister always made it clear that, if the Tories formed a government, the PGRT would be replaced. Therefore, someone is wrong if the minister now says that there is no deal, agreement, commitment or whatever to replace the PGRT. The reason I am raising it again now is that it was revived yesterday, but I think the Leader of the Government in the Senate will recall that I asked him several weeks ago whether or not there was a commitment on the part of the government to replace the PGRT, and I believe he replied at that time that there was not.

It is clear that we have to understand whether or not the Prime Minister and the minister responsible are stating the position of the government, because apparently some people seem to think they know this position, including the President of OPEC—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): IPAC.

Senator Olson: I am sorry, IPAC. However, there are a great many other people who have a direct, vested and very keen, vital interest in whether or not PGRT is to be replaced. If that is so, we would like to know. We have a right to know.

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that I think everybody in the oil industry in the whole length and breadth of this great nation, and anyone else who chooses to read the newspapers will know what the policy of the government is with respect to oil taxation, because it was very clearly set out in Prince Albert in the course of the election campaign. Perhaps I will read the clause to my honourable friend:

We will implement a taxation system which recognizes bottom line profits as the basis for assessing taxes in order to stimulate the investment needed to bring on new energy resources. We will reduce the excessive front-end loading of taxes on large projects in favour of a system which is sensitive to long-term payout of them.

That clause was drafted because the party in opposition at that time was much impressed with the failure of the National Energy Program to encourage adequately the oil industry and to treat it fairly, and therefore that pledge was undertaken. Within the four corners of that pledge, there may be many changes in oil taxation in the country, and when agreements are reached with the provinces and when the budget is presented to the nation, these facts will be disclosed.

However, to say that, in the meanwhile, there is some under-the-counter or secret deal with somebody, or some special information that is not available to the world at large, would be, I think, a mistake.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am very familiar with that statement, and obviously we filed it away on the day it was made by the then Leader of the Opposition. However, what I am curious about now is whether or not there is a commitment to remove the PGRT. As far as I am concerned, you can use other terminology such as front-end taxation and so on, but we need to know whether or not there is a commitment, because there are a great many people in the industry who interpret that statement as being a commitment that PGRT is to be removed, or at least replaced. Is there a commitment or not?

Senator Roblin: I have to tell my honourable friend, as he quite well knows, that changes in taxation are budgetary matters and whatever changes are agreed with the provinces will be disclosed to the country, probably at the time of the agreement and certainly no later than the budget. However, beyond that I am not authorized at this time to indulge in any further speculation.

Senator Olson: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. May I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate when it will be announced so that the rest of the people in the industry will know that it is going to happen? Secondly, will it be included in the budget? Also, is this a problem related to the so-called energy pricing agreement that was supposed to have been reached by January 31 to replace an existing agreement that expires on that date? If so, could the rest of the industry be told if that is a frustrating matter with respect to an agreement? If what the minister told us yesterday is true, that is that if no agreement is reached by January 31—and she seemed to indicate that that was a high possibility—then what kind of régime will we be under afterwards? Also, is it related to failure to make an agreement related to the PGRT?

Senator Roblin: I think I can candidly tell my honourable friend that the whole of this taxation and price question in connection with natural resources and energy in particular is like a bowl of jelly. If you push one part of it, the whole thing shakes. Therefore I think it fair to say that the question of the PGRT, and all other aspects with respect to prices and taxation, are in one area of policy and decision-making.

Senator Frith: One bowl of jelly.

Senator Roblin: I think they are all part of the range of discussions that are going forward with the provinces now.

I am giving that merely as a general, philosophical statement. I have no particular knowledge of the details of the discussions that are taking place, but common sense tells me that one would expect that to be the case.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, if that is true, can we take it from that interpretation by the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the government has no intention of announcing a new energy pricing agreement until the budget comes out, because of what the Leader of the Government in the Senate has just described as the very direct inter-relationship between the two?

Senator Roblin: I think that the first opportunity that will be available to announce policy on these questions is when an agreement is reached between the two levels of government concerned. I am not in a position to say whether the government will take the opportunity of that occasion to announce policy, but I think it is highly likely.

Senator Olson: I have a final supplementary question, honourable senators. It seems to me that the Leader of the Government in the Senate ought to convey to his colleagues, particularly the Minister of Energy—and indeed the Prime Minister—that there is a very fundamental element of justice and fair play involved, and that everyone who is affected, indeed all Canadians, should know at the same time. There should not be implications that there will be changes to taxation but that the government will wait until some appropriate time to make the announcement, even though there are some people in the industry who, like Mr. Morgan, claim that they have known for a long time that these changes will be in the budget, as he stated yesterday, or in both the budget and in the new oil pricing agreement which we have every right to expect to be announced within the next few days.

Senator Roblin: I give my opinion that I do not think my honourable friend has correctly characterized the statements made by Mr. Morgan. I think that they are not what my honourable friend has said. In saying that, I realize I am not authorized to speak for him; he speaks for himself.

On the question of fairness, it is the question of fairness in taxation which has brought about this whole policy review. It follows from the unfairness of the previous taxation which was based on the question of front-end loading; that is, taxation before profits were realized; that is the root of the problem and one of the serious drawbacks of the present policy. I am acquainted with the concept of fairness. I assure my honourable friend that the government will do its best to be fair to all the industry.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government instruct us, especially me, because I am not very knowledgeable in this field, about the decision to reduce the export price of oil going to the United States which makes it about $10 cheaper than oil going to Ontario or Quebec? Was there an agreement reached between the provinces to do that?

Senator Roblin: I hesitate to offer to instruct my honourable friend, because it is the field of policy which I can hardly claim to be completely familiar with. I can tell my honourable friend that in this instance these prices are set by the National Energy Board, and that board is instructed in its terms of reference to take into consideration all aspects of the matter that affect the welfare of Canadians. The board is moved, I believe, at the present time by the fact that if it wishes to sell the oil at all, it has to sell it at a competitive price. That is an important matter. There is a very strong feeling in the oil industry in Alberta that if these supplies are available for export and, indeed, the National Energy Board has decided that they are, then they have to be exported at a price which is commercially obtainable

Senator Frith: The point is made. The policy is a bowl of jelly.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. My question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I should like to ask him with respect to the suggestion that the petroleum and gas revenue tax would be replaced by one more profitable to industry whether he concurs that that is a commitment on a specific change?

Senator Roblin: I really am not able to expand on the answers that I have already given. The question of taxation and pricing and all these important matters are on the table in the discussions between the two levels of government, and I will await the outcome of those negotiations before I make any statement on a matter of that sort.

Senator Hastings: I am not asking about any change of taxation; I am asking does he not agree it is a commitment to a specific change.

Senator Frith: The minister says it is.

Senator Roblin: Senator Hastings is asking me for my opinion. I think the best source of information on this matter is the minister concerned. If my honourable friend wishes me to pursue this question with her, I will be glad to do so.

Senator Olson: We would like the Leader of the Government to do that, and also to ask her whether or not she said there was a commitment to the industry that the PGRT would be replaced.

Senator Roblin: I will acquaint her with my honourable friend's observation.

Senator Hastings: I would like to make the observation to honourable senators and the Leader of the Government that the industry has accepted it as a commitment to change and, obviously, Mr. Gwyn Morgan, who worked with Mr. Mulroney and the minister before and probably during the election campaign, has accepted it as a commitment. He has accepted it and the industry has certainly accepted it. They anxiously await their payoff from this thing of a government for services rendered.

Hon. Gildas Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to address to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It refers to a statement he made earlier on this matter. Did I understand correctly that it is his view that the companies are not getting an adequate share at this time?

Senator Roblin: I am not going to make any statement on this matter. It is a question of policy which is under consideration. I do not think I can expand on the information that I have already given.

SPORT

FUTURE OF CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, as someone who is delighted that the 1988 World Series will be played in our new domed stadium in Toronto, I have a question about the future of Canadian professional football. Would the Leader of the Government agree with me that this new stadium, combined with the Prime Minister's no-holds barred invitation to American investment in this country, could, in fact, spell the demise of the Canadian Football League and, hence, the demise of the Grey Cup, a national institution in a country which has far too few national institutions and, indeed, the demise of professional football in Regina, Hamilton, Ottawa and Winnipeg, all of this through a possible incursion by either the National Football League or the United States Football League into Canada?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think that the subject that my honourable friend refers to has been in the area of public discussion before now. There have been serious concerns expressed by other people in days gone by, and we have been able to ensure that the football clubs to which my honourable friend referred to continued to exist. I confess to being absolutely no authority on this matter whatsoever. My opinion is not worth mentioning to this chamber because it is entirely out of my area of expertise, if even I have one. All I can say is that if the Blue Bombers don't win the Grey Cup next year there will be hell to pay in Winnipeg.

Senator Davey: As a supplementary question, my concern is that the Blue Bombers won't play football at all next fall. As I am sure the Leader of the Government will recall, the most recent attempted American incursion into Canadian football came from the late unlamented so-called World Football League. That incursion was thwarted by prompt action by the government of the day. In particular, the Honourable Marc Lalonde indicated to the World Football League that steps would be taken to prevent the league from entering Canada. What then will be this government's attitude to the inevitable attempt by either the National Football League or the United States Football League, or both, to move into Canada? I have reason to believe that this is about to become an urgent problem.

Would the leader, therefore, undertake to draw this matter to the early attention of his cabinet colleagues and to provide all concerned with some early indication of the government's attitude to this pressing problem?

Senator Roblin: I recognize an expert when I see one, and I say to my honourable friend that if he wishes to share his expertise with me, giving the reasons that he referred to, to believe that this matter might become an urgent question, I will be glad to do what he asks.

Senator Davey: I should like to ask a further supplementary question. I am not at liberty to disclose my source, for which I apologize, but I can simply tell the leader, and I hope he will take my word, that this is a problem which is very real. The NFL and the USFL are poised to move into Canada. The government will have to take some action, I believe, to prevent that, if, indeed, the government wants to prevent it. I believe that the CFL is a national institution, and we have too few such in the country, so it is a very real problem. I would urge the Leader of the Government to look into this matter soon.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I agree with my honourable friend about the National Football League being a national institution, but I think we will have to await developments because policy cannot be formulated in a vacuum. We have to know what the facts are before we can expect the government to deal with it.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, confusion continues to reign among the people of this country about what it is that the Conservative government means by the term universality and social benefits. In today's Gazette we have Mr. Stan Darling, the Honourable Jake Epp and Mr. Alan Redway in contradiction with one another about whether or not Family Allowances will be surtaxed. Mr. Epp is reported to have made three or four points on that subject, namely, that at no stage will benefits be taxed away; then, that they will not be totally taxed away; and then he is reported to have said that if you gave it to everyone and taxed it away that would not be universality, so that will not happen. He also said that if a portion of it is taxed away, it is a budgetary matter. All of the MPs are reported to be quite firm on the fact that the government has taken a decision about what it is going to do.

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he will clarify for us which of the three Conservative people speaking on this issue is correct and would he please restate the official position of the government.

● (1450)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend will be kind enough to look at the morning or evening edition of the newspaper of next Monday, which I am sure will be on her desk in any event because it will be distributed to all honourable senators, she will find the government's position with respect to these interesting matters.

A position paper will be available on Monday, and I commend it to my honourable friend for her information.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

According to reports in the papers today, what this paper will contain, said Mr. Epp, is a series of options. We have on the one hand Mr. Alan Redway saying that no decisions have been taken and, on the other hand, we have Mr. Epp saying that they will present a series of options.

Is the Leader of the Government telling us the facts or is he telling us "mullrunes?"

[Senator Davey.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What?

Senator Gigantès: "Mullrunes." It is a combination of two words from the Oxford Dictionary: to mull, meaning to make confused or make a muddle; and "rune" as in "runic" which means a mysterious character.

Senator Roblin: I would refer my honourable friend to the answer I gave to the previous question.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): With respect to the reply the Leader of the Government gave to Senator Marsden earlier this week about the paper to be released by the government, he was good enough to give us a definition of a green paper and a white paper. Will the paper be green or white?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Blue, Tory blue.

Senator Roblin: I am waiting with keen expectation to see what colour they choose.

Senator Frith: Yellow, no doubt.

Senator MacEachen: Will it contain options or will it contain government policy?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend will look at his mail on Monday, he will have the full story in front of him.

ENERGY

GAS PRICING POLICY—ADVISORY COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate relates to a question I asked in this chamber on December 6 and the reply of the government.

The question was precipitated by the news that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had asked the committee that advised her while she was in opposition to come up with recommendations on how to implement a new pricing system. That group was headed by Mr. Vern Horte, Chairman of Progas Limited of Calgary.

I simply asked the Leader of the Government to provide a list of the members of that committee and their qualifications, because it would be of interest to all senators to know who were the members of this committee because they seemed to have access to the minister by way of this advisory committee.

The reply I received, for which I am grateful to the leader, is:

The Committee referred to by Senator Hastings is not a government committee, neither does it have a mandate to implement a gas pricing policy in Canada.

Rather, this is a private, informal consultative group, made up of representatives of the oil and gas industry who are offering their suggestions on a new natural gas pricing policy to the Minister. The Committee will receive no public funding nor will it have access to any confidential information.

In this sense, this committee is similar to other committees which advised Miss Carney when she was energy critic and which continue to do so today.

In addition to this source, she has others.

I suggest that it is not a committee like any other committee; it is a committee which advised this minister when she was opposition energy critic and, if we accept the word of Mr. Gwyn Morgan, he participated with Miss Carney before and probably during the election.

Honourable senators, I have asked for the names of the members of that committee, and this government, which is dedicated to open government, does not want to produce the list.

I would appeal to the Leader of the Government again. If he will not produce the list, would he, at least, please answer the question as to whether or not Mr. Gwyn Morgan is on this committee, and is this the same committee he referred to when he said he was working with the minister and prime minister prior to the election?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have to tell my honourable friend that, if he is concerned about advisory committees, he has a lot to be concerned about because there are a great many advisory committees, not only dealing with oil, but with fisheries, agriculture, economic development, monetary policy and others.

One of the features of this administration is its desire to consult more widely than has ever been the case before with people who are outside the political arena in order to get the widest possible input. The reason for that is not to make special deals or to show favouritism; it is to obtain the widest spread of opinion and of good suggestions that may be offered for the government to consider.

It seems to me that rather than being critical of this endeavour to consult more widely, my honourable friend might really approve of it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He is not critical; he just wants an answer.

Senator Roblin: It seems to me that I still cannot convince him that this is not a question where special privilege is being offered to any group of people. That is the gravamen of the charge that is being made, and that is false; it is wrong; it is not correct. I want to assure my honourable friend that that is the case.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to know if, as Miss Carney is alleged to have said yesterday, commitments were made by any member of the government during those committee meetings.

Senator Roblin: I am not able to comment on what Miss Carney may have said if it is not in front of me. I think it would be unwise for me to make any comment because, so far as I am concerned, my honourable friend's statement is really his statement and not Miss Carney's.

If my friend does not think that in the course of elections and in the course of political activities, parties do not take positions, he is wrong. He knows it because he himself, in the course of election campaigns, as every politician in this house has done, has taken positions in respect of matters which affect particular industries. I would not accuse him, however, because of that fact, of having made some special, improper arrangement. I would think that, in doing so, he was expressing the policy he intended to follow, and that is what is being done in this case.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, if any insinuation is made that I or any of my colleagues made commitments that there would be certain things contained in a budget, he is absolutely wrong.

Now, allegations and statements are being made—and there are tapes in existence—that some members of the committee Senator Hastings referred to have a commitment that certain things will be contained in a budget, because it is only in a budget where tax changes are made.

Senator Roblin: I do not know whether I want to answer that question because it has been dealt with a number of times. All I can say is that, on the basis of pure logic, when most of these matters have to be dealt with on the basis of agreement between two levels of government, it does not seem likely to me that anyone has made undertakings which are obviously dependent upon the agreement of more than one level of government.

I reject my honourable friend's statement.

Senator Hastings: Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to answer my question as to whether or not Mr. Gwyn Morgan is a member of this private informal consultative group?

Senator Roblin: I do not think I will. If it is a private group, it is his business; it is not the business of my honourable friend opposite.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: As a supplementary, would the Leader of the Government assure us that, apart from consulting a committee of oil company executives, the chairman has also consulted such groups as the consumers of oil and other related products?

Senator Roblin: I would tell my honourable friend that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is well aware of the interests that consumer groups have in the price of energy in this country.

The whole thrust of the government's policy is to make sure those prices are as low as possible under the circumstances and that equity is dispensed, regardless of where you live in the country.

Senator Gigantès: Are there any representatives of consumer groups who are part of this committee which advises the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Senator Roblin: I have no information on that point, but I can assure my honourable friend that there are consumer groups who make representations to the minister.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question regarding FIRA which has now been replaced by Investment Canada.

In a television interview, the Honourable Robert de Cotret was asked what he thought about the fact that approximately 94 per cent of requests by foreign investors had been accepted. He answered that this did not take into account the many corporations or persons who did not make such requests because the restrictions imposed by FIRA were too tough.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate ask Mr. de Cotret if he has any figure in mind with regard to those who did not dare ask for an opportunity to invest in Canada when FIRA was in existence?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am not sure that my honourable colleague is doing any more than expressing his view. However, I have no hesitation in saying that I will ask Mr. de Cotret what answer he would give to this question.

Senator Denis: I personally heard Mr. de Cotret say on television that the 94 per cent does not take into account the many requests for investment that were never put forward to FIRA.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EQUAL PAY FOR WORK OF EQUAL VALUE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, on November 28, I asked a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning equal pay for work of equal value. I asked what steps were being taken to implement this policy in Treasury Board, and the reply given by the Leader of the Government on January 22, was, in part, that the Treasury Board was conducting an overall review of policy in this regard. My original question was based on a statement made by Mr. Mulroney during the election campaign—that is, on August 15 last—at which time he said it was imperative that clear directions be given to the Treasury Board to implement equal pay for work of equal value in a positive fashion.

● (1500)

Does the reply given by the Leader of the Government on January 22 mean that Mr. Mulroney's declaration of Conservative Party policy on this matter is being reviewed, or that the President of the Treasury Board is reviewing the Conservative Party's policy on the implementation of equal pay for work of equal value? Can he tell us just what the review of policy in the Treasury Board involves, when the statement of policy had previously been so very clear?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe the Treasury Board is endeavouring to find ways and means within its control to implement the policy stated by the Prime Minister.

Senator Marsden: As a supplementary, are there guidelines available that could be tabled in this chamber concerning that review of ways and means?

Senator Roblin: I have no such document available at the present time, but I imagine that when the Treasury Board has decided what it should be doing in this matter, it will be a matter of public record.

THE ECONOMY

MANITOBA—CONSTRUCTION OF WINNIPEG RESEARCH CENTRE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question, which is for the Leader of the Government, follows on one that I asked some time ago regarding the proposed research centre in Winnipeg. At that time the matter was still under discussion. Can he now advise me as to the situation? Has the government made an official decision not to proceed with that centre?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe my honourable friend knows that the policy of the government is to proceed with completing the project in Winnipeg in the hope of developing an alternative policy for its use, which would involve the private sector to a greater extent than the plan that was originally produced. While I can make no announcement at the present time that would be concrete in this respect, I can tell my honourable friend that, in my opinion, hopeful negotiations are proceeding and I am optimistic that a satisfactory agreement will be reached between the public and private interests in this matter respecting the future of that institution.

Senator Molgat: As a supplementary, presumably it is not to become a national research centre under the federal government?

Senator Roblin: We will have to wait to see what the negotiations produce before I can answer that question in a positive way.

DISARMAMENT

DEPLOYMENT OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to return to the subject matter I raised with the Leader of the Government earlier this week. I must say that I continue to be greatly concerned about the unthinking embrace by the Secretary of State for External Affairs of the strategic defence initiative of the United States, and also by the ambiguity and complacency on the part of the government on the question of the placement of nuclear weapons on Canadian territory. I should like to ask some questions which might provide an opportunity for the Leader of the Government, either today or later, to clarify this situation, because it is not my intention to do anything but seek some clarification.

My first question is: Is it the determination of the government to prohibit the placement of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil in all circumstances.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has given me some good advice in suggesting that perhaps I should not respond to that question, and perhaps others that he may ask today. Therefore I would like to take his question as notice.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, that is quite satisfactory. I have asked whether it is the intention of the government to oppose the placement of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil in all circumstances, because it is my understanding that if there is any item of foreign policy upon which all parties seem to be agreed, it is that we avoid placing nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. I should like to know whether that is the determined policy of the government, and, indeed, whether there are any circumstances in which the government would contemplate permitting the United States to place nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that he had received an assurance from the United States that there would be consultations with the Canadian government in the event of a crisis that might bring about the placement of nuclear weapons. We all know that this week Lord Carrington paid a welcome and valuable visit to Canada and many of us had an opportunity to hear his views on NATO defence policy and foreign policy. He said that the United States should consult Canada and its other allies when drawing up contingency plans for the deployment of nuclear weapons on their soil, and not leave consultation until times of crisis.

Would the Leader of the Government ascertain whether it is the intention of the government to seek those consultations with the United States now, and if, indeed, the government will contemplate concluding an agreement to have the placement of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil? As Lord Carrington pointed out, when a crisis arises it is too late to have meaningful consultations. The gun is at your head.

I am concerned about this question, and I want to know what is the general policy of the government. Are there exceptions to the general policy, and is it a policy of prohibition? If there are exceptions that require agreement, would the government consider early consultation so that we may all know the circumstances or the criteria?

Would the Leader of the Government also consider telling us whether, if the government contemplates entering into an agreement, the terms of that agreement could be made public and possibly debated by Parliament before it could be implemented, because I do not believe there is anything that is of more concern to the Canadian people and the cause of greater anxiety than the whole nuclear question. It would be very good if a clear statement from the government could be brought to this chamber to enable us to base our debate on knowledge rather than on newspaper accounts and speculation. These are the questions I would like the Leader of the Government to deal with when we return.

Senator Roblin: I find my friend's statement refreshing because for the first time in a long time we have a person of leadership in the Senate declaring he is not willing to debate the issue on the basis of newspaper reports. I could not agree with him more. I think my honourable friend has raised a very sensitive, difficult and important matter and I shall consult with my colleague as to what answer can best be provided.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I have a question supplementary to those of Senator MacEachen. Would it be possible for the Leader of the Government to indicate to us whether this question of contingency planning for the possibility of nuclear weapons in Canada in time of crisis might be one of the issues on the agenda when the Prime Minister meets with the President of the United States in March? Yesterday the Prime Minister indicated that Canada would have lots of input in relation to the arms talks in Geneva, and he noted that this might come into play when the president and he meet in March. Could this other item be suggested as part of the agenda?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has asked a very perceptive question. I can assure her that before long there will be a statement as to the agenda of the items to be discussed at the meeting in Quebec City in the month of March.

Hon. Lowell Murray moved the third reading of Bill C-17, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Second Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence entitled: "Canada's Territorial Air Defence", tabled in the Senate on 23rd January, 1985.—(Honourable Senator Lafond).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, Senator Lafond spoke on this second report when he tabled the document yesterday. Therefore, why does the order still stand in his name?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe that Senator Lafond indicated yesterday that he wanted to make a few preliminary comments on the tabling of the report and that he wanted to speak more fully on it at a later time. As I understand it, the order stands in his name awaiting his fuller comments.

Order stands.

HEALTH

ILL EFFECTS OF SMOKING

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, January 23, 1985:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the ill effects of smoking to smokers and non-smokers alike.

He said: Honourable senators, the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health declared a national non-smoking week from January 17 to January 23. It is in the spirit of non-smoking week, therefore, that I would like to put on the record some facts on the ill effects of smoking on smokers and non-smokers alike. In doing so I do not wish to leave the impression with members of the Senate that when it comes to smoking I am "holier than thou". Let me share briefly with you my personal experience as a person who was a heavy smoker and then gave it up. You may find this hard to believe but I experienced my first few puffs as early as kindergarten. It is not that I enjoyed it, but together with my kindergarten colleagues we wanted to imitate the grown-ups.

Hon. C. William Doody: (Deputy Leader of the Government): Hear, hear.

Senator Bosa: I cannot say that I have been a regular smoker since I was in kindergarten but by the time I was 10 or 11, I was smoking one or two cigarettes a day. When I stopped smoking on January 3, 1969, at the age of 42, some 30 years later, I was going through more than two large packs a day. But I gave up, not because I was afraid of the effects smoking had on my health but because I was running out of cigarettes all the time, notwithstanding the fact that I used to buy one carton at a time. I would keep one pack in the glove compartment of my car, one or two at my desk and the rest in my apartment. I cannot tell you how many times I got up in the middle of the night and drove for miles in search of a restaurant that was open in order to buy a pack of cigarettes. That historic January 3, 1969, I went home, stretched out on the chesterfield to read the evening paper and reached for a cigarette. To my consternation there were only two in the pack. I immediately checked if I had any additional cigarettes in the apartment but there was none. It was at that time that I made a commitment to myself never to smoke again and, honourable senators, I have kept my word. I have not smoked since.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Bosa: It was such a wonderful experience giving up smoking that after a few weeks I felt as if I were breathing pure oxygen when I woke up in the morning. The gustative buds could distinguish food flavours much more acutely. I did not have to clear my throat any more. I felt more energetic. My mind was clearer and I did not run out of breath when I ran up the stairs. It was such a wonderful feeling that I almost decided to start smoking once more in order to experience the pleasure of giving it up all over again.

Honourable senators, that was my personal experience. Let me now quote to you what the World Health Organization had to say in 1983:

Smoking-related diseases are such important causes of disability and premature death in developed countries that the control of cigarette smoking could do more to improve and prolong life than any single action in the whole field of preventative medicine.

This statement has particular relevance to Canada where the proportion of smokers is among the highest in the world, although there has been a decline since the 1960s in the proportion of Canadians who smoke regularly—37 per cent of males and 19 per cent of females still smoke. The decline has been much more apparent among males than females. In fact, teenage girls are now as likely as teenage boys to smoke.

Until recently, the rights of the 66 per cent non-smoking Canadians have been virtually unrecognized. If they were bothered by cigarette smoke, they had to avoid places with smoke or put up with it. However, with accumulating evidence on the ill effects of smoking and secondhand smoke, more people are giving up the habit, and the anti-smoking lobby has gained strength. It is no longer socially acceptable or even lawful to smoke in certain locations, and smokers often are made to feel that they are engaging in unacceptable behaviour.

Reports linking cigarette smoking with cancer began to appear in the 1920s, but it was not until after World War II that deaths from lung cancer became so numerous among men that systematic follow-up studies were initiated. The habit of smoking was often associated with sophistication and glamour, and films and advertising played on these associations. Smoking has always been more common among men than women, and particularly prevalent among men in manual labour jobs. However, the "macho" image of cigarettes has been counteracted by attempts to sell more cigarettes to women since the 1960s when sales began to drop. Slender, low-tar cigarettes were produced, oriented towards the female market, and the suggestion of liberation was used in advertising, with slogans such as "You've come a long way, baby!"

By the early 1960s, the risk of coronary disease, stroke and lung cancer was found to be substantially higher for cigarette smokers than for non-smokers. Cigarette smoking was also associated with increased risks of chronic bronchitis, emphysema and cancer of the mouth, larynx, esophagus, pharynx, bladder and pancreas. Peptic ulcers were found to be more common among cigarette smokers. Smoking during pregnancy was found to retard the growth of the fetus and to lead to increased risks of stillbirth and neonatal death. The accumulating evidence of the ill-effects of smoking were summarized and publicized by the Royal College of Physicians in 1962, Canada Health and Welfare in 1963, and the Surgeon General of the United States in 1964. One of the problems for researchers has been the fact that the most serious ill-effects of cigarette smoking appear only after an interval of ten years or more. However, national anti-smoking campaigns appear to have had a positive effect, as smoking has declined among males since the 1960s. Yet among women, the proportion of regular smokers, especially those who smoke over 25 cigarettes a day, has increased until recently.

Medical doctors and researchers are now much more aware of the addictive nature of smoking. Smokers often start in their teens or twenties when their parents or friends smoke, but later find that they cannot easily stop. Until recently, this addiction has been seen as a personal problem which increased the smoker's chances of illness or death. Now, however, smoking is perceived as a social problem because of new studies on the health risks of second-hand smoke as well as the high public expense of treating avoidable illness.

A recent federal Health and Welfare study published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal found that one in five Canadians have serious medical conditions aggravated by exposure to cigarette smoke, such as asthma, emphysema, heart disease and angina. A non-smoker who is exposed to second-hand smoke in the workplace for 20 years has suffered the same ill-effects as a person who smoked ten cigarettes a day during the 20-year period. The authors of the report describe airborne tobacco tar as an occupational health hazard that should be banned or restricted to well-ventilated buildings. Apparently only 10 per cent of the air of most buildings is fresh and the rest is usually recycled. This means that smoky air is being circulated throughout most office buildings, exposing non-smokers to high levels of toxic and cancer-causing chemicals. Second-hand or sidestream smoke contains higher levels of cancer-causing chemicals than smoke inhaled by a smoker. The same study also said that the risk of getting lung cancer is as much as 3.4 times greater among non-smokers married to smokers than among non-smokers who are not exposed to cigarette smoke. Unfortunately, air filters do not remove the toxic substances from second-hand smoke. With good reason then, non-smokers are becoming vehement about their rights to healthy air, especially in public places.

Some municipal councils have enacted by-laws designating no-smoking zones in public places. For example, in November of last year, Toronto City Council voted that restaurants with seating for more than 40 customers must set aside 30 per cent of its seats for non-smokers. Non-smokers are also demanding and receiving substantial reductions in insurance premiums. The 1982 Ontario provincial task force on smoking recommended regulations on second-hand smoke, especially in the workplace, as well as a concerted program to reduce smoking. The recently revised Canada Labour Code contains new occupational health and safety provisions scheduled to come into force this year which will make it easier for workers to refuse dangerous work. Tobacco smoke is not specifically mentioned as a threat to health, but the law is bound to be tested to see if it has any teeth. A complaint has already been filed under the new Health Protection and Promotion Act in Ontario against cigarette smoke in the workplace.

It is difficult to measure the cost of smoking to the employer or taxpayer. In order to do this, we would have to consider absenteeism from illness, higher maintenance and replacement costs of furnishings, higher insurance rates, increased medical expenses, and the involuntary damage to the health of non-smoking colleagues. An American business professor, William Weiss, recently studied the cost to American corporations of smoking and concluded that every smoker on the payroll costs the company an average of $4,789 a year. A World Health Organization study in 1980 looked at the economic consequences of smoking in Canada. Tobacco taxes yield about $1 billion a year, but health care costs were about $2.4 billion. Losses in productivity from smokers' absenteeism were estimated to account for another $1.5 billion.

Many of the discussions of the ill-effects of smoking tend to blame the individual smoker rather than the industry and the government which subsidizes it. Yet tobacco companies have few restrictions placed on their advertising and are not required to warn buyers about the addictive or carcinogenic properties of cigarettes. Recent advertising has been geared to young women, who form a large potential market, linking smoking with leisure, success and happiness. International health workers have reported flashy billboard and television commercials encouraging smoking in developing countries, with no information about health risks.

If the Canadian government were really concerned about the health risks from smoking, a number of changes could be encouraged. Advertising and sales promotion of cigarettes could be curtailed or banned. More stringent warnings could be required on packaging. Maximum tar and nicotine levels could be established. Restrictions could be placed on smoking in public places, particularly the workplace. Efforts to prevent young people from smoking could be augmented, including educational programs on the side effects. Taxes and prices could be raised, and subsidies on tobacco abolished. It is clear that dependence on voluntary initiative from the tobacco companies and from smokers themselves is not enough to protect the health of Canadians.

We know that the longer people smoke, the higher the sickness and death rates. The fact that increasing numbers of smokers are giving up the habit indicates a concern about their health. A study at the University of Western Ontario discovered that the public is not as polarized on this issue as some media reports have suggested. Both smokers and non-smokers, according to this study, would support increased restrictions on smoking. Now that we know that smoking is dangerous to everyone's health and costly to the taxpayer, why not try to reduce these risks through legislation?

To this end I should like to put forward the following recommendations for the government and the Speakers of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider implementing on Parliament Hill: First, no-smoking areas could be designated in the parliamentary cafeterias and dining room which would be properly ventilated and partitioned from the smoking area. No-smoking areas have been legislated in Toronto restaurants already. Secondly, smoking could be prohibited in committee rooms unless more adequate ventilation is provided to extract the smoke from the room. As a minimum requirement, smokers could be segregated to one end of the room near a door or window. Thirdly, the ill effects of second-hand smoke could be publicized and a campaign to abolish smoking in the workplace discussed, since people are no longer required to work in an unhealthy environment according to federal law. Fourthly, consideration should be given to the federal government's role in condoning a habit which has been shown to be harmful by not passing strong legislation restricting advertising of tobacco products and by not acting against smoking among its own employees in the workplace. Finally, since some places of business have already enforced no-smoking regulations in the workplace, for example the Kingston Whig-Standard, the Government of Canada should also provide an example by acting as soon as possible on this issue.

I hope that honourable senators will support these recommendations and convince the Speakers of both houses and the appropriate authorities to come to grips with this major issue that affects the health of so many Canadians.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Bosa a question. He proposed that the Government of Canada should act on this matter. I should like to point out to him that the Government of Canada does not need to act on some of the suggestions that he made, and I am thinking particularly of his comments referring to the Parliamentary Restaurant. Surely the Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament should take the appropriate action.

Senator Bosa: I believe that that committee no longer exists. In effect, it does exist, but it does not have any more power to make decisions. Notwithstanding that, I did suggest that the Government of Canada should take action on this matter and also that the Speakers of both houses should ensure that committee rooms, cafeterias and the Parliamentary Restaurant should adopt some of these rules because it is under the jurisdiction of the Speakers that some of the places on Parliament Hill rest.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE TO STUDY FISH MARKETING IN CANADA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, December 19, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada, and all implications thereof;

That the Committee have power to travel from place to place in Canada; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, is it the intention of Senator Marshall to speak on this subject?

Hon. Jack Marshall: Prior to the end of the session I was prompted to get unanimous consent to move the motion because of appeals made by those who had spoken in the debate on the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board, which I think will be one of the first subjects of our examination. I believe that unanimous consent was given in the chamber. Therefore, I do not think there is any need to speak on the motion.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, my concern is that there should be an adequate study of the freshwater fish side of the question. The problem arises with respect to total volume, total dollars and in terms of total people involved. The freshwater fish part is very small by comparison to the two large fisheries on each coast, and it is also a very different type of fishery. My concern is that unless we take some special measures to have a subcommittee of this committee doing a simultaneous study of freshwater fish while the study on the major fisheries on the two coasts is being done, there is a danger that there will not be adequate concern for the freshwater fishery. It affects the native population of the west particularly. Therefore, I am not going to suggest that we delay the inquiry, but I hope that when the committee organizes itself we can have a further discussion on this matter to decide how we can deal with that particular problem.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I think that Senator Molgat was present when we discussed the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board. That discussion prompted my introduction of the motion. I can assure him that that subject will take the highest priority when we investigate fish marketing. I welcome his interest, and hope that he will play an active part in that regard.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my recollection coincides with Senator Marshall's that there is no opposition to this. On the other hand, I do not remember it being discussed in our caucus. I would like to adjourn the debate provided that it will not excessively delay the matter. We will have a caucus meeting on Tuesday, February 5, and Senator De Bané can convince his colleagues, which I am sure he will do, that we should support it. I have no reason to believe that he will act otherwise. I would like to have the opportunity to ensure that our caucus supports it as I believe they do.

Senator Marshall: There should be no undue delay because we still have to focus some attention on the report previously issued by the committee entitled "Soil at Risk." There has not yet been an opportunity to have a full debate on that subject or to call witnesses. I had a telephone discussion with Senator Sparrow yesterday at his home in Saskatoon, and it would appear that he would need a month to get all the witnesses together that he would like to hear from and to allow the debate to continue in the chamber.

Senator Frith: Since our caucus meeting at the moment is planned for the afternoon of Tuesday, February 5, when the Senate rises, perhaps we could adjourn this motion until Wednesday, February 6 and I can speak to it then, and I suspect that we will support it.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 5, 1985, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 5, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government), for Senator Roblin, presented Bill S-3, to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Zambia, Canada and the Kingdom of Thailand, Canada and the Republic of Cyprus and Canada and the Federative Republic of Brazil for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO ENGAGE SERVICES

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purposes of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the Acting Leader of the Government could give us a brief explanation why this is necessary.

Senator Doody: Certainly. The National Finance Committee is currently holding meetings to consider legislation, and as of this time no reference has been given to that committee by the Senate which would enable it to hire the necessary staff to carry on its work. That should have been done earlier, but apparently was not. Its budget has been presented and has been approved. That is the purpose of this particular motion.

Senator Frith: Leave is granted.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE ANNUAL REPORT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, February 6, 1985, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine the Annual Report of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation for the fiscal year ended April 30, 1984, tabled in the Senate on 5th February, 1985.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

APPEAL BY BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA TO SUPREME COURT OF UNITED STATES

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I think all Canadians have indicated their objection to the extraterritorial application of U.S. law. Recently the United States Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal by the Bank of Nova Scotia from a fine imposed by a District Court of the federal jurisdiction involving an amount of $1,825,000 (U.S.). The bank refused to supply to the grand jury, under subpoena, certain documents from a third country because, had it done so, it would have been in violation of the law of that third country.

The Bank of Nova Scotia, in its application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, was supported by the Government of the United Kingdom, the Government of the Bahamas and the Cayman Islands, and the Government of Canada.

In view of the rapport that exists between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States, the only way this injustice can now be overcome is by the Prime Minister taking some individual action. Would the government ask that this issue be raised in the agenda for the forthcoming meeting between the President and the Prime Minister, and that legislative action be taken so that this fine can be remitted?

● (1410)

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly refer the question to the appropriate authorities in order to get an answer for Senator Sinclair.

UNITED NATIONS

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION—CANCELLATION OF APPOINTMENT OF HON. EUGENE WHELAN, P.C.

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the Acting Leader of the Government to the Canadian Press story which appeared in all three Toronto newspapers this morning. The Toronto Star headlines the story, "Whelan fired despite advice, papers show." The Toronto Sun headlines the story, "Whelan post not just Grit reward." The Globe and Mail headlines the story, "Clark ignored External when he dumped Whelan." Documents obtained by the Canadian Press, heavily censored and previously marked "confidential," were obtained by the Canadian Press under the Access to Information Act. The facts are that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Joe Clark, ignored the recommendations of his own department when he decided to cancel Mr. Whelan's appointment as Canadian Ambassador to the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization in Rome. The fact is that senior External Affairs officials had recommended in the early 1980s the appointment of an ambassador to the Food and Agriculture Organization.

In other words, Mr. Whelan was quite accurate when he stated after his appointment in July that External Affairs had proposed the post, that his appointment was "not just a Grit reward," in the words of the Toronto Sun.

In all of these circumstances, will the government reconsider its decision about appointing such an ambassador? If so, why would it not appoint Mr. Whelan, who so obviously possesses all of the necessary credentials?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): My understanding is that the decision of the government is quite final in this regard, but if the honourable senator wants me to look further into it, I certainly will.

Senator Davey: I am sorry, I could not hear your answer.

Senator Doody: I think I said no.

Senator Davey: You are not prepared to suggest an answer?

Senator Doody: I said that my understanding of the matter is that the government's position on it is quite clear and, to the best of my knowledge, irrevocable. However, I will look into it further if the honourable senator so wishes.

Senator Davey: Yes, I would like you to do that. Thank you.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

MOCK PARLIAMENT ELECTION RESULTS

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have an additional question, which is not a supplementary. I wonder if the Acting Leader of the Government would like to see the detailed results of last Thursday's Liberal Party election victory at the University of Toronto's mock parliament.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Will the Acting Leader of the Government take that question as notice?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): It is too heavy for me.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TRADEMARK LEGISLATION

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Acting Leader of the Government. I asked this question three years ago, without results. Senator Perrault was then the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The question that I asked on February 11, 1982 reads as follows:

Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On February 13, 1979, I moved second reading of a new trademark bill, and I said at the time:

In 1971—

Note that the year is 1971.

—the Trade Marks Act has been subjected to a thorough examination by the Economic Council of Canada in its report on Intellectual and Industrial Property.

This started the process of serious consideration being given to once again revising the Trade Marks Act. After careful consideration of the various commentaries that have been received by the government in response to the Economic Council's report, the government, in 1974—

Note that year.

—issued a working paper on the revision of the Trade Marks Act and invited comments thereon. Those comments, together with extensive consultation with the private sector and with the relevant government departments, have culminated in Bill S-11, which is before us tonight.

Towards the end of my speech I said:

Certain officials in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs are holding a series of seminars across the country with persons interested in this bill. These seminars commence in Edmonton on February 20 and finish in Halifax on March 8. At these seminars there will be briefings on the contents of the bill, and the changes to the present act—

The real purpose in presenting this bill is so that it can go public, and so that everyone can have a reasonable length of time to consider its contents and make recommendations both to the department and to the Senate committee.

At that time it was not possible for the bill to be dealt with before the election was called.

Honourable senators, back in 1982 I stated:

This coming Saturday we shall celebrate the third anniversary of my introduction of that bill in the Senate, and we still have not got the bill back. It is 11 years since the process began, and eight years since the government issued a working paper on revision of the Trade Marks Act.

My question is: How many more years do we have to wait? Can anything be done to instil a sense of urgency in the officials of the department who are looking after this matter?

Honourable senators, I must say I was rather unfair to the officials of the department, as will appear from the letter I wrote on November 4, 1982, to Senator Olson who, at that time, was the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Did you get a good reply?

Senator Godfrey: In that letter I stated:

Dear Senator Olson:

Herewith copy of the question which I asked in the Senate on February 11, 1982, and which I think contains all the information you need. I asked a further follow-up question on March 11, and Senator Perrault replied that "at the present time the trademark measure is not a leading matter of priority with the government."

I have spoken to the official in the Department who has been working on the Bill, and he says that everything is ready to go but that they are waiting authorization from the Minister.

Honourable senators, we have been waiting from 1971 to 1985—14 years—and we still do not have a trademarks bill. This is the kind of thing that brings both the government and Parliament into disrepute.

My question is: Will the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate make inquiries and find out why a new trademarks bill has not been presented? Since, obviously, the House of Commons may have other priorities, I would point out that this is the ideal type of bill to be presented initially in the Senate. It is a technical bill which one of our committees could deal with and do a very good job on. Would the Acting Leader of the Government make inquiries to ascertain the situation and let us know?

Honourable senators, let us hope that the present government will be more expeditious in this matter than was the last one.

Hon. William C. Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate the question and I can assure the honourable senator that this government can hardly be less efficient in terms of the trademarks bill.

I will confer with various past Leaders of the Government in the Senate to ascertain what happened in this regard.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I was going to threaten to raise this matter again in another three years, but I shall not be around here in another three years.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Say it isn't so.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

IRAN—PERSECUTION OF BAHÁ'IS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, my question is for the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. On January 30, the Toronto Star contained a lengthy article on Iran's current practices with respect to the people of the Baha'i faith. The article states:

Iran, whose systematic use of torture and executions without fair trial is under investigation by the United Nations, has become the first country in the world to denounce the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

According to this article, the Iranian ambassador to the United Nations said that his country "would not hesitate to violate" the declaration because it derives from "the Judeo-Christian tradition." Apparently, Iran, which voted for the declaration, now claims that it abides only by the "divine law" of its 1979 Islamic constitution. As a result of this domestic Iranian policy, there are over 3,000 Iranians of the Baha'i faith who are being singled out, persecuted and punished.

In light of the current status or rupture of relations between Canada and Iran, would the acting leader inform the Senate what, if any, steps the government is contemplating to isolate and deter this intolerable action and conduct?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take the question as notice and attempt to get an answer.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—QUORUM—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have received the following message from the House of Commons:

Tuesday, February 5, 1985

Ordered,—That the quorum of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages Policy and Programs be six members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when four members are present so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY CONSULTATION PAPER ON CHILD AND ELDERLY BENEFITS

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, February 12, 1985, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine and report upon the Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits, issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare, tabled in the Senate on 5th February, 1985; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such professional, clerical and technical personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

[English]

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO ENGAGE SERVICES

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purposes of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, can we assume that the explanation for this motion is the same as that given for a similar motion yesterday?

Senator Doody: My understanding is that the explanation is exactly the same. Senator Murray will be here shortly, if the honourable senator wishes to ask him further questions.

Senator Frith: In effect it rectifies an oversight. Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is prompted, as honourable senators might imagine, by the order paper. We have been here for two days now. There has been committee activity but there has not been very much activity for the Senate as a whole. Yesterday I think we established a record by adjourning before 1430 hours.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Another Canadian record.

Senator Frith: I am glad that the former Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport is here to see that it is recorded in the Guinness record books.

Senator Perrault: That is statistically correct.

Senator Frith: So, can the acting leader tell us whether we can expect any more legislation from the other place?

Honourable senators will remember that when we adjourned on January 24 I asked whether we could look forward to some legislation, particularly in reference to statements made in the Speech from the Throne about what Parliament was going to be asked to do. That speech was made last September. There has been very little legislation, except that which was carried over from the previous government.

Would the acting leader tell us whether we can anticipate any more legislation and, if not, whether we will be sitting here next week? Is there any reason for us to be here next week, or will we adjourn for two or three weeks until the government manages finally to put its legislative program together and gives us something to work on?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have before us in committee probably the most important bill on the order paper at the present time, Bill C-11.

Senator Frith: It does not take much to be the most important one.

Senator Doody: I said that it is obviously the most important bill. Nuance is important too. Bill C-11 must be dealt with. If it is dealt with this week, then things are fine. But whether we have to wait and deal with it next week or the week after is entirely up to honourable senators. I do not feel we can adjourn while that important piece of legislation is sitting on the order paper.

As for further business, I have been in contact with people in the other place. They tell me that there is some legislation on the way. They have not been all that definite so I cannot give a specific list of the legislation we can look forward to receiving next week. However, there will be some, and when I get a further update I will pass it on to honourable senators. I point out again that the adjournment plans hinge on the disposition of Bill C-11. We really cannot, in all conscience, show a great deal of responsibility by adjourning while this important piece of legislation is sitting out there.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, there are two aspects to the need for the Senate to be here to deal with Bill C-11. Agreed, it is important legislation. But it is hard to be convinced that it is very urgent, in view of the fact that it took so long in the other place and in view of the fact that the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the official representative of the government, has been absent this week and does not indicate that there is any great concern. Certainly, his trip to Africa is thoroughly justified but, in light of his absence, it is not justified to say that there is some urgency to this bill or that there is evidence of government concern about it.

The second point is that we should know tomorrow whether Bill C-11 is going to clear the National Finance Committee. However, whether it does or not, there is no need for the Senate to come back next week. If it wishes, the committee can continue to meet in the absence of the Senate, as it did last week. So, I advise the Acting Leader of the Government and house leader that no case has been made out for our coming back next week because of Bill C-11, especially if it transpires that that bill does not clear the National Finance Committee. I suggest he reconsider the question and try to obtain further detail for us tomorrow as to whether there will be any business for the Senate to deal with next week.

• (1410)

Senator Doody: The honourable senator raises a couple of very interesting points, one of which, of course, is the absence of Senator Roblin on official government business. I am sure that all senators are aware of the fact that Senator Roblin is leading an official delegation. His absence from the Senate in no way implies that Bill C-11 is not an important piece of legislation. In fact, if my memory serves me correctly, before he left, an all-party agreement had been reached in the other place to pass that particular piece of legislation. Therefore, Senator Roblin had no way of knowing that the honourable senators opposite were not in accord with their fellows in the other chamber.

Senator Frith: He was at the first meeting of the committee; he knew.

Senator Doody: One would assume that an all-party agreement would be an all-party agreement and that it would hold good for both houses. That is obviously not the case.

Senator Frith: Let the record show "Oh, oh."

Senator Doody: There are obviously two different parties with varying degrees of leadership, and we will see how that develops, as we go along.

On the other hand, I suggest that it would be rather improper for me to assume that Bill C-11 will not be passed this week or next week, or even the following week, by saying that we are going to adjourn until such time as the bill is passed. Obviously, the Senate's responsibility is to the legislation, and to its duties and, as I have said, the major piece of legislation before us now is Bill C-11. I certainly would not be a party to asking this house to adjourn to await the pleasure of the committee. I think we should be at the disposal of the public to pass that bill when the committee sees fit to send it to us.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, reference has been made to an all-party agreement as the reason why this chamber ought to pass this bill quickly, almost without scrutiny. Now that the Acting Leader of the Government has referred to an all-party agreement, perhaps he could tell us who were the participants in this agreement. Who agreed, and to what?

Senator Doody: My information is that the agreement was made at a meeting of the leaders in the other place. However, I can certainly obtain the details if my honourable friend is not aware of them.

My reason for raising the all-party agreement was to demonstrate the fact that there was not a great deal of justification for Senator Frith's saying that Senator Roblin had treated this bill with something less than urgency by leaving on official business. Senator Roblin had every reason to believe, as we all did, that Bill C-11 had been agreed to in its present context by all of the parties on the Hill and, therefore, Senator Roblin left here with a free conscience.

Senator Frith: Senator Roblin was at the first meeting of the committee—

Senator MacEachen: In my opinion, the Acting Leader of the Government is introducing a principle into the discussion that I totally reject, and that is that arrangements reached among parties in the House of Commons are binding upon the parties in the Senate. That is certainly an objectionable principle, and flouts very directly any concept of an independent Senate.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: It is not so long ago that the former Leader of the Government in the Senate took his instructions from you, directly.

Senator Frith: Never, never; a scandalous suggestion.

Senator MacEachen: Never, never.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

CANADA-BELGIUM SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENT—DELAY IN TABLING

Hon. John M. Godfrey: I have a question for the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. You have today tabled an agreement on social security between Belgium and Canada dated May 10, 1984. That tabling was considerably quicker than the introduction of the Trade Marks Act I referred to yesterday. But I would like to ask why there has been a delay in tabling from May 10, 1984 until now. Perhaps the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate would explain.

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Off the top of my head, I really cannot tell the honourable senator, unless it was coming by Canada Post. I will try to find out for him the reason for the delay.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

RUMOURED DISSOLUTION

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate.

There are rumours all over Parliament Hill that the government intends to dissolve the Economic Council of Canada. I should like to know if those rumours are true and, if so, could the Acting Leader of the Government tell us why the government is taking that action?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): I thank the honourable senator for the question, but I have not been privy to those rumours. So, since I have not even heard those rumours, it is difficult for me to say that there has been any government policy change in that direction.

If the honourable senator wants me to ask the responsible ministry for some information on that subject, I would be only too happy to oblige.

Senator Marsden: I would be grateful if you would clarify the matter for us. At the same time, I wonder if the government is aware that the Economic Council of Canada, after years of urging, has finally established an advisory council on the relationship of women to the Canadian economy; that it has commissioned a number of research papers, some of which are not yet published; and that it held an important conference last November which was the first time the Economic Council of Canada looked at the relationship of women to the Canadian economy, and various other aspects of the economy affecting women.

Senator Doody: May I take the question as notice and attempt to obtain that information for the senator?

Senator Marsden: Yes. At the same time, could the acting leader ask the officials, if they are planning to disband the Economic Council of Canada, how they plan to carry forward the research program in this area of women and their relationship to the economy that has been established by the Economic Council of Canada?

Senator Doody: The last part of the question may be difficult to answer because it was preceded by an "if", and they may not be in a position to supply that information. I will certainly attempt to obtain that information for the honourable senator.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Everything else is hypothetical.

ENERGY

PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE OIL

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: My question is for the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate.

My honourable friend, coming from the province of Newfoundland, is very familiar with the high cost of fuel in Canada. Could the acting leader confirm whether it is correct that by acceptance by or decision of the government, Canadian crude oil is now being sold in Chicago at prices lower than those at which it is being sold in Canada and, hence, Canadians, including residents of Newfoundland, are paying prices that are higher than those we expect Americans to pay?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): I cannot confirm that, but I will certainly look into the matter for the honourable senator.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: My question is a supplementary one. While the Acting Leader of the Government is looking into the matter of the price of crude oil in Chicago, and if it is true that it is being sold for less in Chicago, could he tell us whether that will result in a loss in tax revenue to the various governments that tax that oil, whether it reflects a reduction in the price charged by the oil companies, and whether the oil companies are making a profit or not? If they are making a profit, why can they not make a profit in Canada selling oil at 18 cents less?

Senator Doody: I will certainly attempt to obtain all the information I can, senator.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William M. Kelly moved second reading of Bill S-3, to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Zambia, Canada and the Kingdom of Thailand, Canada and the Republic of Cyprus and Canada and the Federative Republic of Brazil for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Zambia, Canada and the Kingdom of Thailand, Canada and the Republic of Cyprus and Canada and the Federative Republic of Brazil for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

The four tax conventions under review follow the general pattern of the conventions previously approved by Parliament. The number of Canadian tax treaties in force is 34. The conventions with Cameroon, Ivory Coast, Kenya and Sri Lanka, approved by Parliament last June, should be ratified in the near future. After their ratification, the number of conventions in force will reach 38. The total number will reach 42 once the four conventions under study are ratified.

Honourable senators, I should now like to indicate the main elements of these tax treaties. Generally, dividends paid by Canadian enterprises may be taxed in Canada at a maximum rate of 15 per cent. In the case of dividends paid by a Thai enterprise, a 15 per cent rate will apply in Thailand if the Canadian company receiving the dividends holds an equity percentage of at least 15 per cent in the company paying the dividends and if the latter company engages in an industrial undertaking. In the case of dividends paid by a Cyprus enterprise, an exemption will apply as long as Cyprus does not impose a tax on dividends in addition to the tax chargeable on the profits of companies. If Cyprus introduces a tax on dividends, the rate will be limited at 15 per cent under the convention. For dividends paid by a Brazilian enterprise, a maximum rate of 15 per cent will apply but only if they are derived by a Canadian enterprise which holds an equity percentage of at least 10 per cent in the enterprise paying the dividends.

In the case of interest paid by a resident of one country to a resident of the other country, a general rate of 15 per cent will apply. However, there are a number of exceptions. In the case of Brazil, the 15 per cent rate applies only if the interest is derived by a company. In addition, with respect to interest paid to the government, a political subdivision or an agency wholly owned by the government or the subdivision, that interest is exempt in the country in which it arises. In the case of Cyprus, there is also an exemption on government bonds and on interest paid in respect of a loan made, guaranteed or insured, or a credit extended, guaranteed or insured by the Export Development Corporation or its Cyprus equivalent. The 15 per cent rate does not apply in the case of interest arising in Thailand; the rates are 10 per cent if the interest is received by a Canadian financial institution and 25 per cent in other cases. However, interest paid to the government, the central bank and EDC are exempt.

With respect to royalties, the conventions provide for a general rate of 15 per cent in the source country, except that in the case of Cyprus the rate is set at 10 per cent. In addition, with respect to Brazil, the 15 per cent rate applies only if the recipient is a company. Copyright royalties are exempt in the case of Cyprus and subject to a 5 per cent rate in the case of Thailand.

Honourable senators, there are certain other elements of these tax treaties worth mentioning. For example, the treaty provisions dealing with capital gains reflect the standard Canadian position enabling the source country to tax gains arising on the sale of real property, business assets and shares in real estate companies.

Under these conventions discrimination on the basis of nationality is prohibited, thereby ensuring nationals of a country equal treatment with nationals of the other country in the same circumstances. However, this does not prevent a country from providing fiscal incentives—for example, the small business deduction—on the basis of the residence of the taxpayer.

Canada has preserved its right to tax pensions paid to residents of the countries included in this bill. However, in the case of the conventions with Cyprus and Brazil the right to tax pensions the amount of which is less than $10,000 and $4,000, respectively, in a calendar year is given exclusively to the country of residence of the recipient. War veterans' pensions are generally exempt.

In Canada double taxation of foreign source income of Canadian residents is alleviated by way of a foreign tax credit in accordance with the limitations provided for in the Canadian legislation. In addition, dividends received by a company resident in Canada from the exempt surplus of its foreign affiliate resident in a treaty country will be exempt from tax in Canada.

The conventions also contain "tax-sparing" provisions or, in the case of Brazil, a "matching credit" provision. Under these provisions the tax incentives granted by the domestic legislation of those countries will be recognized in computing Canadian tax and, therefore, Canadian residents will be allowed to deduct the amount of tax which would have been payable in the absence of the special incentive legislation in the other country.

On balance, the terms of the tax conventions provide some equitable solutions to the various problems of double taxation existing between Canada and these countries. Each of these countries hopes to implement the bilateral tax convention as soon as possible and, consequently, I commend this bill to the most favourable consideration of this chamber.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to add a word about this bill. I have noticed that the objectionable features that appeared in other tax bills, which were objected to by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which permitted a change in the tax treaty by regulation, are not included in this bill. I want to commend the government on that.

On motion of Senator Leblanc, debate adjourned.

TRANSPORT

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE TO STUDY POLICY ON CAR RENTAL OUTLETS AT AIRPORTS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report upon the policy of the Department of Transport regarding car rental outlets at airports, more particularly its refusal to open up competition, to increase the number of car rental outlets, the effect of restricting the major share of business to multinational companies, the adverse effect on jobs in Canadian companies and the advantages to the travelling public of greater competition.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, having had a long and deep interest in airports and car rentals, I undertook a careful reading of the points Senator Argue raised in his inquiry; the comments of Senator Steuart; and, indeed, even some of the questions raised by the Acting Leader of the Government.

I am somewhat mystified as to why Senator Argue would wish the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to spend time on an issue which has undergone a comprehensive examination in the House of Commons Transport Committee. The Minister of Transport appeared before that committee on two occasions, in November and in December of 1984. I have also read the questions raised by the member from Regina East in the House of Commons.

In 1979, the current Minister of Transport—as he was then in his previous life—initiated a scrutiny of the airport vehicle rental concession policy. My understanding is that a consultative process was established with the car rental industry. What was considered to be a fair and workable policy was developed.

One of the aspects of the 1979 policy was a new arrears provision which, essentially, (a) precluded a company in arrears from tendering, and (b) precluded a company from conducting business under a trademark or trade name identical or similar to that used by a person or corporation in arrears. All of this arose because a whole series of companies operating at Canadian airports had failed to pay many millions of dollars. This was not peculiar to one region or to large or small airports. My understanding is that arrears were running wild in virtually all parts of the country.

The existing airport vehicle rental concession policy governs the tendering procedures and licensing requirements for vehicle rental concessions at 68 Transport Canada airports across the country.

Following a consultation process which took place throughout the early 1980s, a policy was approved by the present Minister of Transport on October 19, 1984. I am somewhat reluctant to be critical of Senator Argue, who is not in the chamber this afternoon, but the policy that is now in existence was in existence during the four years that he was a member of the cabinet. I do not recall his saying, either in this chamber or elsewhere, that it was unfair or disadvantageous, as the present motion indicates. In fact, the new policy announced on October 19, 1984 is a relaxation of the policies that have existed up until now. I will speak about that in a moment. Specifically, one does not have to pay the arrears. One can agree to pay them over five years, for example. So there is, in fact, an easing-up.

The tendering process commenced immediately after the policy was announced on October 19 last with advertisements appearing on October 26 and 27, and November 2 and 3. Cross-country information briefings were held by the Department of Transport in various centres between November 13 and 23 and tenders officially closed on December 7, 1984. I might add that a total of 262 tender submissions were received, and 218 were deemed successful. The companies that are to be awarded licences to operate at Canadian airports for the next five years have offered annual minimum guarantees to Transport Canada totalling over $61.5 million.

Franchisees bidding under the Holiday flag—and that is the concern raised by Senator Argue—submitted tenders at only 13 of the 59 airports—we should bear in mind that some of them are very small airports—and they were successful in eight, being awarded concessions at Charlottetown, Halifax, Moncton, St. John's, Thunder Bay, Regina, Lethbridge and Ottawa. Now in place are contracts that commenced on January 1, 1985, and that run through to 1990.

With respect to the offers of the multinational corporations, the vehicle rental licences will be awarded in all but 13 instances—that is, of the 218 that were awarded—to Canadian businesses operating as franchisees of either multinational companies or domestic companies. The successful multinational tenderers bid at Vancouver, Edmonton, Toronto, Kamloops, Castlegar, Whitehorse, Port Hardy, Smithers and Watson Lake. The majority of the employees of all of those companies are Canadian, while some of the operators may be multinational.

The tender call has provided from two to six car rental counters at each airport. The Canadian public is thus well served by a competitive environment at the airport. Under the 1979 policy all counter spaces were of equal size and each successful tenderer had an equal number of parking spaces. Under the 1984 policy, the counter spaces will vary in size, with companies making the highest bid getting larger counters and a larger number of vehicle parking spaces. The travelling public can also make prior arrangements to be picked up by off-airport car rental operators if they choose to do so—that being another operation.

For January 1985, following the recent tender call, I am advised that at 36 of the 59 smaller airports, where four counters are available, there were not more than four bids, so that everyone who applied was successful, and at many of these airports we have three or less operators. Currently, of the 59 smaller airports, only 24 operate with full four counters.

The overriding principle governing the 1984 policy is that the 1979 policy be continued with few exceptions, those being in the areas of, first, official language requirements, and, secondly, the arrears provision. The arrears provision of the 1984 policy is essentially the same as the 1979 policy. Extensive representations were made on behalf of the Holiday Rent-A-Car system in relation to the applicability of the arrears policy. That is, they were seeking to have their arrears written off.

The Deputy Leader of the Government asked Senator Argue to comment on the fairness of allowing Holiday to continue when others had to pay their arrears. There are many Holiday franchises that are in arrears. At those particular airports they are not, of course, entitled to bid, but that does not stop them from bidding at airports in which they are not in arrears. This particular outfit, which has just been awarded eight concessions, is indebted to the Government of Canada to the tune of over $800,000. Yet it is still entitled to bid under the revised policy.

Strong representations were made to the effect that this operator be permitted to participate in the most recent tender call on a national basis—that is, as a national system—notwithstanding the fact that arrears totalling over $800,000 were outstanding. Holiday's argument was based primarily on the fact that at many of the locations where licences had been cancelled by virtue of substantial arrears, new franchisees were in place. That is, they were still Holiday Rent-A-Car franchises, but the former operator had left and there was a new man in his place.

The argument advanced suggested that the new franchisees should not be penalized by being prevented from tendering by reason of the arrears owing from previous franchisees. Surely, honourable senators, anyone purchasing or acquiring one of those franchises would undertake, either on his own or through accountants or lawyers, to determine whether that franchise was in good standing. At least, one would believe they would do so.

After careful deliberation, it was decided that the Holiday position could not be permitted to stand and that the arrears policy had to be applied consistently. Over the past five years, companies such as Avis, Tilden, Hertz and Budget paid up arrears that were owing at some of their locations by reason of licences being cancelled. To have permitted Holiday to participate in a tender without the arrears being paid, or the matter being satisfactorily resolved by an agreement to repay, would have been very inequitable to all of the other concessionaires who have diligently paid the rent or paid the arrears over the past number of years.

It is rather surprising that as recently as December 6 a question was put to the minister in the other place suggesting that the car rental policy at airports was politically influenced. Apparently, that member had spent many hours with the minister in attempting to convince him that the arrears policy should be set aside for that one particular operator, but I believe that is not an issue with Senator Argue.

As I mentioned earlier, extensive answers and explanations were given on November 22 and December 3 concerning the application of the policy with respect to the operator mentioned by Senator Argue, and for that reason I raise the question as to whether it is necessary for the Transport and Communications Committee of the Senate to proceed with an inquiry. In fact, I have been asked by the minister to explain that four options were provided to that operator who feels aggrieved.

First, he could bid under the Holiday name at any airport where Holiday was not in arrears, and could, therefore, continue operation. Second, he could settle the arrears at any airport and bid in that name. Third, he could settle the national arrears or make some arrangement for repayment over a period of time and bid at all airports. Fourth, he could bid at any airport having Holiday arrears under any other name. There were a good many options open to this operator.

I could go on and illuminate the issue even more so by quoting from the minister who, as I have said, appeared before the standing committee on November 29 and in early December but, rather than belabour the subject, I will ask honourable senators who are interested in this issue to look at those particular passages. I have some difficulty understanding why further time is necessary. I regret that Senator Argue is not here today to deal with this matter, but if he is keen to proceed, perhaps instead of proceeding on this narrow issue he might consider broadening the terms of reference which he proposed for study and look at all forms of concessions, whether they be taxi, food, gift shops, or whatever which operate at or provide services to and from airports in Canada. I am advised by the Minister of Transport that such an exercise would be far more worthwhile and that, in fact, the matter has not been reviewed in recent years. It seems to be moving along slowly and there may be some valid complaints.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

HUMAN RIGHTS

MEETING OF EXPERTS—DESIRABILITY OF SENATE
PARTICIPATION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Stanley Haidasz rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, December 20, 1984

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the desirability of its participation in the preparations for and deliberations of the special meeting of experts on human rights, which is to be held in Ottawa, April 23rd to mid-June, 1985, as directed in the concluding document of the Madrid Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

He said: Honourable senators, I welcome this opportunity to speak to my notice of inquiry given December 20, 1984 that will call the attention of the Senate to the desirability of its participation in the preparations and deliberations of the special meeting of experts on human rights.

This spring, 35 countries, signatories to the Helsinki Final Act, will be sending their delegates to Ottawa to a special meeting of experts on human rights in accordance with a directive of the concluding document of the Madrid Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. This directive, found in paragraph 17 of the concluding document, reads as follows:

The representatives of the participating states decided to convene a meeting of experts of the participating states on questions concerning respect in their states for human rights and fundamental freedoms in all aspects as embodied in the Final Act. Upon invitation of the Government of Canada, the meeting of experts will be held in Ottawa beginning May 7, 1985. It will draw up conclusions and recommendations to be submitted to the governments of all participating states. The meeting will be preceded by a preparatory meeting which will also be held in Ottawa beginning April 23, 1985.

Honourable senators, this decision was an important achievement of that lengthy and turbulent Madrid review meeting which, having begun auspiciously on November 11, 1980, was interrupted by the crises of the consequences of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the imposition of martial law in Poland and the Soviet shooting down of the Korean civilian airliner. However, it was finally ended September 19, 1983 with a surprisingly significant concluding document. Along with some senators and members of the House of Commons, I had the privilege of attending with the Parliamentary Observers Group at this extraordinary meeting at which the Canadian Government Delegation, led by Ambassador R. L. Rodgers, performed so effectively. It was at this meeting in Madrid, precisely on November 12, 1980, that the proposal for a meeting of experts on human rights was made by the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, who at that time was Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs. On this occasion he stated that Canada places great importance on the principle of human rights and its application in humanitarian co-operation between participating states, and also appealed for agreement at the meeting on the inherent dignity of the human person. Since the very beginning of the C.S.C.E. Canada has been in the forefront of the movement toward the adoption of human rights and fundamental freedoms as an essential part of any agreement and follow-up meetings. I would also like to mention that the Madrid Review Meeting, which can be described as an extended talk-fest abounding with political confrontation, did not end in failure as did the previous meeting in Belgrade, thanks in great measure to the success of U.S. Ambassador Max Kampelman's vigorous and effective leadership in preserving unity in the western ranks.

Human rights has emerged as an especially important and burning issue for the international community since World War II and the perpetration of the atrocities on and genocide committed by Hitler's Nazis of millions of innocent people of various nationalities, both inside and outside concentration camps. Some of the survivors are with us in Canada today, painfully remembering and enduring those violations of human dignity. Just last week a group of these survivors revisited the Nazi extermination camp at Auschwitz, reminding us that only 40 years ago in that part of western civilization and in a period of unprecedented technological development, such horrid deeds were inflicted on innocent civilians. Unfortunately, these crimes are often forgotten or ignored and even unknown by many and, worse still, remain unredressed by some persons in positions of responsibility.

However, since signing the Helsinki Final Act in 1975 the Canadian government and Canadians in general have become increasingly aware of and concerned about violations of human rights. Many of us in this chamber took an active part in the discussions and the enactment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which was proclaimed on April 17, 1982. Many of us remember with pride those discussions, and we cannot forget the initiative that was shown by the Liberal government at that time under the leadership of the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau when the motion was introduced to patriate our Constitution and to entrench in our new Constitution a Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

At this time, I would also like to say a few words about non-governmental organizations. By themselves, laws on human rights are no more than abstractions, composed of empty words, actually guaranteeing nothing. However, governments and legislators are the ones who must take concrete action and promote policies in consultation with individual Canadians and their organizations. If left to themselves, victims of human rights violations have few, if any, opportunities to make laws or to enforce them. That burden has traditionally fallen on others; organizations and churches have come together in order to improve the lot of those who suffer deprivation and oppression. These are known as non-governmental organizations to whom we owe a great deal of recognition and gratitude.

It is no exaggeration when I say that the non-governmental organizations have had a great influence on the development of national and international human rights laws and conventions. I do not think there is a single resolution—perhaps not even a single declaration or treaty—in the field of human rights which does not ultimately owe its very existence, and frequently its formulation, to the untiring efforts of non-governmental organizations. Those organizations play a vital role in the preparation of briefs, in the submission of complaints and the presentation of petitions.

Within the democratic countries of the world, there are hundreds of these non-governmental organizations, and in Canada we have many of them. This afternoon I would like to pay a special tribute and say a word of thanks to them in this chamber for their efforts and for their assistance to victims and legislators alike.

This same appreciation and recognition is owing equally to the teachers of human rights, such as the late Bora Laskin and Professor John Humphrey of McGill University, whom I would call the elder statesmen in the field of human rights, here in Canada. Also, until recently, there was Judge Walter Tarnopolsky and a human rights expert, Dr. Richard Szawłowski, formerly of the University of Calgary, who has written widely on the subject of human rights legislation and practices in eastern European countries.

Non-governmental organizations have prodded legislators and governments towards human rights legislation. I would like to mention especially Amnesty International which has frequently, through its annual reports, for example, prodded governments to take action wherever violations of human rights took place. In Canada, the Committee of Captive European Nations, the Human Rights Committee of the Baltic Organizations, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian branch of the North American Study Centre for Polish Affairs and other organizations have frequently approached governments and legislators with respect to human rights matters. I would say that they have even reproached some governments for excessive recourse to quiet diplomacy and slowness of action in some cases of violations of human rights.

These and other representations, I believe, have moved the hearts of many politicians. For instance, the Honourable Flora MacDonald speaking at the United Nations on November 25, 1979, stated:

Too often the international community has been reluctant or culpably slow to take steps to condemn and rectify these violations of human rights . . . . Public opinion today is calling us to account for this lethargy, this disregard for human suffering, this irresponsibility.

I am happy to note that the issue of human rights has become an increasingly major feature of Canadian foreign policy. In October 1978 the Honourable Don Jamieson stated that Canada has a moral and legal obligation to be involved in the promotion of human rights, both at home and abroad. In 1981, while addressing the Canadian Human Rights Foundation, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan stated:

There has been a change of attitude in Canada . . . . Human rights are now recognized as a bona fide issue in foreign policy . . . . Governments must be made aware that their behaviour towards their own citizens will affect their international standing and their ability to develop normal and fruitful relations with other countries.

On April 22, 1983, the Honourable Allan MacEachen expressed support for a tougher policy on aid to countries where human rights were violated. He stated at that time that it was entirely right and appropriate that human rights should be accorded its place as one of the main principles of Canadian foreign policy. He also stated that we should be very careful to whom we extend our aid. Not long ago, we also learned that the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Honourable Joseph Clark, had promised to bring before Parliament the foreign policy review paper of his government. I hope that human rights will be a major feature of that discussion paper.

Canadian parliamentarians have also been active in the field of human rights. They have taken the initiative to fill a vacuum within the Canadian parliamentary system. On July 14, 1977, some senators and members of the House of Commons representing all political parties met to form a Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki-Monitoring Group. This group was a voluntary, ad hoc body formed for the purpose of providing a forum for parliamentary and public discussion focussing on the Helsinki Final Act and its review meetings. This group held several meetings with these non-governmental organizations, as I have mentioned. The group has also heard from Canadian diplomats, members of the teaching profession—amongst them Professor Irwin Cotler, a former president of the Canadian Jewish Congress—and representatives of the Canadian Committee of Captive European Nations and other national organizations.

Before Parliament was dissolved, one of the co-chairmen of that ad hoc parliamentary committee was our colleague, the Honourable Paul Yuzyk, a man who has devoted much of his time and effort to matters of human rights both at NATO and here in the Senate.

These parliamentarians spearheaded discussions on human rights at NATO and at International Parliamentary Union meetings. They attended the Belgrade Review Meeting of the Helsinki Final Act, and were the driving force behind the public hearings of the pro tempore parliamentary sub-committee on foreign affairs in preparation for the Madrid Review Meeting and, of course, participated as observers at that meeting in Madrid.

The dissolution of the Thirty-second Parliament deactivated all parliamentary committees. The long election, followed by the time it took to call the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada, has prolonged their inactivity. I hope that we in the Senate who have been members of this pro tempore and ad hoc parliamentary committee which has been monitoring the Helsinki Final Act will co-operate with anyone taking the initiative to continue these efforts. I believe that Senator Yuzyk has taken some steps in the direction of resurrecting that committee, if nothing else can be done before the meeting in Ottawa next spring of the human rights experts.

As I mentioned, the official preparatory meeting takes place on April 23. That leaves us approximately two months before any meeting can be held with experts in Canada, with officials from the Department of External Affairs, and especially with those NGOs who wish to participate in the preparatory meetings.

I might add that many interested national organizations and individual Canadians are anxiously awaiting the federal government's plans for those meetings. National organizations of European backgrounds in particular have a special interest in the conduct and outcome of those meetings, especially in view of recent pronouncements by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There is no valid reason for inaction or delay in this matter, as the urgency exists and suggestions abound.

In a speech in this chamber on November 8, 1979, I proposed a motion similar to one I proposed in 1978. That motion was to establish a Standing Joint Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms for the purpose of monitoring, studying and making recommendations on Canadian domestic and international obligations in human rights matters.

The other day we learned that the Minister of Justice, the Honourable John C. Crosbie, called for parliamentary investigation on his discussion paper entitled "The Equality Issues in Federal Law". On April 17, those will become an active part of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Such a committee could also tackle the very thorny issue of compensation to Japanese Canadians for the conduct of the Canadian government involving thousands of Japanese Canadians during World War II.

Many other suggestions have been made since the Helsinki Final Act was signed in 1975 for some continuing mechanism to monitor human rights in Canada. Professor Irwin Cotler suggested the creation of a commission to monitor the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act and domestic Canadian compliance.

It is interesting and worthwhile to note that both the emergence of active democratic groups in eastern Europe and their suppression had a powerful impact, especially on U.S. public opinion, demonstrating the value and potential usefulness of the Helsinki Final Act. What eventually emerged in the United States was an extraordinary and unprecedented public body established in June, 1976, comprised of 15 members of the legislative and executive branches, and called the U.S. Commission on Security and Co-operation in Europe. That commission is composed of six senators, six congressmen and three members appointed by the executive branch to monitor compliance with the provisions of the Helsinki Accord. That commission also conducts studies in some countries of Europe, and produces regular reports. The prestige and the usefulness of that commission led the President of the United States to integrate it into the official U.S. delegation to the CSCE review meetings of the Helsinki Final Act.

Honourable senators, the least that the Canadian government can propose or adopt is what precedence has established in 1977 for the Belgrade Review Meeting and in 1980 for the preparation of the Madrid Review Meeting. But experience and expectations call for an improved mechanism to get parliamentarians and non-governmental organizations more involved for greater effectiveness; otherwise the needs and the hopes of our people will be frustrated and the credibility of the government could be jeopardized. The talents and potential of senators and members of the House of Commons should be better mobilized and deployed to deal more effectively with human rights matters. Uniting the efforts of both houses of Parliament in this task would give competence and prestige; it would reduce delays; and it would eliminate duplications of cost and manpower.

The present ad hoc situation and only partial commitment is inadequate. A formal, official and permanent committee with adequate powers and resources would raise the human rights issue to its rightful importance, giving it urgent and profound attention on a regular basis and with total commitment. It would also serve, I believe, as an additional vehicle—indeed a more effective vehicle—for championing the rights of our citizens and fellow men elsewhere.

I would remind honourable senators of a quote in "Faust" written by Goethe which says "only he is worthy of life and freedom who struggles for it each day."

Honourable senators, if there is wisdom among us, and I believe there is, and if there is will, as I believe there should be, and if there is experience, as evidently there is in this chamber, then these qualities should be welded and employed in the best way to preserve and enhance human rights and fundamental freedoms. I therefore invite honourable senators to take up this challenge with a sense of urgency and determination. This could be another great opportunity for us to serve our fellow man.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a brief comment regarding Senator Haidasz's remarks.

By way of coincidence, and not knowing that he was going to introduce this matter this afternoon, I received a letter from the Department of External Affairs this morning requesting me, as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, to suggest two or three names of members of the committee who might wish to participate in the arrangements for this conference.

Following consultation with the Deputy Chairman, Senator Macquarrie, I have dictated a letter in reply this afternoon suggesting two or three names. I am pleased to say that those two or three names included those of Senator Haidasz and Senator Yuzyk, who, I am sure everyone will agree, are leading authorities in this area.

It is encouraging to know that the department is going to use some of the expertise found in the Senate in the early planning for this conference.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I have some opinions that I should like to express on this Inquiry. I think this matter should go beyond this chamber. I am pleased to hear that Senator van Roggen has already taken action and has suggested a committee.

I should like to speak on this Inquiry so that it will take on a much wider scope, including both houses of Parliament, and non-government organizations.

Therefore, honourable senators, I move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Senator Yuzyk, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE ANNUAL REPORT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Hon. Jack Marshall pursuant to notice of Tuesday, February 5, 1985, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine the Annual Report of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation for the fiscal year ended April 30, 1984, tabled in the Senate on 5th February, 1985.

He said: Honourable senators, you will recall that on December 18, 1984, Senator Bielish moved second reading of Bill C-5, which proposed an amendment to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act to increase the permitted borrowing limit of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to $30 million from the present level of $20 million. At that time some concern was expressed by honourable senators from the prairie provinces, including Senator Molgat and Senator Steuart, and by Senator LeBlanc from the east, which related to certain aspects of the bill and the corporation itself. One of those concerns was whether or not the corporation was functioning in the best interests of the fishermen. There were difficulties in marketing, particularly with respect to Arctic char, the limitation of the resource, transportation and other matters. At that time I introduced the motion to study the marketing of fish.

When the report of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was tabled yesterday, the opportunity arose to deal with those concerns immediately. Until the original motion to study the marketing of fish in Canada is deliberated upon in the other place, we can deal immediately with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation aspects. I hope that within a week we can call witnesses and endeavour to deal with those problems which were brought to light during the debate on the bill on December 18 and 19.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that this kind of a motion would not be necessary in the House of Commons. Two years ago they revised their rules following a unanimous report of a committee permitting committees on their own initiative to consider reports and, in fact, to do anything they want. I think it is about time that the Senate adopted a similar rule. We should catch up with the reform that has been ongoing in the House of Commons for two years, and it should not be necessary for Senator Marshall to make this kind of a motion.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I find myself agreeing with the proposals made by Senator Godfrey, but I do not intend to debate them at this time.

Senator Godfrey: You could take it under consideration in the Standing Rules and Orders Committee.

Senator Molgat: We cannot deal with that yet because the chairmanship has not been settled.

Honourable senators, dealing with the report of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, I do not have any objection to this report being referred to the Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee except that I would hope that whatever we do in the course of the study would not prevent a further study under the other motion which Senator Marshall has placed before us, namely, for a review of the whole question of fish marketing. It may be that after we study the report and hear witnesses we will conclude we need not go any further. If that were to be the decision of the committee, then so be it. However, if the committee felt that there was need for a further in-depth study, I hope that nothing which we might do at this stage would preclude that from happening. I will have more comments to make when we come to the other motion that Senator Marshall proposes. For the time being, I believe that this would be a useful beginning for our committee.

Senator Marshall: I see no problem with including whatever information we obtain in investigating that corporation. The only problem that I foresee is that we would not be able to travel to the prairie provinces if we decided to hear witnesses there. It would be necessary for us to present a budget to the Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee before we handled that aspect of our hearings. I understand that the Chairman of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, Mr. Tansley, is in Ottawa and we could certainly hear him and others at this time, and their testimony could be included as part of our report.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY FISH MARKETING IN CANADA

Leave having been given to revert to Orders of the Day:

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bielish:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada, and all implications thereof;

That the Committee have power to travel from place to place in Canada; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is the motion that was referred to by Senator Marshall when speaking to the motion that we just dealt with. Senator Molgat had earlier indicated a concern that that motion should clearly include the subject of freshwater fish marketing. Also, that was the motion that we stood in order to give us an opportunity to consult our colleagues.

We are now prepared to support that motion, although Senator Molgat may have a few comments to make on this motion. We can deal with it today, if we have leave to reinstate it to the order paper for consideration now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I support the motion made by Senator Marshall. However, once this proposal is referred to committee we may have to take careful note of the whole of the problem and decide how we want to deal with it. When I spoke to this matter at an earlier date I did not have figures with me, but it was my impression that the fishery which concerns my region directly was a very small one in volume and in numbers of people involved as compared to the big Atlantic fishery. I have since obtained more information on this subject, and I have noticed that the problem is a regional one when you look at the matter as a whole. The province that is mainly concerned is Newfoundland where, if you are going by the number of fishermen involved, that number is of the order of 30,000. The next closest in number is Nova Scotia with approximately 11,000 fishermen—almost one-third of that of Newfoundland. The province of New Brunswick has approximately 5,000 to 6,000 fishermen. Prince Edward Island has roughly 2,500 fishermen. Quebec has approximately 4,500 to 5,000 fishermen, so that is somewhat smaller than the number in New Brunswick but is in the same area. Therefore, your total Atlantic involvement is approximately 50,000 to 60,000 fishermen. One must remember that almost 30,000 of those fishermen are from Newfoundland.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: May I ask a question at this point? Do the figures quoted by Senator Molgat include part-time fishermen?

• (1520)

Senator Molgat: It includes anyone who holds a licence to fish, that is, full-time or part-time. The source of my information is the annual statistical review of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

The Pacific fisheries have a total of approximately 18,000 fishermen. By comparison, the freshwater fish region that we were discussing earlier is very small; it has between 5,000 and 6,000 fishermen. New Brunswick has approximately the same number of fishermen, but there is a different social impact because these fishermen are, mainly, from native communities and are spread over a wide area.

Honourable senators, we are dealing with a whole series of problems which I am not sure can be dealt with in the committee under the auspices of one overall study. It may be that separate subcommittees should be set up to study the problems of the Atlantic fishery, the problems of the freshwater fishery, and the problems of the Pacific fishery. I raise that point now, before we commence our study, so that members will be conscious of the problems that exist and can then deal with them in the best way possible.

Honourable senators, there is a correlation between the number of fishermen involved and the volume of landings in tonnes and in value. They are approximately equivalent.

I am prepared to support the motion of Senator Marshall, but I think it is important that we start our committee proceedings by an internal analysis to ascertain how we will deal with the problem, and not necessarily assume that we can cover all aspects of this problem in the standing committee.

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, the motion deals with the question of marketing. At the moment, there are two areas in Canada where we have, to a certain extent, orderly marketing through two crown corporations, namely, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, which deals essentially with saltfish from Newfoundland, Labrador and North Shore Quebec, and the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation which deals with the marketing of all freshwater fish harvested in the prairie provinces.

The motion before us today is to study the question of marketing, obviously implicitly, for the areas not covered by those two crown corporations. As numerous royal commissions have shown, it is the disorderly marketing in the other areas which is causing the problems we are facing today.

No one denies that the establishment of those two crown corporations has substantially improved the situation regarding saltwater and freshwater fish marketing.

Senator Molgat forgot to mention one region of Canada, namely, Ontario. If there is a depressing effect on the native fishermen to whom he has referred, it is mainly because the freshwater fish harvested in the Great Lakes is sold at a cheaper price because the costs of harvesting are lower. Both compete in the same New York market. The fact that Ontario can satisfy itself with a lower price has a bearing on the fishermen from the prairie provinces. Unless there is some harmonious liaison between the two groups who compete on the same market, our fishermen of the prairie provinces will continue to receive low prices.

I would respectfully suggest that this motion be approved in order that we may study the problems of marketing as it relates to all fishermen in Canada.

As Senator Molgat has pointed out, this industry provides not only jobs for the thousands of fishermen who harvest but for an almost equal number of people who are employed in plants. If you add to that figure all those employed in other sectors, such as those who provide related services and who depend on the fishermen for their own living, it is clear that the fishing industry in Canada creates more jobs, I would venture to say, than the manufacturing of cars in Canada. At the moment, about 100,000 people are directly involved in the manufacturing of cars. Fishing involves many more. This is particularly true in Atlantic Canada and in the northern part of the prairie provinces. It is a main source of employment in areas where there is no alternative.

We tend to forget about the fishery in the Arctic. There, of course, the fishery has another rationale; it is more a fishery for subsistence than for international trade. Since it is one of the few areas of potential for our native people, we must also study the fishery in the Arctic.

Honourable senators, for all these reasons, I support the motion.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, fishermen in the Arctic, including the sub-Arctic, are not provided with the services of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation or those of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. However, mainly because Arctic fishermen do not get the dollar value for what they catch, they have, from time to time, subsidized both of these marketing boards.

Honourable senators, there is a number of different problems related to fishery activity of native people both in terms of subsistence use and commercial use. Although subsistence is the main use, changing lifestyles in the north are demanding a move towards commercial fishing. They can no longer rely solely on simple, subsistent harvesting for their own purposes. They have to start earning income in order to survive.

The high cost of transportation and of fuel has a tremendous influence on the harvesting of fish or animals for either subsistence or commercial purposes.

I would highly recommend and agree that, if a study is to be launched by the Senate, we should not lump the Arctic fishermen in with others. They may not be given a high priority because of their small numbers. I believe it will be necessary to establish a subcommittee in order to assess the problems of each area.

Last year I was in communication with fishermen of the Northwest Territories, who are serviced by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in Winnipeg. They were dissatisfied because they are not getting any dollar value from their catch. These days it costs a lot of money to fish. One has to purchase equipment and fuel as well as everything else. But fishermen are getting paid only in the neighbourhood of $1 per pound. They are lucky if they get $1.25 per pound. Not long ago it was 50 cents and 75 cents per pound. Today gasoline costs over $2 per gallon. In the high Arctic it costs in the neighbourhood of $3.50 per gallon. They are supposed to be making a living out of fishing, but in a sense we are subsidizing them. There is a good deal of importance attached to this matter and a study of the problem should be undertaken.

• (1530)

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, it is quite obvious that there is keen interest being shown in this subject from all regions. The marketing of fish is obviously an important subject. As both Senator Molgat and Senator De Bané have suggested, I am sure that the committee will study the matter slowly and carefully and will endeavour to cover all aspects of the problem in all regions. I do not believe it is necessary to hurry the report. It is important that we do it phase by phase and produce a report that will assist the fishery, which has always faced problems in this country.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator De Bané: Honourable senators, does the motion permit the committee to travel outside of Canada to see how our major competitors organize their orderly marketing, or are its activities confined to Canada?

Senator Marshall: We will start with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in Canada. As chairman of the committee, I will have to present a budget to the Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee to cover travel and the hiring of staff. I am sure that with His Honour the Speaker and Senator Frith being members of that committee, the budget will be approved very quickly.

Senator Frith: I pass.

Senator Marshall: At that time we shall take into consideration where the committee should travel, and in that connection I will seek the advice of Senator De Bané.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we adjourn, I should mention that the Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee will meet in room 356-S at 4 p.m.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

FELICITATIONS ON THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF ACCESSION TO THRONE

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, before we adjourn, may I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that today, February 6, is an important day in that it marks the thirty-third anniversary of the accession to the Throne of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, Queen of Canada.

Hearing Senator Haidasz speak on human rights and the importance of the contribution Canada can make with respect to those countries that are not as fortunate as Canada, brings home strongly to us the fact that having Her Majesty reign over us for 33 years with warmth, intelligence and courage has provided us with the foundations of freedom and security from which to work toward human rights elsewhere and enables us to assist other countries in pursuit of those goals.

Perhaps, therefore, it may be in order for this honourable house to send warm congratulations to Her Majesty and good wishes for a continued reign of many long years.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Long may she reign over us.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SECOND, THIRD AND FOURTH REPORTS OF COMMITTEE TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the committee's second, third and fourth reports approving budgets of the following committees:

- National Finance;
- Energy and Natural Resources;
- National Defence.

(For text of reports see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 12, 1985, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate based on a statement made by the Prime Minister on November 19 last, when he stated:

It is our hope and expectation there will be a full-blown budget in April, in the spring.

In view of the speculation in the press today that the budget may be delayed for a full month, can the acting leader confirm that this is another instance where the government has withdrawn from a previous commitment and that the budget will not come down in April?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can only confirm that the hope and expectation of the Prime Minister is probably still his hope and expectation.

I have no concrete knowledge of when the budget will come down. There has been speculation which I too have heard, but I am not in a position to confirm or deny it.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, subsequently, earlier this year, the Prime Minister advanced his sentiments from hope and expectation to a clear determination, when he said in the House of Commons that the Minister of Finance would bring down a budget towards the end of April. That is even more emphatic than the expression of hope and expectation; it is a clear determination.

I understand that the acting leader is unable to confirm or deny, but I would like him to undertake to find out and advise us at the next sitting whether the budget date will be in April, as originally stated by the Prime Minister.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: April of 1985.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I shall certainly make that effort.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the acting leader for his undertaking.

THE ESTIMATES

DATE OF TABLING

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I have one more question, which I hope will not prove too difficult. My question is: When does the government intend to table the main estimates?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): As soon as possible, honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, in recent years the practice has been to table the main estimates in the third week of February. I believe that has been the case in recent years—except for 1980, for well-known reasons. I wonder if the acting leader will determine for us whether that normal schedule is still to be followed by the government for the estimates of 1985-86 or is there some intention on the part of the government to postpone the tabling of those estimates?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have no reason to believe that the normal procedure will not be followed this year. Beyond that I cannot go, at this point.

Senator MacEachen: I appreciate the candor of the Acting Leader of the Government on this point. However, it is important for various reasons, to know whether the normal practice will be followed according to the schedule now proposed for the House of Commons, since that body will be in recess. I therefore ask whether the acting leader would inquire if it is the intention of the President of the Treasury Board to table the main estimates before or after the break is taken by the House of Commons.

Senator Doody: I can certainly make the inquiry and report back to this chamber.

TRANSPORT

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE TO STUDY POLICY ON CAR RENTAL OUTLETS AT AIRPORTS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report upon the policy of the Department of Transport regarding car rental outlets at airports, more particularly its refusal to open up competition, to increase the number of car rental outlets, the effect of restricting the major share of business to multinational companies, the adverse effect on jobs in Canadian companies and the advantages to the travelling public of greater competition.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I intend to make one or two comments about this order and then ask leave, if necessary, that it be adjourned in Senator Argue's name, because it seems no one else wishes to speak to it and he should be given the opportunity to close the debate.

Before I was appointed to the Senate, I acted as counsel for a car rental company, namely, Budget Rent-A-Car, and in that role had a great deal to do with negotiations with the Department of Transport on their making additions to what was then the three-member club of Hertz, Tilden and Avis at airports in Canada. So, I am familiar with the information given to us by Senator Nurgitz yesterday because I was part of the negotiations when that matter was opened up for tender. Until that time, that matter had not been dealt with by tender. For that reason, I know that a good deal of the information put forward yesterday by Senator Nurgitz is sound information to help us deal with this inquiry.

However, if no one else wishes to speak to this matter, I shall adjourn it in Senator Argue's name.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Argue, debate adjourned.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which was presented on Thursday, January 24, 1985.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, I assume, this matter having been on the order paper for several weeks now, that no one else is interested in speaking on it. However, I should like to raise a problem the committee is having, in that the essence of the report is the criteria used by the committee in reviewing regulations and other statutory instruments. What I am really trying to do is to make an honest entity of the committee, in asking for the approval of the criteria by the Senate. This report has been adopted in the other place, and the committee is anxious to have the approval of the Senate.

The committee did not quickly pass these criteria; they were considered at one meeting and were held over for a week or two so that the members of the committee could reconsider their positions. There is an open understanding between myself, representing this chamber, and the Honourable Robert Kaplan, representing the House of Commons, that if at any time any member of the committee should feel inclined to alter the criteria, add another item or delete something, we will certainly entertain doing so. In the meantime, the committee, in order to get on with its work, requires the approval of both houses of Parliament of the criteria it uses in reviewing various statutory instruments and regulations. As an example, this morning the committee dealt with several hundred items. So I ask this chamber to adopt the second report of the committee.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the joint chairman a question? I am not familiar with the detailed workings of that committee, but I have had some experience with it and its terms of reference. Are we to understand that the criteria before us are the traditional terms of reference and that there have been no changes made?

Senator Nurgitz: I can tell honourable senators that they are identical to the criteria used in the last session of the last Parliament.

When I was unable to avoid it, I did serve on the committee several years ago, and the criteria are at least similar, if not identical, to the criteria used then. Perhaps Senator Godfrey is better able to answer your question, but let me say that they are certainly identical to the criteria used by the committee during the last session of the last Parliament, and I assume they go further back than that.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, the criteria are identical to those we used during the last session of the last Parliament. One change was made several years ago, when we added the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That addition was never approved by the House of Commons, only by the Senate.

I would like to make one comment following what Senator Nurgitz has said regarding the approval of those criteria by both houses. I always assumed that, but I received a legal opinion from counsel to the committee saying that it was not strictly legally necessary but was advisable.

Just for future reference, and in case one runs into a road block such as the one we ran into with the government leader in the House of Commons during the last session of the last

Parliament, who did not approve of our adding the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, while it is advisable, I am inclined to agree with the opinion of legal counsel to the committee that we do not really need the approval of both houses of Parliament. So, if anyone gets nasty in the Senate about the criteria, we will just go ahead anyway.

Senator Frith: I think it is advisable for us to agree to this motion.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 12, 1985 at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85, (NO. 2)

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO MEET FORTHWITH

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a motion to move, for which I require leave. If leave is granted, notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I would like to move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to meet forthwith to determine the course of action to be taken with respect to the disposition of Bill C-11, "An Act to provide borrowing authority"; and

That the Committee have power to sit while the Senate is sitting for the above purpose.

If leave is granted, I will be glad to offer some reasons why I hope the Senate will accept this motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the wording of the motion was shown to me by my colleague, the Leader of the Opposition, who, I understand, was handed a copy of the motion as we entered the chamber a few minutes ago.

We feel that we should have an opportunity to consider this matter. Therefore, we will not grant leave. Under rule 45, one day's notice is required and, therefore, the matter can be dealt with as a motion tomorrow.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I regret that my honourable friends opposite will not grant leave to consider this matter now, in order that we lose no time in dealing with an important measure of this kind. However, I accept the fact that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is perfectly within his rights in refusing to grant leave. I may regret it, but he has the right to do so.

I therefore give notice that I will move this motion again at the next sitting, unless some event transpires in the meantime that will make it unnecessary.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

GENERAL MALHOTRA, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF NATIONAL CADET CORPS, INDIA

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, in your name I would like to greet a notable visitor in the gallery from India, in the person of General Malhotra.

At the height of a distinguished career in the Indian Army, he was appointed Director General of the National Cadet Corps, which represents the elite of Indian students totalling over one million young boys and girls.

General Malhotra is on his way to Alberta and British Columbia where he will visit 50 young Indians who, with an equal number of young Canadians, are participants in a Canada World Youth exchange program.

It is a great honour for me to wish General Malhotra, an eminent representative of India, a pleasant and fruitful stay in Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I should like to bring to the attention of the Leader of the Government, who was absent from the Senate last week, the fact that the provincial government and people of Manitoba have been concerned about the remarks of certain American politicians pertaining to the Garrison diversion project.

The Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, February 2 contained the following headlines: "N.D. politicians seek revenge in Hydro ban"; "N.D. politicians angry with fight over Garrison". A bill has been introduced in the North Dakota state legislature to rescind approval of a transmission line route through the state to Nebraska. The bill will cancel a tentative agreement by the past and the present Manitoba government to provide hydro power for North Dakota, South Dakota and Nebraska. In fact, I believe that land appropriation has already taken place up to the American boundary, and that this line is to be called the Mandan line.

The Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, February 2, states:

Olson, one of the bill's four co-sponsors, said it is the state's revenge for Manitoba's long-standing opposition to Garrison, which was drastically scaled down recently by a U.S. federal commission.

The Winnipeg Free Press of February 7 states:

Devil's Lake representative Gordon Berg wants to take retribution against Manitoba over its opposition to Garrison a few steps further than the Mandan line ban.

Berg is proposing bills that call for a penalty on the transfer of Manitoba fresh or frozen fish across the border, a tax of $2 per kilowatt-hour on Manitoba electricity entering the state, and a tax on natural gas flowing into the U.S.

The Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, February 9, still dealing with the "revenge" bill, states:

The Republican-controlled House of Representatives approved the bill 93-3 on Thursday. It now goes to a Senate committee and then in March to the full Senate, which also has a Republican majority.

That article goes on to state:

The legislators who gave the bill its massive backing are angry at Canada's and Manitoba's lobbying against Garrison and they admit the bill is designed for vengeance and to try to force Canadians to the bargaining table.

This is fantastic! We have always been good neighbours.

I wish to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to make representations, on behalf of the people of Manitoba and on behalf of the Senate, to the Right Honourable Prime Minister so that this vital and important matter may be placed on the agenda and discussed thoroughly with the President of the United States during his visit to Canada which is to take place in the near future.

I am sure that the right honourable gentleman will be very successful in this particular regard. I hope that the Leader of the Government will make appropriate representations on our behalf.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend and I are labourers in the same vineyard; so I understand only too well what he is telling me.

It is a fact—and I am glad to state it—that up to the present time negotiations between Canada and the United States on the Garrison matter have been marked by a spirit of co-operation and generosity. I think one has to acknowledge with some gratitude that the special study that was made of this problem, which led to the decision we are concerned about today, and the attitude taken by the American government are fully in conformity with high standards of international conduct. I would not like that point to go unnoted.

However, my honourable friend is right in saying that there are three bills before the North Dakota legislature which are not quite so easy to approve of: one regarding the .02 cents tax on oil; another, the $2 tax on gas going through that state; and the transfer of Manitoba fish. I did not even know that the latter product goes through North Dakota, but I suppose it does. The worst of those is the bill prohibiting the transmission of power through that state.

I am pleased to say that the situation is still a little fluid. In the first place, the Governor of North Dakota has the power to veto those bills, and while one cannot tell what he will do, early indications are not discouraging. So, I place some hope in the fact that from his wider perspective of the interests of the people of his state and of the United States he will not see fit to approve of those bills. The second point is that if they are approved by the North Dakota state legislature, then the question of their constitutionality arises because it affects inter-state trade. It may very well be that under that heading they are open to challenge.

However, I will undertake to convey my honourable friend's feelings to the Prime Minister so that, should there be a suitable opportunity to do so, he can raise the matter of the Garrison with the President of the United States.

EMPLOYMENT

NOVA SCOTIA—DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On November 21, 1984 I asked the leader about the cancellation of a very significant part of a decentralization program involving Sydney, Nova Scotia. On January 22, 1985 the leader provided written answers to some of my questions with respect to the transfer of the Income Security Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare. He stated that it was not possible to change the decision to cancel its relocation, which meant the loss of 75 to 85 much needed jobs in that area. The leader also stated, and I quote from Hansard of January 22, page 427:

The impact on unemployment (in Sydney) was taken into consideration when the decision was made.

At the time of that decision the official rate of unemployment in Cape Breton was 20.3 per cent. The latest unemployment figure for Cape Breton stands at a record high of 26.1 per cent. Undoubtedly, the unofficial rate is 40 per cent or higher. Since the new government took office, the official rate of unemployment in that part of Canada has gone from 16.2 per cent to 26.1 per cent, an increase of 10 per cent and an unprecedented increase by any standard.

I apologize to the leader for the length of my preamble, but I am sure all honourable senators appreciate the gravity of the situation.

Given this current crisis situation, would the leader undertake to ask his colleagues in cabinet, particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if they would reconsider the earlier decision and restore the Income Security Branch decentralization program to Sydney?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is understandable that my honourable friend raises the question because the percentages of unemployment to which he refers are distressing to everybody. One cannot dismiss the matter in any light way, and I do not. Cape Breton has suffered a series of disasters that have nothing to do with the change of government, one being the unfortunate fire that destroyed the fish plant, costing several hundred people their jobs. I will undertake to discuss with my colleagues whether or not there is any step that can be taken that may help alleviate that situation.

Senator Graham: One of the largest groups hit by the inactivity and consequent unemployment in the area is the construction industry. As part of the proposed decentralization program a new federal building was scheduled to be constructed in downtown Sydney, providing much needed construction jobs and adding to the downtown core.

In the leader's answer of January 22 he stated that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had written to the Minister of Public Works indicating that the move was cancelled and that his department had no need for a new building. Whether or not the Income Security Branch transfer is given favourable reconsideration, I suggest that there is still need for a new building to look after the 125 employees who are filling the positions transferred to Sydney by the Citizenship Branch of the Secretary of State at an earlier date. In addition, there are other federal employees scattered throughout Sydney. Again, because of the prevailing sad situation, would the Leader of the Government ask his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, if he would give favourable consideration to giving the green light for the proposed federal building to go ahead?

Senator Roblin: That specific request presents a more difficult problem, because I do not think that, as a matter of policy, one can rely on government construction to solve the serious unemployment problems of the likes of Cape Breton. We must do our best to seek a wider solution.

Senator Graham: I have a final supplementary, but by way of comment, first of all, I understand that a final decision has not been made with respect to that proposed federal building by the Minister of Public Works.

The Leader of the Government has also made reference to the disastrous fire at the Highlands Fish Plant at Glace Bay which put 350 permanent employees out of work and which also, unless the plant is reconstructed very soon, would put 800 seasonal employees out of work. You will recall that last March another fire destroyed No. 26 colliery, putting 1,300 employees out of work. The Mayor of Glace Bay, Mayor Bruce Clark, who is providing great leadership in the efforts of the people of that area to provide much needed employment, has told me that, aside from the unemployment caused by the fire in the mine and at the fish plant, the unemployment rate in Glace Bay at the present time is approximately 55 per cent. I know that representations have been made by the town to the province and to the federal government to find some program to help alleviate that situation. I merely ask the Leader of the Government if he would consult with his colleagues in cabinet and, in particular, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who I understand is co-ordinating some of the federal efforts in this respect, in order to bring us a favourable report as soon as is convenient.

Senator Roblin: I would certainly be glad to do that, because we are anxious to co-operate as widely as we can to deal with a very difficult question. The whole point, of course, is that the area is fraught with problems which to date have been insoluble. The question is, what to do about a community that has a declining economic base? These are the basic problems being faced in that area. Although they are not unique to that area, they are very trying to the people concerned.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—FREIGHT RATE INCREASES

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, a body constituted to protect and promote the interests of the four provincial governments and industry generally, has expressed grave concerns regarding the possibility of large freight rate increases following the federal government's recent decision to terminate the price guidelines applicable to federally-controlled industries, including Canadian railways' freight rates. The commission's concern—which refers to the previous Liberal government's decision to limit rate increases to a maximum of 6 per cent in June 1982, 5 per cent in June 1983, and 4 per cent in February 1984—is that it has learned that the new Minister of Transport has advised CN and CP railways that "he has decided to terminate the administered prices program," the idea being that the marketplace should take its toll.

My question is: Had the government studied the implications of this policy decision on transportation costs to and from the Atlantic provinces, as well as the intra-regional consequences, before making the decision and, if so, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate table the study? Would he also table a copy of the letters of the Minister of Transport to the railways as a matter of public record?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not aware of the basis on which the honourable gentleman has placed his question, namely, whether or not a policy decision has been made by the Minister of Transport on the matter. I will ask the Minister of Transport what his position is, and on that basis I will be able to report to my honourable friend.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question arising out of the comments made by the Leader of the Government. The basis for the concern is that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, a body constituted by the provincial governments of the region, as well as industry at large, in the past has always been forewarned of changes in policy. I checked into the matter as recently as noon today and, this time around, the commission had no advance signals, nor had the industry. What they are objecting to is the fact that they learned indirectly of this policy decision through correspondence by both railways to shippers in the area. That is the basis of the concern of the Atlantic region.

Another area of concern, if I may be permitted, is that the Conservatives, when they were in opposition, always insisted that policy decisions of this nature be announced publicly; indeed, that they be announced in Parliament to parliamenttarians. Why is it that they are not now practising what they preached and are, in fact, reneging on an election pledge to practise openness? Why this quasi-clandestine action on the backs of small business and shippers in the Atlantic region?

Senator Roblin: I have no idea whether any of the honourable gentleman's charges are based on fact, but I shall find out. I shall obtain the information that the Department of Transport can provide as to the accuracy of the assumptions he has offered us.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a number of delayed answers. I do not intend to read them unless I am requested to do so. If I am requested to do so, I shall give them in extenso. I shall start by giving the details of those answers.

TRANSPORT

AIRPORT CAR RENTAL SERVICE—PARKING

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The first delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 5 and 12 by the Honourable Joseph-Philippe Guay regarding priority parking spots at the airport.

A very limited number of ready short term parking spots near the air terminal building are rented to airport vehicle rental concession licencees. These parking spaces are an integral part of the concession operation for which the licencees are paying substantial concession fees. The number of spaces in the short term lots is limited to ensure a minimal reduction of service to the travelling public using short term parking. The substantial part of the vehicle rental licencees' fleets can only be accommodated in remote vehicle parking areas, and these cars are shuttled into the short term spaces to meet their market requirements.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 6, 1984 by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz regarding and acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS).

In Canada there have been reported 165 adult cases of AIDS, none of which was associated with the transfusion of whole blood. There have been two hemophiliac cases of AIDS associated with the use of the blood clotting agent factor VIII. Because of the risk the Health Protection Branch has asked manufacturers to heat treat factor VIII to inactivate the AIDS virus.

[Senator Corbin.]

With respect to the testing of blood for transfusion there is no test at present which will detect the presence of the AIDS virus. It may be some years before such a test becomes available.

There is a test which can determine the presence of AIDS antibodies, which are produced in the body if an individual was exposed to the AIDS virus at some prior time. The test cannot determine if the individual still harbours the virus. This test is expected to become commercially available in the near future. The Canadian Red Cross Blood Transfusion Service intends to perform this screening test on all blood and blood products when it becomes available. Positive findings would lead to rejection of the material. In the meantime, the Red Cross has asked all members of well identified high risk groups to refrain voluntarily from donating blood.

The situation in the United States and in Australia is identical to that in Canada.

The National Advisory Committee for AIDS last met on October 9, 1984. Sub-committees of the Advisory Committee meet periodically. The next Advisory Committee meeting will be held this spring. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is informed of significant activities such as research, publication of informational material and events occurring in the field of AIDS both nationally and internationally, on an on-going basis.

HEALTH SERVICE—UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 18 and 19, 1984 by the Honourable L. Norbert Thériault regarding government policy with respect to universality in the health services.

Senator Thériault refers to residents of New Brunswick being "deprived of medical services which are supposed to be provided on a universal basis under the Canada Health Act". He cites the case of annual medical check-ups, which, until recently, were included as an insured benefit in New Brunswick.

The honourable senator is correct in stating that complete medical examinations for the purpose of an annual check-up are now excluded as an insured benefit under Medicare in his home province and that the patient is now responsible for the cost of the service and must pay the physician directly.

However, the prior inclusion of periodic examinations as an insured benefit in the provincial plan was not dependent on the dictates of federal legislation. There are certain services which are not obviously medically required and it is left to provincial discretion to determine whether or not such care will be covered by a provincial plan. Hence, there are variations from province to province in regard to coverage for certain medical services—the inclusion of coverage of annual check-ups is one such variation.

However, while the Province of New Brunswick has decided to exclude annual check-ups as an insured benefit, New Brunswick will continue to insure medical examinations when the physician considers the examination "medically necessary".

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OVERSEAS DISTRIBUTION OF SUMMARY OF GLOBE AND MAIL ITEMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 19, 1984 by the Honourable Keith Davey regarding the overseas distribution of a summary of Globe and Mail items.

(The answer follows:)

The Globe and Mail News Summary was supplied to Posts for a two-week period because:

- 1) the Globe and Mail provides this electronic news service and Posts expressed an interest in obtaining it;
- 2) the Library of the Department of External Affairs was interested in testing its capability to link from a computer data base of information to its micro-computer to telex to Posts, and to experiment with data from a newspaper providing electronic data;
- 3) the Globe and Mail, having received requests from Posts concerning its electronic news summary, offered this service at no cost for a two-week test period to enable Posts to determine its usefulness; and
- 4) as to subscribing to this service, no final decision has yet been made as not all posts have reported their responses to the test.

Posts receive a selection of Canadian newspapers in both official languages on a regular basis in accord with their financial resources and individual needs.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 20, 1984 by the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen regarding government policy with respect to universality in social programs.

(The answer follows:)

The Government released a Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits on January 28, 1985. The paper discusses all components of the system, including the taxable Family Allowance benefit.

OLD AGE SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on December 20, 1984 by the Honourable Joyce Fairbairn regarding government policy on old age security.

(The answer follows:)

The Government released a Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits on January 28, 1985. The report states that:

In the Government's view no change is required in the Old Age Security/Guaranteed Income Supplement payments system.

ENERGY

NEW PRICING AGREEMENT—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on January 22, 1985 by the Honourable H. A. Olson regarding the progress of negotiations with respect to energy and the new pricing agreement.

(The answer follows:)

On Sunday, January 27, 1985, the federal Energy Minister Pat Carney, along with her colleagues from British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan announced the extension of existing amending agreements on pricing between each province and the federal government to March 31, 1985.

As an interim measure, the federal government agreed to a new flexible pricing system for crude oil exported to the United States. As well, the Alberta government agreed to defer for sixty days a domestic natural gas price increase of $25/MCF which other was scheduled under the existing agreements with the federal government.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on January 24, 1985 by the Honourable H. A. Olson regarding government policy on the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax.

(The answer follows:)

The issue of the PGRT along with a range of taxation and fiscal matters, is currently under discussion with the federal government and the western producing provinces. It would be inappropriate to speculate on the outcome of these negotiations.

The federal Progressive Conservative Party is committed to making changes to the National Energy Policy, and this includes moving towards a profit-based taxation system for industry.

The current amending agreements on pricing between British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan and Ottawa were extended to March 31, 1985.

With reference to Senator Gigantès' question on the export pricing policy for oil, the responsibility to move to flexible pricing rests with the federal energy minister who requested the National Energy Board to implement the policy. The matter was discussed beforehand with the western energy ministers who agreed that, in the current market environment it was necessary that companies have the maximum possible flexibility to negotiate export arrangements to market oil surplus to Canadian requirements.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

STATUS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am glad to report that this cleans up all of the questions for 1984. We have made some progress in answering questions that have been raised in this new year, 1985.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate whether there is an answer with respect to nuclear policy? If he read it, I missed it and would like to make sure that it is included.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend asked me a series of questions on nuclear policy a week or so ago. I am not yet able to give him the answers to those questions. However, they will be forthcoming.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: I apologize to the Leader of the Government, but I did not hear the date up to which questions were answered.

Senator Roblin: I said that, to the best of our knowledge, we had answered all of the questions raised in 1984, and some in 1985.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): What about 1979?

Senator Roblin: We have forgotten about 1979. However, if my honourable friend has a question he thinks I have missed, perhaps he would let me know and I shall check into it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): If you would give us the budget and the estimates, perhaps we could clear up a lot of other business.

Senator Roblin: You will get them.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Question No. 1 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

With regard to the Guaranteed Income Supplement for low-income single pensions (i) have the Provinces of Canada complied with the request of the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, dated June 13, 1984, to pass on the Federal Government's $50 increase; (ii) have the provinces given the assurance that GIS pensioners in institutions receive the full value of the increase; (iii) have the provinces given the assurance that private landlords do not take advantage of pensioners by raising rents because of the GIS increase; (iv) which provinces have complied and which have not?

Reply by the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

The two-stage $50 increase in the Guaranteed Income Supplement single rate has just been completed. Thus, at this time, it is not possible to indicate what action the provinces will take in respect of the full $50 increase; however, the following relates to the $25 GIS increase in July 1984.

(i) Provincial Income Supplements

The provinces of Nova Scotia, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have income supplementation programs for recipients of Old Age Security/Guaranteed Income Supplement benefits. All of the above have fully passed on the $25 increase provided to single GIS recipients in July 1984. It is anticipated that the $25 GIS increase in December will also be passed on in full and the current Minister of Health and Welfare has written to the provincial Welfare Ministers concerned urging that this be done.

(ii) GIS Pensioners in Institutions

Although various provinces have made changes to their comforts allowances and institutional rates following the first stage of the GIS increase, there is no clear link which can be drawn between these decisions and the increase in GIS benefits. Detailed information is thus not provided of the changes made.

(iii) Increases in Rents since GIS Increase

It would clearly require a massive bureaucracy for the provinces to ensure that private landlords did not increase rents for GIS recipients. Understandably they have not given such an assurance.

(iv) See responses to (i), (ii), (iii).

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax) for the second reading of the Bill S-3, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Zambia, Canada and the Kingdom of Thailand, Canada and the Republic of Cyprus and Canada and the Federative Republic of Brazil for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax".—(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order stands in the name of Senator Leblanc, who has had to return to Montreal because of family illness.

I hope to proceed with it on his behalf tomorrow.

Order stands.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE— ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Second Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence entitled: "Canada's Territorial Air Defence", tabled in the Senate on 23rd January, 1985.—(Honourable Senator Lafond.)

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I have no wish to further address the Senate on this subject, until such time as we have seen the proposed forthcoming green paper from the government on national defence, et cetera.

Nonetheless, as I said when I presented the report, I would like this item to remain on the order paper so that other senators who may wish to address this report, may have an opportunity to do so. I believe Senator Marshall does intend to do so soon. If he agrees, perhaps in the interim the order should stand in his name.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, perhaps during the recess I will have an opportunity to prepare my speech on this motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It is hard to do so with a crowded order paper such as the one we have!

Order stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is worthwhile noting that two of the senators in whose names inquiries stand are from Toronto where, apparently, there is a serious weather problem today.

It is my understanding that most of the senators, from both sides, whose intention it was to leave that city this morning are unable to be in attendance for our business today.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY CONSULTATION PAPER ON CHILD AND ELDERLY BENEFITS— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay pursuant to notice of Wednesday, February 6, 1985, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine and report upon the Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits, issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare, tabled in the Senate on 5th February, 1985; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such professional, clerical and technical personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Explain, please.

Senator Tremblay: With pleasure, honourable senators.

This motion is further to a unanimous suggestion made by the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology at its meeting on Tuesday, February 5 of this year. The paper mentioned in the motion was tabled on January 28 in the House of Commons and on February 5 here in the Senate.

As the Minister of National Health and Welfare explained, this is a document for study and consultation. Initially, this will be done by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of the House of Commons, to which the paper was referred on February 7.

It therefore seemed to the members of our committee that it would be normal and desirable for the Senate to make its own contribution to the consultation process. We also thought it would be appropriate if, for the time being, the Senate were to ask its Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology to examine the options put forward in the paper or any other option that would be relevant, and to report its conclusions and recommendations.

Honourable senators, that was basically the purpose of the motion I have the honour of submitting today and for which I ask the approval of this chamber.

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 13, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Hon. Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FOURTH REPORT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, Chairman of the Committee of Selection, presented the following report:

Wednesday, February 13, 1985

The Committee of Selection has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 66(1)(b), your Committee submits herewith the list of Senators nominated by it to serve on the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth.

The Honourable Senators Bielish, Cools, Corbin, Fairbairn, Gigantès, Hébert, *MacEachen (or Frith), Marsden, Robertson, *Roblin (or Doody), Stollery, Thompson, Tremblay, Yuzyk. (12)

*Ex officio members.

Respectfully submitted,

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Phillips, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

APPEAL BY BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA TO SUPREME COURT OF UNITED STATES

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, on February 5 I asked a question concerning a matter where the American eagle's claws had extended beyond their boundaries. I was told that the matter would be referred to the appropriate authorities. In view of the fact that time is of the essence, if legislative initiative is to be taken by the President of the United States following his meeting with our Prime Minister, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would expedite a reply to my question.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am afraid I was not in the chamber when my honourable friend made his original inquiry. Would he care to repeat it?

Senator Sinclair: It arose out of the fact that a grand jury in a district court under federal jurisdiction in one of the southern states of the United States had issued a subpoena to the Bank of Nova Scotia, which does business in the United States and which has been a leading banker in the Caribbean for over 100 years. Unfortunately, if the bank had responded to the subpoena it would have resulted in a breach of the law in two of the Caribbean islands. The grand jury is asking for certain documents to be produced, which could result in people working for the bank in those jurisdictions going to jail. A fine was imposed when the bank did not respond to the grand jury's subpoena, and appeals were submitted, including an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Of course, these are procedural matters. That appeal was supported by, for instance, the Government of Great Britain as well as the Government of the Cayman Islands and, indeed, the Government of Canada and certain other European governments.

However, the Supreme Court of the United States, in view of the fact that, as I say, these are matters that are procedural in nature, did not grant the necessary certiorari and, as a result, the Bank of Nova Scotia was fined $1.825 million. That is a significant sum, but the matter is important in that this is a situation where, indirectly, extraterritorial application is made of American law, to the detriment of Canadian and other businesses.

In view of the rapport that exists between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States, and the fact that they will be meeting on March 17, I asked that the government take action to impress on the President of the United States the need for him to arrange to initiate legislative action to bring about remission. That was my question.

Senator Roblin: I agree with my honourable friend that this has been a matter of some long standing and a matter of very serious concern in Canada, at least, with respect to the exercise of extra-territorial jurisdiction, which is a serious problem. So my honourable friend and I are on all fours there.

According to my information, the American courts that originally tried this matter came to the conclusion they did and refused appeals because they alleged that in the present case the Bank of Nova Scotia had not exhausted all good faith efforts in the foreign countries to avoid the prohibitions imposed. That was the stated reason in the American courts for refusing appeal. Of course, I am merely repeating the information supplied to me. I was not there, and I am not a legal expert, in any case. However, no doubt that was the reason why the Supreme Court of the United States also refused to hear this case, and I very much doubt that President Reagan has sufficient authority to overrule his legal system, any more than the Prime Minister of Canada has to overrule his.

However, the lesson has not gone unremarked and, while it may be difficult for the Government of Canada—which, incidentally, was amicus curiae during the whole trial to put Canada's best foot forward—it seems to me doubtful that much can be done to interfere with the American judicial system in this respect. What can be done is to try to avoid similar events in the future. To that end, there has been close consultation between the two governments in order to develop routes for securing information of this kind, as between these governments, that they will agree to honour and thus avoid the question of extraterritorial jurisdiction. In other words, they will avoid the problem by having a machine that greases the wheels, so to speak, that eliminates the problem.

In fact, there is a treaty being negotiated between the two countries which is called the Treaty on Mutual Legal Assistance, and apparently these negotiations are making some progress. So it appears probable that, while this is an unfortunate case from the Canadian point of view, it has resulted in recognition of the problem on the part of the American authorities and a willingness on their part to meet with us to prepare a mutually-agreed law that will prevent this sort of thing happening again.

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary question. I am very happy to hear those remarks of the Leader of the Government. Many people are concerned with the whole problem of the extraterritorial application of laws will also be glad to hear that statement.

● (1410)

If, in truth, there is a feeling that something should be done to prevent this happening again, it is a very easy matter, not to override laws that exist but to institute legislation initiatives for remission. Then, until such time as the mutual arrangement the learned senator referred to is made, at least people will know that action will be taken so that grand juries in the southern United States will not continue with this heavy-handed approach.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am rather flattered to know that my honourable friend refers to me as his "learned friend".

Hon. Hazen Argue: We agree unanimously.

Senator Roblin: That adjectival phrase is usually reserved for men and women who have legal qualifications. I have to admit to being a university dropout and have no claim to my honourable friend's courtesy.

Senator Sinclair: I referred to you as being "the learned senator"; that is different.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to look a gift horse in the mouth more than once, so I accept the compliment with all becoming modesty and will keep my honourable friend's observations in mind.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the employment of young Canadians in the coming summer.

The minister has devised a scheme of wage subsidies to private corporations to encourage the employment of youth through the allocation of approximately 72 per cent of the available funds. As far as one can determine from reading the available documents, that will reap a minimum wage for the majority of Canada's youth who are so hired.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us in which province or post-secondary institution in this country a young Canadian who earns only the minimum wage during the summer months can save enough to pay tuition and contribute towards living costs in order to continue or commence post-secondary education?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can only make an observation, and that is that minimum wages are set by the provinces and they are based on what is considered to be a sufficient standard to maintain a single adult, which means that it is not a very high standard wage, nor, indeed, can it be.

As to what resourceful, enterprising and imaginative students can do with money they receive to further their education, even if that money comes from a job paying minimum wages, the question is open. Some of them will not be entirely self-supporting; they will have some home support. So, one would hope that something would be available to help them obtain their education.

I recognize at once that that is not a complete answer to those who add up the costs of post-secondary education and compare those costs to income. In my time, students were resourceful in augmenting their income in various ways. There are also scholarships and loans available.

Frankly, that is not the answer my honourable friend wants, but I am afraid it is the best explanation of the situation that I can give now.

Senator Marsden: A supplementary, if I may. I am aware of the concern of many students of the country, not only because of the minimum wage factor but also because in the initial announcement of this program it appeared that there were to be a great number of jobs, but we have now learned that the 10,000 jobs to be created are not guaranteed but "assured" jobs. Can you please give us an update as to the number of firm jobs that will be available to young Canadians this summer?

Senator Roblin: One thing I am certain of is that there will not be enough jobs to employ all those young people who would like to have them. That is a sad fact and one that must be faced.

The effort the government is making is to expand the job opportunities by going beyond money from the government, which often goes to short-run occupations with no hopeful future aspect, by involving the private sector in the job creation plan. I do not think it is possible and I would not attempt to give any estimate as to how successful that would be because it depends entirely on the co-operation that comes from the private sector. I am confident that a significant number of jobs will be created in that way. When the summer is over we will be able to add them up and see how successful we were.

Senator Marsden: I should like to ask a final supplementary question. If by July of this year, or earlier, it appears that many young Canadians will be unable, for lack of jobs or because of the lack of revenue that would otherwise have been earned from those jobs, to begin or to continue their post-secondary education, which is so important for them and for our country, will the government bring in an emergency tuition reduction plan to benefit those people?

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend is asking me to forecast what the policy might be under certain hypothetical situations, which she knows I would be reluctant to do.

THE ECONOMY

CLOSING OF PIONEER TRUST

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As he knows, on Thursday of last week Pioneer Trust, whose headquarters are in Regina, announced that it was closing its doors in western Canada. I think everyone in western Canada regrets that, because this company was regarded as a star performer and we were pretty proud of it. It seemed to be aggressive and doing a good job, but it ran into difficulties because of a collapse in the real estate market which has affected many companies.

My question is based on my interest in the security for the depositors, and I understand that deposits up to $60,000 are fully secured. Over that amount, it is a question of whether some arrangements can be made or not. Due to the government leader's knowledge of what is going on in the process, could he give us any hope with respect to the suggestion that even at this very late date everything possible should be done by the Province of Saskatchewan, the Government of Canada and, of course, Pioneer Trust, to try to salvage this operation and get it back on the rails? Surely that should not be an impossibility, but it may well not happen. Could the Leader of the Government give us a progress report on what is going on? If there is even a ray of hope of getting this company back on the rails, perhaps that course can be pursued.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend does raise a real problem. In the whole of western Canada there have been a number of disasters which, I think, are even more extreme than the case he mentions, because in the case of Daon Real Estate Company and the New West Corporation hundreds of millions of dollars of shareholders' money have been lost because of changes in the real estate market. These companies were as active in the real estate market as the company my honourable friend speaks of. Citizens lost a great deal of money without any protection whatsoever. That is the nature of the game. They made their investment and they took their chances. I will not betray any secrets by saying that when my own affairs were not in a blind trust, as they are now, I had some shares in one of those companies, so I speak feelingly about what happened to them in the course of events. With respect to this company, the shareholders have an advantage in that they are insured to some extent.

Senator Argue: The depositors.

Senator Roblin: The depositors. Thank you. I used the wrong word, but it is the money of citizens no matter how you describe it.

Senator Argue: Not really.

Senator Roblin: There is a difference.

Senator Argue: There is a fundamental difference.

Senator Roblin: There is a fundamental difference, but it is out of the citizens' pockets. The figure that comes to my mind, and I am subject to correction here, is that approximately 90 per cent of the depositors' funds are covered by the insurance. That is a global figure and, no doubt, it will be different for different people. Nevertheless, there is a substantial contribution.

● (1420)

With respect to the government's role in this matter, I think it is unlikely that the matter can be dealt with. On two occasions, the Government of Saskatchewan looked into this very carefully and came to the conclusion that it could not come to the support of the local institutions. I should think that judgment is probably sound, in all the circumstances. I sympathize with my honourable friend, but I cannot give him any assurance that the federal government can do what the Government of Saskatchewan will not do.

Senator Argue: I would point out to honourable senators, including the Leader of the Government, that there is a great and fundamental difference between protecting shareholders and protecting the value of their shares. I do not think anyone would ask that the latter should be done. Buying shares is a gamble. It may be a good gamble or a poor gamble, but it is certainly a gamble. However, when people put money in trust companies in this country, they do not expect it to be that kind of gamble.

I am troubled—and I do not say this in a partisan, political way, although it may be taken that way—by the action of the Government of Saskatchewan in having made a public statement, as I understood it, that they were going to guarantee preferred shares up to, I believe, $30 million. These negotiations went on for a long time. The public, the depositors and everyone thought the company was protected. The depositors did not start a run on the funds. Then, the day before the company had to close its doors there was a telephone announcement that they were withdrawing. It was taken to be an offer. Then, of course, the company was forced to close its doors.

I would like to know whether or not a direct request was made by the Government of Saskatchewan to the Government of Canada, in the early stages of discussing this major problem, to work with the Government of Saskatchewan to see if something could be done.

The people of this country bailed out Massey-Ferguson, although that company is not out of the woods yet. I do not regret having been involved in the process of bailing out that company. I was also involved in the process that helped to bail out Chrysler. That was a far-sighted move because that company has made a tremendous recovery. It is not necessarily good enough to say that there have been bad experiences in the past and, therefore, we really cannot do anything. I would like to know whether or not, at an earlier stage, there was serious consideration given by the departments of this government to this problem.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I agree with my honourable friend's statement that the depositor is in a special situation. The federal government believes it has discharged its responsibility through the deposit insurance plan which protects the vast majority of funds at risk. It should be recognized that that is a very substantial contribution on the part of the federal government.

With respect to the dealings between the Province of Saskatchewan and the federal government, I will certainly inquire if there is correspondence dealing with this matter that would be of interest to my honourable friend. I point out to him, however, in respect of inter-governmental correspondence, it is necessary to secure the consent of both parties before it can be obtained, but I will be glad to try.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ZIMBABWE—STATUS OF WHITE FARMERS

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Hazen Argue: You'll get used to it!

Senator Buckwold: It may be wishful thinking.

As I meant to say, honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. I want to welcome him back from his trip to Zimbabwe. I led a small Canadian delegation to Zimbabwe at the time of the first reconstruction conference—which, I am sure, the Leader of the Opposition will remember—at which Canada pledged $50 million over a period of years for bilateral aid. As a matter of fact, I went to that country with a cheque for $3 million. I say this to indicate that I do have some interest in what is going on in Zimbabwe. At that time I had the privilege of meeting many white farmers.

I should like to know what is the present position of the white farming population, who represent a highly productive group of farmers. Are they reasonably satisfied with the present regime? Are they maintaining their productivity and are they receiving the kind of assistance in the way of spare parts which, from conversations I had with them, I was given to understand they need?

Perhaps the Leader of the Government can speak in general terms about Zimbabwe and on the trend toward a one-party democracy.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate the invitation to dwell at length on this interesting topic, but perhaps I should not do so during Question Period but on some other occasion. I hope that my honourable friend will take a leaf out of Senator Sinclair's book and give me a more flattering description than the one he used. However, as he and I are old friends, I will attribute it to an excess of zeal rather than anything else.

The question raised by my honourable friend is an interesting one. During the course of my visit to Zimbabwe, which was after my visit to the nine nations of the SADCC community, I had the opportunity to have a lengthy discussion with the Minister of Agriculture for Zimbabwe, who happens to be white. I also had an opportunity to discuss the views of Zimbabwean white farmers, in a rather abbreviated way, with their spokesman, the president of their association. If my impressions are correct, one of the things that was quite remarkable was the degree of reconciliation that had taken place between the white and black communities in Zimbabwe. I believe it is true that a considerable number of white citizens have left, but the majority remain. I have been told that some of those who had left have now trickled back. They remain because they continue to receive the opportunity to operate their agricultural establishments in an effective way.

I would not say that there have not been complaints. I come from a farming community myself and farmers can always find something to talk about, such as conditions they would like to see improved. I am sure that Senator Argue can vouch for that. By and large, I received the impression that the situation was developing in a more harmonious fashion than one might have imagined five years ago.

I believe that to be a correct assessment. I would warn the honourable senator that I spent two and a half days in the country so, of course, that does make me an expert! But my impressions were favourable.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. Yesterday, as honourable senators will have noted, was a black day for the Canadian dollar, perhaps the blackest in its history. In view of the fact that some people in this country believed that a change of government would bring a surge of American dollars into our coffers, when does the government expect that surge to begin?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall deal first with the implications of my honourable friend's question with respect to the Canadian dollar. I can tell him what I am sure he already knows, that within the past week there has been a weakness in the strength of the dollar and it has declined one per cent. There is a good reason for that, as my honourable friend also knows—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As we always said when we were asked.

Senator Roblin:—and that is the strength of the American dollar.

Senator Frith: Give all of the good reasons that we always gave when we were asked.

Senator Roblin: I have some more information that you never had and which you never gave.

Senator Frith: Let us hear it.

Senator Roblin: I will give it to you now. Canada has the second strongest currency among the major—

Senator Frith: That is exactly what we always said. There is nothing new there. That sounds just like Marc Lalonde.

● (1430)

Senator Roblin: Now we are hearing from the patriots. Anything they can do to run the Canadian dollar down, they will try to do.

Senator Frith: Let's hear the new stuff.

Senator Roblin: I am reading from the sheet that my honourable friend used to read from when he was on this side. It sounds a lot better now.

Senator Frith: To you, yes.

Senator Roblin: The Canadian dollar has fallen 1.1 per cent; sterling, 2.8 per cent; the yen, 2.4 per cent; the French franc, 3.2 per cent; the deutschmark, 3.3 per cent and, lo!, the great Swiss franc has fallen 4 per cent. We are the best of that whole crowd.

Senator Frith: That is exactly what we said! Thank you, Marc Lalonde!

Senator Roblin: I do not think that the position of the Canadian dollar is such as to—

[Senator Roblin.]

An Hon. Senator: Stop the jeering.

Senator Roblin: I do not know whether my honourable friends opposite are jeering so much as they are laughing. They are amused. I do not think it is a matter to either jeer at or to be amused by. It is a problem we have to face.

Senator Frith: It is the answer we are jeering at.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friends ask when the flood of American dollars will come into this country. I can only answer: Just as soon as the Government of Canada can start repairing the damage that was done to our economic fabric by the previous administration, we can expect more activity.

Senator Frith: And how soon might that be?

Hon. Hazen Argue: If we sell the Americans a crown corporation, it may help the dollar.

Senator Sinclair: I am impressed by the leader's run through the money markets of the world. However, people in the forest industry who are trying to compete in Europe against the Scandinavian countries and people in Canada in non-ferrous metals who are trying to compete against others whom the leader talks about with such great knowledge are looking forward to that surge of American money. I cannot remember who, but somebody once said, "We are open for business."

Senator Argue: That was just before they closed Pioneer Trust.

Senator Sinclair: Somebody also said, "Put up the gates, the money is going to flow." When is it going to flow? Why does the government not bring in a budget so we can know what it intends to do?

Senator Roblin: With the honourable senator's wide knowledge of Canada's trading posture and knowing that 70 per cent of our export business is done with the United States—

Senator Frith: There is Marc Lalonde all over again.

Senator Roblin:—he is probably congratulating his former colleagues in business because the market is a little easier in the United States. So I do not advance his comments as an argument for the value of the Canadian dollar, because I do not think that one should try to build on that substructure. However, it indicates that there are two sides to this question. Sometimes what you lose on the roundabouts you gain on the swings.

Hon. Philippe Dean Gigantès: That is a new one.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I have a follow-up question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In the period just prior to the last election and, I believe, during the last election, Brian Mulroney, the then Leader of the Opposition, suggested that he was prepared to allow the Canadian dollar to float lower compared to the American dollar, rather than follow the policy of the government of the day and increase interest rates to support the dollar. In light of the historic low of the Canadian dollar, as pointed out by Senator Sinclair, is it now the policy of the government to allow the dollar to fall lower?

Mr. Mulroney indicated that he was looking for a change in policy. Is this the change he was looking for?

Senator Roblin: I think the dollar is floating lower, not because of any policy of the Canadian government, but because of the fact that the American dollar has risen the way it has. We will simply have to accommodate ourselves as best we can to that phenomenon.

Senator Grafstein: There has been some suggestion in recent days that one of the reasons for the lower drift in the dollar has been the differences of opinion in the government between the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister with respect to economic policy. This division has caused uncertainty in the money market and caused international money men to take a further run at the Canadian dollar. Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate prepared to indicate, suggest or put in a request to the Minister of Finance that he make a firm statement on this government's policy because the current instability and uncertainty are aggravating the situation?

Senator Roblin: Whenever 20 or 30 economists are gathered together, they will each give you a different reason why currency fluctuations take place. I think you have to take them all with a grain of salt.

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that we know that the present government is going to make a very strong effort to reduce the deficit—which will have an effect upon the value of the Canadian dollar in the international money markets—and in view of the fact that an important budget is now overhanging the economy, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate give us an assurance that this budget will be delivered to Parliament in the month of April?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that the budget will not be delivered in Parliament until the Minister of Finance has satisfied himself that he has made all the necessary consultations he has undertaken to make and has had an opportunity to consolidate them into the coherent policy we all expect in the budget. The month of April has been given as a date, and it may well be the month in which the budget is produced. I am not in a position to give an absolute assurance on any date.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I am interested in the comment made by the Leader of the Government, because the Prime Minister did say in the House of Commons that it was the intention of the government to bring down the budget in April. The Leader of the Government seems to be less categorical. I would like to know whether his version is the more reliable of the two.

Senator Roblin: I have some advice for my honourable friend. If he compares the statement of the Prime Minister and the statement delivered by me, it is quite probable the statement of the Prime Minister is the more reliable one. Certainly,

I would modify any statement I have made with respect to this request for dates to conform to what the Prime Minister has told us.

Senator MacEachen: You are learning.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, to what level is the present administration prepared to see the Canadian dollar fall vis-a-vis the American dollar?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That is not a question which is either useful or possible to answer.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Would you take it as notice then?

Senator Roblin: Not even as notice.

Senator Haidasz: Has the present administration any strategy to stop the further fall of the Canadian dollar and, if so, what is it?

Senator Frith: I am sure that you will get the same answer.

Senator Roblin: When my honourable friend sees the budget, many things will be revealed to him.

Senator Haidasz: Then it will be too late.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: I would like to ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he remembers that the Right Honourable the Prime Minister said while campaigning that if he had a choice between letting the dollar fall and letting interest rates rise he would let the dollar fall. We saw last week that he did both. Is this the new policy of the government, to let the dollar fall and push up interest rates at the same time?

Senator Frith: That is a good question.

Senator Roblin: The government will follow the most constructive policy on both issues that can possibly be devised.

Senator Frith: Could that course of action be one of those constructive policies?

Senator Gigantès: Am I to understand from what the Honourable Leader of the Government said a while ago that it is the government's intention to shore up the dollar or to let the dollar rise, once the heavenly revelation of the budget has come down from the mount, carved in stone?

Senator Roblin: I hope that the Leader of the Government said nothing that trended on that line of thought, and I am sure that I did not. If in a public debate one starts to expose the policy of an administration with respect to the support of currency, then, of course, all the speculators get busy, and honourable senators know what that means.

• (1440)

Senator Gigantès: I have a supplementary question. If our dollar appreciates, vis-à-vis other currencies, as a result of increased international confidence in the new economic genius that will emanate from the Minister of Finance and his minions, will that not make our exports less marketable, since our currency will be more expensive? Also, imports will have an easier time coming into Canada and will that not affect the employment situation adversely?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, you see the dilemma with which I am confronted. When I am told that the dollar is going down, we have cheers and jeers from the other side that that is a terrible thing. Now when we hear that the dollar might go up—

Senator Frith: You were the entertainer, not the dollar.

Senator Roblin: —I expect to get the same kind of complaints as I got from my honourable friends in the other case. You cannot win with them.

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING OF POTATOES

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: On November 20, 1984, honourable senators, I asked a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the fact that the new government had decided to get rid of a Royal Commission of Inquiry on Potatoes, particularly with respect to marketing difficulties. The Leader of the Government in the Senate then replied:

I shall ask that department what reply they would like to make to my honourable friend.

I am still waiting for an answer to the question I asked in this chamber. In addition, I have written to the Minister of Agriculture since the session resumed after the recess, but I have not received any answer.

The potato industry is going through very difficult times in eastern Canada. I could give many examples, not to mention the problems with our American friends and some border states.

I have two questions for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. First, will the government seriously reconsider its decision to get rid of that Royal Commission of Inquiry? Second, could I have an answer to my question of November 20, namely why was this commission disbanded at a critical time for the potato industry in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, unless my memory plays me false, that question has been answered. I think that all questions from 1984 have been answered and, in my recollection, the specific point my honourable friend made was included in an answer. However, if that is not the case, I shall certainly do my best to rectify it, but that answer included replies to both of the points made by my honourable friend today.

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, if my question from last Fall has been answered, I have not been told about it. I have not been advised to that effect. Again today I went through the Debates of the Senate to see whether I had missed some information. There was nothing I could find.

At this very moment, the situation in the potato industry is again seriously deteriorating in eastern Canada.

I could give examples from each of the provinces. I could speak at length on export problems. For instance, our New Brunswick potato shippers are literally hassled by officials of the State of Maine. There is also the fact that New Brunswick processors are buying for next to nothing Prince Edward Island potatoes, while local products in New Brunswick cannot deliver their potatoes to local processing plants under duly signed contracts.

Outrageous things are happening. The government apparently is ignoring the situation. It has chosen to support the tobacco industry, and has failed to address the problems of the potato industry.

I urge the government to seriously reconsider its decision. This is the thrust of my question. I wish the Leader of the Government in the Senate would make a commitment in that respect.

[English]

Senator Roblin: I shall try to assist my honourable friend by helping him to search the record. I believe the answer to his question was in Debates of the Senate, and we shall see if we can find it for him.

ENERGY

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have one brief question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate pertaining to the offshore development agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia. I appreciate that he will not have an answer for me immediately, but I would be grateful if he would take my question as notice.

Has the Government of Nova Scotia made application for renegotiation of its existing agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think I can tell my honourable friend that the new agreement subsumes all former agreements, but in order to be quite sure about that I shall take his question as notice.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No, he is asking you about the Nova Scotia agreement.

Senator Roblin: With respect to Nova Scotia, I have no information about any renegotiation of that contract.

Senator Hastings: I have a supplementary. Would you ascertain whether the Government of Nova Scotia has made representation or application for renegotiation of its offshore agreement with Canada?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend will rephrase his question to ask me if the Government of Canada is entering into negotiations, I shall be glad to find the answer, if I can. However, I am not able to speak for the Province of Nova Scotia.

Senator Hastings: Under the existing agreement, the Government of Nova Scotia can make application for renegotiation of its contract in the light of any other agreement that may be made. Another agreement has now been made, and I am asking whether Nova Scotia has asked for renegotiation of its existing agreement with Canada.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has stated the question correctly, and his curiosity is natural. I shall try to satisfy it.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), for the second reading of the Bill S-3, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Zambia, Canada and the Kingdom of Thailand, Canada and the Republic of Cyprus and Canada and the Federative Republic of Brazil for avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax".—(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. Fernand E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, the mover of the motion for second reading of this bill, Senator Kelly, gave this house a considerable amount of information on the main elements of the four tax conventions under review.

The schedules to the bill contain details of conventions and protocols concluded with the countries concerned: with the Republic of Zambia, convention and protocol signed at Lusaka on February 16, 1984; the Kingdom of Thailand, at Ottawa, April 11, 1984; the Republic of Cyprus, at Nicosia, on May 2, 1984 and finally, the Federative Republic of Brazil, on June 4, 1984.

As was mentioned by Senator Kelly, who is to be congratulated on a clear and concise speech—to date, Canada has signed tax conventions with 38 foreign countries, although some of these conventions do not deal exclusively with double taxation with respect to income tax.

Honourable senators will recall Bill S-14 which dealt with conventions between Canada and the United States and was passed during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament and received Royal Assent on June 28, 1984. During the same session, Parliament also approved tax conventions with the following countries: Tunisia, Bangladesh, Cameroon, Sri Lanka, Kenya, Egypt, Ivory Coast and Sweden.

During the first session parliamentarians were also able to approve a large number of tax conventions. Bill S-2 which dealt with Spain, Australia, Italy, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Indonesia, Malaysia, Jamaica, Barbados and the United Kingdom received Royal Assent on December 17, 1980.

Bill S-17 concerning New Zealand and Australia received Royal Assent on April 23, 1981, and Bill S-24 concerning the Federal Republic of Germany, on June 29, 1983.

These tax treaties contained, as appropriate, provisions dealing with capital gains, pensions paid to residents, dividends, tax incentives granted by the domestic legislation of those countries, and so forth.

I do not think it is necessary to elaborate further. I am sure that honourable senators are prepared to ensure that Canadian taxpayers are provided as soon as possible with fair and equitable provisions to deal with the various problems of double taxation, especially since Senator Kelly has informed us that the conventions concluded with Cameroon, Ivory Coast, Kenya and Sri Lanka, which were approved by Parliament in June 1984, have not yet been ratified but should be very shortly.

[English]

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Kelly speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I have nothing further to add.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. William M. Kelly: At the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, speaking to the motion for third reading of this bill, my recollection is that these types of bills were normally referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, not because there was any objection from either side of the house to the principle of the bill, because bills of this nature were common, but to ensure that there were no mistakes in the legislation. Part of a Senate committee's job, and part of the Senate's job, is to review legislation to ensure that there are no mistakes, since sometimes that is the case.

I may be wrong, but my recollection is that when a bill of this nature was referred to the appropriate committee, the committee simply referred it to its counsel, and if counsel to the committee were satisfied with the legislation, counsel reported that to the committee, and the committee simply reported the bill to the Senate without further consideration.

I mention this because there is a new chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, although he has served as a member of the committee in the past. I simply mention that so that the new chairman may know that that is what was normally done, and if he feels it appropriate, his committee might consider the legislation. We certainly have no intention of asking that it receive lengthy consideration by the committee.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I spoke to Senator Leblanc about this this morning, and we did not see any reason for referring this bill to committee as there was nothing contentious in it.

As Senator Frith has said, the precedent is there, and if honourable senators wish to refer the bill to committee, we have no objection. That is entirely up to the Senate.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, the committee does not have a heavy agenda at the moment and we would be pleased to consider the bill if it were referred to the committee by the Senate.

If that is the wish of the Senate, I notify honourable senators that, assuming the Senate is sitting next week, I will convene a meeting of the committee for Wednesday afternoon at the usual hour. If the Senate is not sitting next week, I give notice that I will convene a meeting for Wednesday of the week following, at the usual hour.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Does the honourable senator so move?

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY CONSULTATION PAPER ON CHILD AND ELDERLY BENEFITS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Tremblay, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine and report upon the Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits, issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare, tabled in the Senate on 5th February, 1985; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such professional, clerical and technical personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I noted yesterday with pleasure that the Honourable Senator Tremblay, the erudite, civilized and able chairman of the committee said, and I quote:

We also thought it would be appropriate if, for the time being, the Senate were to ask its Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology to examine the options put forward in the paper or any other option that would be relevant, and to report its conclusions and recommendations.

The paper I am referring to is the so-called "blue paper", which some have characterized as the sort of essay on which one would fail a first-year student writing on these matters in university. It is thoroughly incomplete, and we hope that the Senate committee is going to be able to look at the context surrounding these issues.

It is not enough to offer the two options in that paper. We have the Minister of Finance saying that he does not contemplate a reform of the tax system, yet that is what these two options precisely indicate; they are going to increase taxes on middle income Canadians who happen to have children. That is an issue involving a reform of the tax system.

It is not sufficient to look at only one part of the tax system, because the economy is an inter-related whole; one cannot jiggle with one part and not look at the other parts. It does not occur to everybody when thinking of the two famous bank presidents with $500,000 a year in income to consider the family allowances. It occurs to some other people, when thinking of the deficit, that one should also perhaps think of the hundreds of millions of dollars of profits the banks make on which they pay no taxes.

There are some parameters to the Canadian economy which are disturbing, and which one should look at. There is a deficit of $35 billion, and it would be better if we did not have such a deficit, but there is also the shocking figure of 1.5 million unemployed Canadians and some 4.5 million people living below the poverty line. We also have some $50 billion in tax loopholes, some justified, some useful, some not.

I have absolutely no compunction about looking at tax loopholes that may have been put in by the Liberal government beforehand. There was an economic malady which the world did not quite recognize for what it was, and which started manifesting itself more seriously after the Arab oil shocks. Governments throughout the industrialized countries tried to cope with those maladies by, among other things, increasing the cash flow of various companies through tax concessions. We have studies from around the world, studies made by the Japanese among others, saying all that this has done is reduce revenue and it did not produce the desired results. What would be a mistake, and I am sure that we will hear witnesses who will stress this, would be for us to look at only one aspect of cost cutting, or to concentrate on cutting things such as family allowances or money given to Canadian families who produce children rather than looking at the whole picture. We should be looking at the effect that any cuts, not just those proposed in this paper, will have on employment, future growth, the competitiveness of the Canadian economy, and look at such things as the dream that we can repair our economy by increasing our sales and increasing the number of our customers abroad when we have in our poor and unemployed a whole pool of customers here over whom we may have better economic control or influence. Perhaps we can increase their economic power. That is a task that the Social Affairs Committee could perform usefully. That is why, without trying to put words into the mouth of the chairman of that committee, I support his motion.

● (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have listened closely to the comments of Senator Gigantès. I must tell him in all simplicity that I fully appreciate them.

However, unless my interpretation is wrong, it seemed to me that what he was saying was first that the motion was justified and that it was appropriate for this house to ask its Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology to examine this document, to consider the various solutions available and to make recommendations.

But, at the same time, from what he said, I have the impression that Senator Gigantès had already drawn his own conclusions about the examination which the committee would be justified in undertaking.

What I must assume in view of his conclusion, is that he, in fact, supports the motion. I shall therefore not add anything else. The comments I wanted to make were made briefly, simply and reasonably yesterday. Under the circumstances, it is appropriate for the Senate to ask its Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology to examine and analyse a document which obviously deals with one of the subjects mentioned in its own terms of reference.

Motion agreed to.

HUMAN RIGHTS

MEETING OF EXPERTS—DESIRABILITY OF SENATE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability of its participation in the preparations for and deliberations of the special meeting of experts on human rights, which is to be held in Ottawa, April 23rd to mid-June, 1985, as directed in the concluding document of the Madrid Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.—(Honourable Senator Yuzyk.)

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I should like to commend warmly Senator Stanley Haidasz for the splendid speech on human rights which he delivered in the Senate on February 6. In eloquent fashion he made a strong and convincing case for the establishment of a standing joint committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms "for the purpose of monitoring, studying and making recommendations on Canadian domestic and international obligations in human rights matters."

I am in full agreement with Senator Haidasz that we can follow the example of the United States of America in modified form. A year after the Helsinki Final Act was signed by 35 nations, including Canada, in June 1976, the Congress of the United States established the U.S. Commission on Security and Co-operation in Europe, composed of six senators, six congressmen and three members appointed by the executive branch to monitor compliance with the provisions of the Helsinki Accords. This commission has conducted studies in Europe and has produced regular reports. It was an integral part of the official U.S. delegations to the Belgrade and Madrid Review Conferences of the CSCE. This commission has kept close liaison with non-governmental organizations, which has given it great credibility and prestige.

Canada has played an effective role in the CSCE process which, undoubtedly, has helped to maintain peace in Europe. The fact that the Madrid Review Conference adopted the proposal of the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, that a meeting of experts on human rights be convened, testifies that Canada is highly regarded in this international forum.

The concluding document of the Madrid CSCE meeting, relating to the follow-up to the conference, ends its section on Principles as follows:

They decide to convene a meeting of experts of the participating States on questions concerning respect, in their States, for human rights and fundamental freedoms, in all their aspects, as embodied in the Final Act.

Upon invitation of the Government of Canada, the meeting of experts will be held in Ottawa, beginning on 7 May 1985. It will draw up conclusions and recommendations to be submitted to the governments of all participating States.

The meeting will be preceded by a preparatory meeting which will be held in Ottawa upon invitation of the Government of Canada, starting on 23 April, 1985.

Now that Canada is host to the meeting of experts, which is only two months away, it is most urgent that the Canadian government make a firmer commitment to world peace and security as well as human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki Group, an ad hoc body, lacking the minimum financial support from Parliament, was unable to function properly. The subcommittee of the House of Commons External Affairs Committee in preparation for the Madrid Review Conference, published an excellent report based on evidence from representatives of non-governmental organizations and sent observers to the Madrid Review Conference, but this was a one-shot affair. In the meantime, Parliament has enacted the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but there is no parliamentary body to monitor the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act and the Canadian charter.

● (1510)

In view of our international obligations as well as our domestic responsibilities, I believe that the time has come for the establishment of a Standing Joint Parliamentary Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, on an all-party basis. This body, composed of members of the Senate and the House of Commons, should be equipped with adequate staff and resources to perform the following:

a) continually monitor, review, document and provide information on the implementation of the Helsinki Accords, particularly its human rights provisions, and the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;

b) have a mandate to provide a forum for continual input of non-governmental organizations, public bodies and individuals;

c) take an active role in providing advice to the government on all these matters; and

d) issue statements, reports and provide news update to the media in order to promote general public interest in these matters.

The forthcoming CSCE meeting of experts in Ottawa should remind us that the struggle in eastern Europe is a struggle between government and the people. Western opinion is beginning to realize the close relationship between the struggle for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Soviet bloc on the one hand and, on the other, its implications for western security. Canadians are involved in this struggle for the highest principles of humanity, but they must define their role. This can best be done, I believe, through the proposed parliamentary committee.

Bearing in mind that non-governmental organizations are the life-blood of human rights and fundamental freedoms, they should be given every opportunity to voice their opinions. Parliament is the watch-dog of the rights of the people. We are, therefore, appealing to Senator Duff Roblin, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to convey to the government the proposal to establish the above-mentioned joint parliamentary committee as soon as full consideration can be given to it.

Senator George van Roggen, chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, has informed this chamber that he has received a letter from Mr. R. Harry Jay, head of the delegation of Canada to the CSCE Meeting of Experts on Human Rights, asking him to choose three members of his committee to attend consultations with representatives of Canadian non-governmental organizations and individuals concerned with the human rights situation in CSCE countries on February 26 in the Lester B. Pearson Building. He has informed me that he has suggested three persons: Senators Stanley Haidasz, J. Grafstein and myself. A similar letter was received by Dr. William Winegard, chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, who is choosing three or four MPs.

This will bring parliamentarians and representatives of non-governmental organizations together for a common purpose. I have been informed that some of the non-governmental organizations will demand the establishment of a joint parliamentary committee to commence its work immediately.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE ON THE ENVIRONMENT

MEETING HELD AT NAIROBI, KENYA

Hon. H. A. Olson rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, December 13, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Conference on the Environment, held at Nairobi, Kenya, from 26th November to 1st December, 1984.

He said: Honourable senators, for several weeks notice of this inquiry on the order paper calling the attention of the Senate to the meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Conference on the Environment held in Nairobi, Kenya, from November 26 to December 1 last year has stood in my name.

I believe this subject is topical and that we should consider some of the matters that were on the agenda at that conference because they are of great interest to Canadians, especially in view of the drought and famine in central Africa at the present time. Not only Canadians, but people from all other parts of the world are intensely interested in and concerned about the devastation that is afflicting those who live in central Africa. People of all nations are searching for ways to alleviate that situation.

Honourable senators, I intend only to deal with one agenda item at the conference on the environment, and that is the item which dealt with deforestation, desertification and soil loss, because that is the agenda item to which I was assigned while attending this conference. The conference, in fact, dealt with, I believe, eight separate subject matters. One section dealt with the changes in the world environment during the last 10 years and the implications of that; another dealt with environmental issues related to the atmosphere and the oceans; another dealt with the conservation of living resources and biological diversity; and so on.

Honourable senators, one of the reasons I have chosen this particular agenda item to deal with is because people think that, as soon as the weather changes, there will be some further rainfall in that part of Africa and the problems of the famine will be over. We know that restoration of soil and its productivity requires rainfall, moisture; there is no doubt about that. The devastation that has taken place there has happened over a number of years and is such that simply returning to a so-called normal weather pattern will not restore the soil to the productivity level necessary to meet the food requirements of the people who are in such a desperate condition.

Because of the time span, it seems that most people have forgotten that we encountered a similar situation in North America during the 1930s. At that time, a terrible drought situation devastated the soil in some parts of North America to the extent where productivity levels were severely reduced. Indeed it was necessary for both the federal and provincial governments in Canada, as well as the federal and state governments in the United States, to take concerted action to restore the productivity of the soil, even in later years when there was a return to normal weather patterns and the normal amount of rainfall that was needed.

● (1520)

As a matter of fact, I was surprised to learn at that conference that the action taken in North America, in both Canada and the United States, stands as one of the most successful actions taken anywhere in the world at any time in history to restore the productivity of soil that had been devastated by the long drought.

The action was not altogether perfect. We had to learn what to do. But it was recognized that a multiplicity of actions needed to be taken for that restoration. I was aware of that, honourable senators, because the area of Alberta where my family farmed at the time, although not in the centre of the devastation, was as severely affected as any other area in Canada. We know that the PFRA, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, was helpful in that connection. We know also that the combined programs initiated in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and in many American states, were needed in order to find a remedy for the devastation of the soil that had taken place.

We have now reached the stage where we should apply some of the experience we gained at that time to assist in the restoration in a large part of Africa of the productivity lost as a result of the present drought. We all appreciate that not a great deal can be done until the rain returns to that area. We all accept the fact that very little can be done without moisture. However, as I said a few moments ago, such damage has been done that if normal weather patterns return, food production will still be delayed unless nations such as Canada and the United States assist in providing further action.

The immediate problem, of course, is to supply the people with food. We in Canada have done a good job, although I am not completely satisfied with what has been done. Canada is one of the leading nations in providing help and in delivering food to those starving people. However, we must also turn our attention toward helping them restore their productivity as soon as a change in weather patterns makes that possible.

I do not wish to delay honourable senators, but a number of conclusions and recommendations were reached as a result of the four-day conference, and I would like to have those on the record. I am sure that many Canadians who receive a copy of Hansard would be interested in knowing that there is a concern on the part of members of both houses of the Canadian Parliament regarding the devastation to which I have referred, and in reading the conclusions and recommendations reached by that international conference. Therefore, if it is acceptable to honourable senators, I should like to have included in my remarks the conclusions and recommendations that were adopted unanimously by the conference. The alternative is for me to read them.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the conclusions and recommendations of the conference form part of the record?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, might I suggest that it would be preferable to have the conclusions and recommendations incorporated as an appendix.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I agree. Perhaps I did not make that clear in my request to honourable senators, and I thank Senator Frith for pointing that out.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of Conclusions and Recommendations, see appendix, p. 517.)

Senator Olson: After honourable senators have had an opportunity to read the recommendations, I am sure they will agree that an effort should be made by our Department of Agriculture to assist those people. Probably one of the most useful exercises in which we could be involved would be to help them restore their soil productivity. We now have a good deal of expertise in those persons who were hurt by the drought in the 1930s and who are farming the land today. We also have the expertise of our faculties of Agriculture across Canada. All that could be helpful to those people. They desperately need this kind of help, just as badly as they need the wheat and other types of food that we now send. I hope that honourable senators will consider this matter as being critical, and a major responsibility, and that the government and, indeed, members of both houses of Parliament, will respond positively to what, I am convinced, needs to be done in this regard.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Olson: Certainly.

Senator Molgat: Was there any discussion at the Nairobi meeting on the cause of the present problem? Is it purely a climatic one or does it involve other factors, such as over-grazing? Is there also a problem with deforestation? Did the conference study the effect on the climatic situation as a result of those practices?

Senator Olson: All of those aspects were brought to the attention of the conference, and they are all considered to be factors in the overall problem now existing. There is no question about that. For example, over-grazing in a drought situation is a terrible problem. It is true that there are certain species of plants that survive overgrazing and drought but which are not as useful as other types of flora. Much of the problem in the area arises from the fact that deforestation has reached the point where much of the soil cannot be retained because the trees have been removed. We frequently overlook the fact that wood is the fuel that is used there for almost everything, for providing heat and for almost all of the cooking that is done in the region from Ethiopia, across the Sudan and into Chad—wherever the drought exists. We must bear in mind the fact that it is difficult for an environmentalist, who knows all about these problems, to say to a peasant or a farmer that he must not cut down any more trees. Such a person has no alternative if he wants to cook what little food he has. There has been severe deforestation simply because of the necessity to survive. We should try to provide them with a substitute fuel, perhaps wood or something else, so that they will not continue to cut down the few trees that are left in some areas, which are absolutely necessary in order to stabilize the soil. So, in response to Senator Molgat's question, using that as one of the little examples, it is true that all these factors were taken into account, as honourable senators will find in the document that I have asked to have appended to Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, I declare this inquiry debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 515)

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS ADOPTED UNANIMOUSLY BY THE INTER-PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE ON ENVIRONMENT

NAIROBI (KENYA), 26 NOVEMBER—1 DECEMBER 1984

CONCLUSIONS CONCERNING DESERTIFICATION AND SOIL LOSS

Accelerated soil erosion and other aspects of degradation of farmlands under excessive human pressure (e.g., shortening of periods of fallow) result in loss of productivity of land. Overgrazing is equally damaging. This ecological deterioration of productive land systems is not confined to arid and semi-arid regions where they are widespread, but is also evident in sub-humid territories.

The loss of prime agricultural lands to a non-agricultural uses (e.g., urbanization) is a world-wide process. It shows that in many instances national land-use policies need to be made more effective.

Projects for combating desertification and for reclaiming desertified lands need to be subsidized. Mechanisms available—under UNEP aegis—for mobilizing additional resources for the implementation of the United Nations Plan of Action to Combat Desertification include: DESCON (Consultative Group for Desertification Control), United Nations Special Account for the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, Clearinghouse. These provide some funds, but they fall far short of the sum required for the achievement of objectives set in the Plan.

Regional co-operation is a valuable means for implementing programs for monitoring and for combating desertification. Strained political relationships among neighbouring countries often impede the effective implementation of technically feasible programs: monitoring of desertification, establishing green belts, development of resources of regional aquifers, etc.

There is need to promote and assist the development of indigenous scientific and technological capabilities that would enable countries prone to hazards of desertification and soil loss to take full advantage of available scientific and technological knowledge.

Several countries provide—in co-operation with United Nations bodies including UNEP—courses of training in ecosystem management sand dune stabilization, combating desertification, management of irrigated farmland in arid regions, etc. These are most welcome and need to be expanded and organized within a framework of a global program, assisted by UNEP providing a list of specific needs.

Modern technologies, including remote sensing from satellites, provide useful means of monitoring ecological changes in natural systems (including deforestation, desertification and soil loss) and for surveying natural resources (including groundwater resources, soil, vegetation cover).

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR NATIONAL ACTION

Parliaments should urge their Governments to:

- (a) adopt firm commitments and policies for the reduction of emissions of pollutants liable to cause damage to forests, crops and other ecological systems;
- (b) encourage effective programs of information exchange so as to provide rural communities with technological information on more efficient use of fuelwood and charcoal and alternative sources of energy that may replace fuelwood and so reduce pressure on vulnerable ecosystems;
- (c) give priority to the development of national programs to regulate forest conversions, ensure sustained forest uses and encourage reafforestation, especially with appropriate indigenous species;
- (d) give priority in developing to strengthening, through financial and other means, of indigenous scientific and technological capabilities in areas of natural resources studies, monitoring and development, programs of research, training and education that aim at:
  - (i) filling gaps in scientific knowledge;
  - (ii) training of technicians needed for management of natural resources;
  - (iii) increasing awareness and mobilizing public participation in resource management.
- (e) give priority in countries whose territories are prone to desertification to:
  - (i) establishing national machineries for combating desertification;
  - (ii) establishing national plans for combating desertification;
  - (iii) devoting particular attention in their development plans to projects aiming at combating desertification and reclaiming desertified lands;
  - (iv) providing support to rural communities in desertification-prone areas.

(Guidelines for these actions are included in the UN Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.)

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR INTERNATIONAL ACTION

Parliaments should urge their Governments to:

- (a) consider favourably the recommendations contained in the studies requested by the UN General Assembly on additional financial resources for implementing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and submitted to it during 1980-1982, so as to enable the General Assembly to take a final decision on the subject;
  - (b) collaborate in implementing regional programs for monitoring and combating desertification and for development of shared resources;
  - (c) urge UNEP to co-operate with the appropriate UN and other international agencies in the development of an international collaborative program of research on the enhancement of water resources available for agriculture, including work on:
    - (i) desalination of water;
    - (ii) more effective use of groundwater resources, avoiding irreversible depletion or contamination;
    - (iii) development and conservation of surface water resources;
    - (iv) artificial seeding of clouds;
    - (v) utilization of brackish or salt waters in irrigation of soils not otherwise cultivable, using salt tolerant species including new forms developed by genetic engineering and biotechnology;
    - (vi) improving longer term weather forecasting that will assist rural communities to plan their farming practices and minimize the hazards of recurrent drought.
  - (d) co-operate in regional programs to apply remote sensing, including satellite techniques, in order to monitor environmental change.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 14, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Hon. Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—DISTRIBUTION OF DELAYED ANSWERS

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. This being Valentine's Day, my heart goes out to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday, I complained about the absence of an answer to a question I put to him on November 20, 1984. I had every reason to presume, based on his response at the time, that I would hear directly from the Minister of Agriculture or his department. I was not aware that the leader had answered my question on December 4, 1984, and that it had been printed in Hansard of that day. The leader was right yesterday when he said that he had responded, and I apologize for the comments I made to him at the time. However, I was under—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Don't spoil it.

Senator Corbin: —a misconception as to the means whereby the information would be transmitted to me. The ways of this house are sometimes strange, if I may so with due respect. Certainly, they are new to me. Had I more thoroughly checked Hansard, I would not be in this predicament. I am always present and follow closely most of the time and the response should have caught my ear, but it did not.

Honourable senators, I wonder why on delayed answers the government house leader does not immediately supply the interested senator with a copy of the written response he tables and which is printed in Hansard on that day. It would merely require a photocopy. It seems to me it would be a courtesy to senators, who, for the sake of saving the time of this house, do not insist on their right to have the response read aloud by the leader, to receive a copy forthwith, delivered by a page to his place in the house or to his office.

The honourable government house leader has shown his reasonableness on past occasions and unless he sees grave difficulty in my request, I hope he will meet it. Otherwise, I shall request a meeting of the Standing Committee on Rules and Orders for what I consider to be a simple, technical matter, and I am prepared to make a motion to effect this procedure. I do sense, though, that the hurdle would be easily overcome, without mobilizing a battalion of senators, support staff, interpreters and what-have-you.

Having said that, the concern I expressed yesterday on behalf of the potato growers of my province of New Brunswick remains.

Senator Roblin: The honourable senator is a persuasive fellow, and I undertake to give the matter fair consideration.

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker *pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-28, to amend the Pension Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY TRANSPORT OF DANGEROUS GOODS REGULATIONS

Hon. Léopold Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations made by Order in Council P.C. 1985-147, dated, January 17, 1985, or any matter relating thereto;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada for the purpose of this examination; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the above-mentioned purpose.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, 18th February, 1985, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: Honourable senators, as most of my colleagues here are aware, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will be meeting on Monday morning. We have been given the assurance that the Minister of Finance, Mr. Wilson, will be attending. At that time, he will be telling us all of the good and sufficient reasons why we should pass the bill that has been giving us so much difficulty up until now. It is our sincere hope that on Monday he will persuade the members of the committee to report that bill. If so, I think it is only fit and proper that we be here to debate it.

We have been told—and I feel reasonably confident that the information is correct—that we can look forward to a somewhat strenuous debate on that bill when it does get to the floor of the Senate. I think it only fit and proper that we be here on Monday in anticipation of the report of that committee.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the Deputy Leader of the Government has partly explained the context of this motion, perhaps I could add some information for honourable senators.

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance did meet today. A motion was made to the effect that Bill C-11 should be reported and that that report should say that the committee finds that Part I of the bill, providing for borrowing authority in the amount of $7.3 billion for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985, is acceptable as it stands—that is, that the borrowing authority to the end of the present fiscal year was available to the government if they wanted it.

However, the motion continues:

Your committee finds that it would be contrary to well-established parliamentary principle for the Senate to pass Part II of the said bill, which part would provide borrowing authority in the amount of $12 billion in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986, before the Government has revealed its spending program by tabling the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986.

Accordingly, we urge the Government to decide to seek approval for Part I immediately, and to seek approval for Part II following the tabling of the main estimates for 1985-86 due later this month. Your Committee is confident that such a decision will not impede the Government's borrowing program in any way.

If this solution is not acceptable to the Government your Committee finds that it cannot report the Bill in its present form, which links Part II to Part I, until the main estimates for 1985-86 have been laid before Parliament.

Honourable senators, the motion was debated and discussed during the meeting of the committee this morning. Notwithstanding that the committee started its proceedings in camera, the members of the committee asked that the meeting not proceed in camera, so this motion was publicly discussed in the committee.

Senator Roblin undertook to have the Minister of Finance appear before the committee on Monday next at 11 a.m., so the committee did not proceed with the motion because the motion itself asks the government to take Part I of the bill now and wait for Part II until the main estimates are tabled, which is to be at the end of this month.

So, I think everyone at the committee meeting felt that it would be reasonable to hear from the government to see whether the government would accept that offer to take the borrowing authority that it needs right now, or says that it needs right now, and wait for Part II until the main estimates are tabled in a couple of weeks.

That is the meeting to which Senator Doody referred in his comments.

It is quite clear that Mr. Wilson may be able to persuade the committee to change its view on this motion, whatever views the committee has on the motion, or, of course, that the members of the committee might persuade Mr. Wilson to take Part I and wait two weeks for Part II.

We are now told that the Senate must meet next week. Let us suppose that Mr. Wilson persuades the members of the committee to change their minds, or a sufficient number of members to change their minds, so that the motion is defeated. Presumably, that is why we are to meet next Monday.

Let us continue with that scenario. Let us assume that that happens. The House of Commons is not going to be sitting next week. Since the Senate has not yet accepted my suggestion that we have alternative forms of Royal Assent, we will be unable to give this bill Royal Assent because the House of Commons will not be sitting. So, the bill cannot receive Royal Assent next week. That is why the government is asking us to sit next Monday at 2 o'clock.

We have not been told that there is going to be any other business before the Senate—at least, any other pressing business.

It looks like—but we are sure it is not—sheer petulance and peevishness on the part of the government—

Some Hon. Senators: Shame, shame!

Senator Frith: —but, of course, it could not be so. The government wants the Senate to meet next Monday at 2 o'clock because it has a program, not just for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, honourable senators, but for Monday.

Senator Doody: Horrors! What a terror!

Senator Frith: No, not at all a terror; a very good thing for us to meet on Monday to do important work. Of course, it is important that we meet on a Monday to do that, and, of course, there will be a great deal of business before the Senate. When honourable senators return on Monday they will see that the order paper is so crowded that they will say, "Frith should eat his words. Look at the amount of business we have before us."

● (1410)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: Good speech!

Senator Frith: Thank you. And that is not all.

Senator Doody: "And having said that"—

Senator Frith: So, we have to return early next week, earlier than usual. I only say this, honourable senators: Of course, we are not going to oppose this motion—

Senator Doody: Of course not.

Senator Frith: The government is entitled to bring honourable senators back to deal with its legislative program, its well-known, crowded legislative program—

Senator Doody: Don't be nasty now.

Senator Frith: The government is entitled to have the Senate sit to deal with such a program—and, therefore, of course we should be here. We await with great interest the evidence, the proof that in fact this is not just sheer, peevish petulance.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I suppose it might be expected that I would offer a calmer word of advice than the declaration that has just been made by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

I suppose I could refer to the number of resolutions which honourable senators have placed on the order paper. I could refer to the one placed by Senator Sinclair, for example, who insisted that we break the rules of the house before our last recess to put his resolution on, which convinced one at the time that it was a matter of some urgency. Yet, we have heard nothing from him since.

Senator Frith: That has been on long enough. Why didn't you bring us back last Monday, if that is the reason?

Senator Roblin: I am trying to establish whether there is any senatorial business to be done. Senator Sinclair is almost on his feet, and I have an idea he is going to tell me he is going to debate this next week—and I certainly hope that that is true, because it is an important matter.

There is a number of items on the order paper which—

Senator Frith: New business? What new stuff have you got? That has always been there. It has been there for months.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend would just retain his calm and allow me to continue my statement, we would get further along.

Senator Frith: Don't count on it.

Senator Roblin: I am not counting on it, because my honourable friend is a bit touchy these days.

Senator Frith: Listen to who is talking!

Senator Roblin: I say to the Senate that there is some business to conduct, if we wish to conduct it—and that is up to honourable senators. There are some ten items on the order paper that could be discussed next week, at our leisure.

Leaving that aside altogether—because I am not going to make too much of that; we have a habit of letting these things ride until we are good and ready, and if Senator Sinclair is going to let the item standing in his name ride until he is good and ready, he will have my support. I think I should speak further to our reason for having the Senate reconvene on Monday afternoon.

Perhaps I am being optimistic, but it seems to me that we are in the last stages of the discussion of Bill C-11 in committee. We were ready this morning, had it not been for the situation respecting the Minister of Finance, to deal with our report. I think the opposition was ready to deal with the report this morning. However, the suggestion was put forward that, as a final measure, we should hear the Minister of Finance on Monday, which I think we will do.

My guess would be that, after some brisk interchanges, which will probably take us an hour and a half or so, between the minister and those who do not like what he has to say, he will take his departure from the committee, and at that stage we will be at the point, I suspect—although I do not like to give any firm undertaking, because one never knows what the devil is going to happen from time to time—when we might be ready to deal with the report. I think it is a reasonable assumption that at some point on Monday we will be ready to deal with the report.

If we are, two things will happen: either the committee will report the bill without amendment—which would be my recommendation—or it will make the report that is suggested by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. But I suspect that we will come to grips with the issue one way or the other on Monday.

If we do, we can start debating the report of the committee—unless it is a committee report that includes no amendments, which is an outside chance. If it is not one that reports the bill without amendment, it is a debatable matter. We will start the debate on Monday afternoon in respect of the report of the committee, and I think it a reasonable expectation that it will not be a debate that will be concluded very easily or very soon. Once we have debated the report of the committee, we have the third reading stage—and that, too, provides another opportunity for members to express their opinions. And judging from what I have heard so far, there are a lot of members on both sides of the house who will want to say something about this measure.

If I recall correctly, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition—who is not here today—did promise us an extended debate on the motion for third reading of the bill. We could commence the debate on the committee report and the debate on third reading, if not Monday afternoon, then the next day and until the bill is finally disposed of by this house.

If you ask me what my goal would be, it would be that it be completed in all its stages before the end of next week because then—while it is true that the House of Commons will not be sitting next week, they will be sitting the week after—we can, on that Monday, proceed with Royal Assent.

I am not taking it for granted that the further passage of this bill will be easy or short. In fact, I am taking the other point of view, namely, that there will be a lengthy and protracted debate in which many honourable senators will take part on the two resolutions, one on the committee stage and once on third reading. I think it would be wrong for me to make any other assumption. If it turns out that the bill comes back to us on Monday, or if the committee has not finished with it on Monday and the House sits on Tuesday and the debate is short, then, hallelujah, we can all go home. If it does not come back to us on Tuesday, we are giving ourselves sufficient time to conclude the matter before the end of the week, so that there will be no further delay in the final reading of the bill.

No matter what the government may think about the fate of this piece of legislation, the Senate is going to decide it by a majority vote, and a decision will be reached one way or the other.

I ask honourable senators to be patient with us on this matter. I have to tell you that I do not relish the idea of forfeiting our week off—the week the House of Commons has off—and I do not think anybody else relishes it, but in view of the issue that we have before us, I do not think it unreasonable to ask the Senate to sit on Monday. I would like to tell my honourable friend that if he thinks it is just a spiteful move on my part, I regret that, because it is not so. I think it is a reasonable position, and I hope that events will prove me right and that we will be able to debate this bill next Monday or Tuesday. Even if every senator wants to speak on it at every stage, there should be ample time to get it off our plate by the end of next week. That is my plea to the Senate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, there is one important flaw, it seems to me, in what Senator Roblin has said. I take it that he candidly admits that he wants the Senate to sit next week to be ready for the report of the committee. He has not said that there will be any other reason for the Senate's not taking the anticipated break. He has been very forthright on that. Everything, of course, hangs on the word "if"—we should be here if, or in case, the committee reports. We now know that when we come back next week what we will be doing is drumming our fingers and waiting to see if the committee reports. It seems to me a much more sensitive and sensible way to handle the government's requirements would be to use the rules that provide that during an adjournment the Senate can be called back in a case of emergency. I am inclined to agree with them that if that committee reports next week there could be some useful debate. My big quarrel with the government is that they are saying, and I thank for them for their candor, "we are not trying to kid you or bring you back here for any reason except to report on Bill C-11." They are saying, "the only reason we are asking you to come back and not take the break that the House of Commons is taking is to wait just in case that committee reports." The obvious solution to that problem which, I admit, is a problem, is to say we will adjourn until a specific date, and then use the rules to call back the Senate if and when the committee reports, so that honourable senators will not be sitting here waiting for a report that might never come. That rule is there for this type of situation. In my view that is the rule that should be used and not the motion that is before us.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

● (1420)

Senator Roblin: I am conscious, honourable senators, that I am in flagrant violation of the rules by speaking twice.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: We both are. When we are talking about leave, we always proceed in this manner.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps, then, I should ask leave.

Senator Frith: No, we are talking about Senator Doody's application for leave.

Senator Roblin: It is still a debate, and there are rules for debate. We have a few rules in the Senate, although not many. I will assume I have leave to say what I have to say.

As an incidental comment, I should observe that there will be other business besides this bill. There will be a bill dealing with veterans' pensions. The interesting aspect about such a bill is that it will only become law on receiving Royal Assent, so we have to deal with it in a reasonably expeditious fashion and have it ready for Monday of the week following.

I would tell my honourable friend that recalling the Senate on the instruction of the Speaker is not something that can be done very quickly. If honourable senators are dispersed across the country, one has to allow some reasonable time for them to return. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be irresponsible of me to accept the argument of my honourable friend.

My position and his are quite different. He has no obligation to expedite the business of the government in any way, but I have an obligation to make sure that it is conducted as expeditiously as possible. I have heard some rumours—from the other side of the chamber, if the truth were known—which took the form of an accusation that we were a little lackadaisical about this for one reason or another. I remember when we failed to get approval on January 24 in committee to bring the bill back to the Senate, which was what I was led to believe I might anticipate, I stuck to my part of the bargain and adjourned the Senate for that week even though, in my opinion, the full bargain had not been kept. I mention that because I was accused and criticized for neglecting this bill by allowing the Senate to adjourn on that occasion.

I am sure honourable senators understand that the pressures on me and on the government are a little different from those on the Leader of the Opposition.

Honourable senators, I may prove to be over-optimistic in that we may not receive this bill on Monday afternoon, but I still maintain that it is reasonable and proper for me to ask the Senate to be ready to act. It is our duty to be here when business is before us and to do our best with it. We cannot guarantee the timetable because it is not in the government's hands to do so. We have to make reasonable estimates as to what might be possible, and that is all I am doing.

In spite of the inconvenience to honourable senators, I would ask them to see it from my point of view and agree with me that it would be proper, and that we should be diligent in our duty and responsibility to be here. In the event that that bill is available for discussion, we will have reasonable time to examine all its aspects.

Honourable senators, that is my plea. I know it will be inconvenient and that, if we had our druthers, we would not be here, but I think we ought to be. I ask honourable senators to support the resolution.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I want to comment on some of the remarks made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. He made reference to the fact that in December I gave notice of an inquiry. He said, if I remember correctly, "... and we have heard nothing about it since." He has not been listening. One of his colleagues has departed, in view of the questions put from this side of the chamber and questions put by the opposition in the other place, saying that, in regard to one part of those social programs, "I am going to forget about it at this time, so the elderly can relax."

Another reason the Leader of the Government has not been listening is because, in the plains out there where he comes from, a conference is under way. Some people at that conference are very concerned about social programs, so perhaps out of that conference will come another retreat by the government. That will all be taken into account, I am sure, when I have the opportunity to deal with it.

Senator Roblin: I would like to make sure my honourable friend understands exactly what my comment was.

I accept what he said as being not unreasonable, and I hope other senators will be persuaded to wait until the government announces its policy before jumping into the brach. My point is that when the motion was produced in the first instance, we were asked to give special leave to have it introduced at that time, a couple of days before our last adjournment. That is what led me to believe that my honourable friend wanted to speak on it as a matter of urgency. Perhaps I was mistaken.

Senator Sinclair: It certainly was a matter of urgency, and Canadians made that very clear with the signals they sent.

An Hon. Senator: Two hundred and eleven members.

Senator Sinclair: I would hope that the honourable senator would be a little more careful when making allegations about people not doing anything or not listening. I will be glad to be here on Monday to hear what he has to say.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

ALLEGED FREEZE ON PROGRAMS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if there is a freeze on all initiatives and projects by the government for the next nine months. I understand that an announcement was made by the Deputy Prime Minister in Toronto yesterday to that effect.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend without risk of contradiction that that is not the case. I believe that what he really wants me to find out is exactly what the minister did say on this particular issue, and I will be glad to take the question as notice.

Senator Olson: Will the Leader of the Government obtain details of the terms and conditions of certain programs that I believe the government has indicated it will bring in before the expiration of the nine months' period that was indicated in the report, and advise us accordingly?

Senator Roblin: If any policy on those matters can be announced, I will be glad to provide it for my honourable friend.

INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF AMERICAN PLANT IN CORNWALL, ONTARIO

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Is he aware that an American plant will be built in Cornwall, Ontario? I believe the name of the company that will build it is Kohler, and that the plant will manufacture counter tops and bathroom fixtures. I believe that company is a giant in the United States and that the plant to be established in Cornwall will be a large one. I also understand that the company will receive federal assistance by means of a grant amounting to $4.1 million in order to establish that operation.

Is the Leader of the Government aware that such a plant will be built and is he aware if a study has been made on the impact the plant might have on similar manufacturing concerns already in operation in Canada? Can he also advise if it is true that the American company will receive federal assistance which will have the effect of providing assistance to a company that will compete with Canadian manufacturers of similar products?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has asked a question that is in a difficult area, because under the rules of FIRA details of negotiations between persons planning prospective operations in Canada and the federal government are confidential. That is a long-held statutory obligation. Therefore it is unlikely that I will be able to obtain much detail. However, I will endeavour to ascertain if there is any information that I can supply my honourable friend that will deal with the issue he raises.

THE ESTIMATES

DATE OF TABLING

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, has the Leader of the Government any information as to when Parliament may expect to see the main spending estimates for the forthcoming fiscal year? Will they be presented in February as usual?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that question was put to me in the committee this morning, and I shall give the same response that I gave then, namely, that the Minister of Finance will be appearing before the committee on Monday and he will be able to answer such questions.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS—COMPOSITION OF TASK FORCE

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, my question arises from a news release issued yesterday from the office of the Deputy Prime Minister. I believe it is the text of a speech that he gave to the Canadian Club in Toronto. The speech discusses the task force the government created. At one point in the speech it says:

At the outset, the Task Force agreed on a simple three-pronged work plan consisting of an inventory, program assessments and action plans . . . the entire undertaking should benefit from the combined wisdom and judgment of the private sector and the public sector.

Upon examination of the details provided by the minister of one of the plans in which I had an interest, namely, agricultural programs, I note that the study team consists of seven members, four from the private sector and three from the public sector. Not a single member from the private sector represents the producers' side of agriculture. I would also point out that there is no representation from either western Canada or Atlantic Canada on the advisory committee. There is only one representative from Quebec and the remainder are from Ontario.

My question is: Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate take steps to ensure that there is balanced representation on this particular study group so as to comply with the very laudable objective of taking into consideration, when developing this program, the wisdom and judgment of the private sector on a balanced basis?

● (1430)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the input to the study is not restricted to the members of the committee. They are making extensive soundings in their various spheres of interest and responsibility to get the widest possible input. Nevertheless, my friend asked me about the representation on these committees. I know that the deputy prime minister has made some statements on that point. I shall take the question as notice and see what answers I can get.

INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF AMERICAN PLANT IN CORNWALL, ONTARIO

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding the establishment of a plant in Cornwall, Ontario. The honourable gentleman made reference to FIRA in his reply. If we were talking about the acquisition of an existing company in Canada, it would go through FIRA, but since we are talking about building an entirely new facility, it is my understanding that it does not fall under the jurisdiction or terms of reference of FIRA.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I must tell my honourable friend that the situation is exactly the same for both kinds of undertakings.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

AFRICA—FAMINE RELIEF

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question about the content of the additional funding announced by the government to assist in the famine relief effort in Africa. I note with some satisfaction that the government has increased its commitment by $15 million in the last few days. To the best of my information, all that money is for food. Would the leader make inquiries to find out whether CIDA or any other government agency is setting in place some capability to assist the people in that drought and famine stricken area to restore production? Of course, such a project would require some lead time so that the people and equipment necessary can be put in place to help them restore the productivity of their land.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is exactly programs of that kind which are included in SADCC, an organization which consists of the nine nations around the periphery of South Africa and whose annual meeting I recently attended. They are taking this action to help the people feed themselves in the future. If the implication of my honourable friend's question is that this is a good thing to do, it is unquestionable that it is.

Such programs are carried out with the willing co-operation of the governments concerned. The sovereignty of these countries must be respected. In some parts of Africa, that is not the case. In the case of Ethiopia, I think I am safe in saying that the question of sovereignty is a bar to carrying out such a program. Perhaps that will change. It may be that I am inaccurate on that point, but I think I am correct. The honourable senator has also asked what we are doing in these places on a long term basis. I shall see what information I can obtain for him.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I was not referring to the area of Africa which the leader has just referred to, those countries surrounding South Africa. I am more interested this time in the area from Ethiopia through Sudan over to Chad, Niger and so on. The press reports seem to indicate that there is an increase in the amount of food Canada has committed to several of these nations, including Ethiopia, but I have seen nothing indicating that the necessary assistance to help restore productivity is also part of the program. Would the honourable leader make a point of asking that question as well?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I shall, because I think the necessity for ongoing plans there must not be overlooked. However, I think that the best approach at this stage would be a multinational one. The problem in the South Sahara is of such a magnitude that if we co-ordinate Canadian efforts with other people of goodwill, we might be able to do some good. I shall try to get the exact information my honourable friend has requested.

INDIAN ACT

REINSTATEMENT OF INDIAN WOMEN TO MEMBERSHIP OF INDIAN BANDS

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Over the last several weeks I have been receiving representations from various Indian groups, particularly a group in Treaty Six, regarding the reinstatement of Indian women to membership of bands. Bill C-47 was introduced in the previous session, if I recall correctly, to deal with the repeal of section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act. Because there is so much uncertainty among these groups throughout the country, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate can give us precise information as to the date his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, will bring in a bill dealing with this matter?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to ask my colleague the answer to that question.

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, while the leader is making inquiries of his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, would he also determine the stage of consideration within the government the legislation has reached? Has it gone before cabinet? Has it cleared cabinet, or what? This is becoming a very serious matter within the Indian community, first, because of the fundamental issue involved and, second, because of the uncertainty as to when the matter will be dealt with.

Senator Roblin: There is no question that it is an important matter and I fully understand the weight of my honourable friend's question. However, I must tell him that it is not likely that I will be able to tell him where this matter stands within the process of government consideration because, obviously, the matter can only be disclosed when the final agreement is made with all parties and a policy can be announced.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

POSSIBILITY OF BUDGET CUTS IN ONTARIO

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Quite properly, it happens now and then that honourable senators defend the interests of minority groups in Canada, be they visible, linguistic or other minorities.

Well, honourable senators, perhaps you are aware of the battle which has been going on in Ontario for the past ten days or so with respect to the regionalistic concept of the National Film Board.

The National Film Board senior management want to cut the Ontario regional office operations budget down to a ridiculous minimum. Apparently, Franco-Ontarians are not prepared to live in the shadow of the powers that be of the National Film Board in Montreal. In other words, they want to breathe their own oxygen.

I would like to express my concern to the government as a result of those budget cuts and the instructions issued by either side in the various government departments and agencies.

I would ask the Leader of the Government to pay close attention to the National Film Board regional group operating in Ontario—already decimated as it is—so that it might reasonably fulfil its own aspirations without permanent policy directives imposed by the central office in Montreal.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, unfortunately the translation system failed at the beginning of my honourable friend's remarks, but he speaks such beautiful French that even my uncultivated ear, I think, got the gist of what he had to say.

I can say to him that I am not aware of this problem that he has raised with respect to the cultural aspects of life in the region that he mentioned, and I must inform myself more on that subject before I can give him an answer to his question.

HUMAN RIGHTS

MEETING OF EXPERTS—DESIRABILITY OF SENATE PARTICIPATION—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability of its participation in the preparations for and deliberations of the special meeting of experts on human rights, which is to be held in Ottawa, April 23rd to mid-June, 1985, as directed in the concluding document of the Madrid Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.—(Honourable Senator Doody.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Are you saving it for Monday?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on this particular order I moved the adjournment of the debate yesterday after my friend, Senator Yuzyk, spoke. At that time I did so in the interests of senators who might wish to speak later on this particularly important subject. If no one wishes to participate, I am prepared to let the order go at any time. However, I would prefer to leave it on the order paper. I think it is an exceptionally important item.

Order stands.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85, (No. 2)

MOTION TO INSTRUCT NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO MEET FORTHWITH WITHDRAWN

On the Motion:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to meet forthwith to determine the course of action to be taken with respect to the disposition of Bill C-11, "An Act to provide borrowing authority"; and

That the Committee have power to sit while the Senate is sitting for the above purpose.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am the author of this motion that requested, on Tuesday, February 12, 1985, that the committee meet to proceed with Bill C-11. I never had an opportunity to explain to the house why I sought leave to so move at that time, and perhaps I could do so now.

When I found that the committee had made no firm arrangements to meet again, for reasons which are known to all members of this chamber, and to which I attach no opprobrium, it seemed to me that it would be advisable to have the committee meet early this week. When I attempted to look into this matter, I found that the chairman of the committee was in Montreal, for very good and sufficient family reasons, and he has our sympathy in this problem.

I then attempted to get in touch with the deputy chairman of the committee. He was in good shape but he was in Toronto, stranded there in the snow storm. Therefore, I thought it might be useful to try to get the Senate to consent to have that committee meet without either of those two officers to continue its business. My proposal did not receive the approval of the Senate, however, and I accepted that.

Now that the committee has met, of course, there is no reason for my motion and therefore, if I have unanimous consent, I will withdraw it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I agree, but I would note that what happened, as is implied, is that the chairman did call a meeting, even though he was in Montreal.

Senator Roblin: Indeed, but the committee did not meet that day; it met on the following day.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Frith: I am not quarrelling with that. The committee met in the ordinary course, as I think you are implying.

Senator Roblin: The committee met, and I am glad of that. I appreciate what he did.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I wonder if I might ask a question of the mover of the motion in the first instance. Did he attempt to speak to either the chairman or the deputy chairman, and did he, in fact, speak to either of them?

Senator Roblin: The advisability of making this move, I have to confess, occurred to me later than I would have liked, and therefore I had to prepare the material in a hurry to meet the opening of the session. I had a chance to show it—and I emphasize this—to the Leader of the Opposition only as he entered the chamber. I am frank to admit that that is not the best way to do business and that it would be much preferable if I could have let him have a view of it previously. However, I will tell you frankly what the facts are, and I must say that I raised a minimum of criticism when I found I could not get leave. It occurred to me at the time that it was such a straightforward idea that perhaps it did not require much consideration. However, if other people have other views, I am prepared to accept them.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, yes I do have some very different views on the subject. I think it is exceedingly bad practice for the Senate to interfere in the work of committees unless there is first a discussion with the committee chairman and deputy chairman. I do not think that it is good practice to set up committees of which, in their normal practice, a chairman and deputy chairman are chosen and given certain responsibilities, and then have the Senate as a whole interfere with the work of those committees. I think that if anyone feels that a committee is not doing its work, the first action must be to go to the chairman of that committee and discuss it with him. If that does not result in any change, then there are other courses of action. I think to do otherwise is exceedingly bad practice and contrary, in fact, to the unwritten rules of the Senate, the time-honoured rules under which we have worked.

I certainly find that this particular motion was offensive and, had my honourable friend wished to proceed with it at that time, I certainly would have objected.

Senator Frith: Is the answer to the question that you did not, in fact, discuss the matter with the chairman of the committee?

Senator Roblin: We tried to reach the chairman of the committee; our efforts proved futile.

Senator Frith: Does the same answer apply to the deputy chairman?

Senator Roblin: When I had my resolution ready, he saw it.

Senator Frith: I want to have on the record the fact as to whether you were or were not able to reach the chairman or the deputy chairman. Neither did you discuss your motion with either the chairman or the deputy chairman. Whatever the reasons were, you did not?

Senator Roblin: I did not conduct the conversations myself. That was done by some of my colleagues, and I was informed that they could not reach the chairman of the committee. However, we did reach the deputy chairman of the committee, but he was in Toronto and could not get back. We could not physically get in touch with the other gentleman.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, that the motion shall be withdrawn?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, February 18, 1985, at 2 p.m.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

PIONEER TRUST—STATUS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, on Wednesday last I raised a number of questions about the announcement that Pioneer Trust was closing its doors. Since that time I have been informed, I believe quite reliably, that a letter signed by Bob Andrew, the Minister of Finance for Saskatchewan, under date of November 26, 1984 and addressed to Pioneer Trust, guaranteed the Province of Saskatchewan to the extent of $26.5 million for preferred shares. It was put to me that had that letter been written by a private corporation it would have been a legal document that would have stood up in court. Therefore, it seems that the Saskatchewan government went a long distance at that time towards guaranteeing those preferred shares.

My question is: When did the Province of Saskatchewan—the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been looking into this—first approach the Government of Canada about this problem, and when did it first ask for some assistance from the federal government? Senator Roblin, in his reply to me, stated:

The federal government believes it has discharged its responsibility through the deposit insurance plan which protects the vast majority of funds at risk.

From time to time, in recent days, there have been statements by a spokesman for the Government of Saskatchewan that negotiations are still going on with the federal authorities as to what extent there may be guarantees or assistance for 1,800 depositors who are not covered by the deposit insurance and who have deposits amounting to $34 million. Is it a fact, as the Leader of the Government seemed to infer, that the government is not giving any further consideration to something beyond the deposit insurance? The impression is certainly abroad in Saskatchewan that negotiations are still proceeding and that there is still a possibility of assistance from the federal government in the way I have mentioned.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I imagine that the uninsured depositors to whom my honourable friend refers are not private citizens. Usually people in that category are commercial corporations, municipal governments, and others of a similar nature. So it is possible that is where the $34 million figure originates.

In my reply the other day I told my honourable friend that I would inquire as to whether there was any correspondence with the Government of Saskatchewan on this point. If the consent of the Saskatchewan government was obtained—and that is a necessary condition—I will see if any information can be provided.

Senator Argue: I do not wish to belabour the point, but do I take it from the answer of the Leader of the Government that no consideration is being given for any assistance beyond the $60,000 limit? With all due respect, I say that there are individuals who have deposits with that trust company somewhat in excess of $60,000.

Senator Roblin: That information will probably be revealed if and when we are able to consider the correspondence. I have no information beyond that.

Senator Argue: Then do I take it that the sum of the Leader of the Government's answers suggests that there is still some consideration being given by the Government of Canada to further assistance in this general area?

Senator Roblin: No, the honourable senator cannot make that assumption.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

KIDNAPPING OF CANADIAN CITIZEN BY BOUNTY HUNTERS FROM UNITED STATES

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, two United States bounty hunters kidnapped a Canadian citizen on Vancouver Island, forced him on to a plane and flew him to the United States, where he now resides in jail. According to the bounty hunters who illegally arrested him, the Canadian citizen in question was arrested because of jumping bail.

Will the Leader of the Government assure the Senate that the government will do everything in its power to ensure that the Canadian citizen is returned to this country; and, further, that the two bounty hunters, who have been apprehended and who are now in custody, will be prosecuted to the limit of the law, to the extent that the federal government has influence in this connection, in order that such kidnapping and illegality by agents of a foreign though friendly power will not be tolerated in this country?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is indeed a curious situation because it is not unique. Some time ago a Canadian citizen living between Canada and Florida was also captured in Canada by bounty hunters and was taken to the United States, where he was tried and put in jail for some time. If memory serves me well, the bounty hunters were apprehended, brought to Canada and placed before the courts of this country for judicial examination and decision. I have every reason to think that the same course of action will follow in this instance, because it is not a course of conduct that we are willing to condone or ignore.

Senator Gigantès: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. He will remember that Canada used the normal channels of communication with the Government of the United States, in the case he mentioned, in an attempt to alleviate the hardships of the Canadian citizen involved. Can the leader assure us that the present government will also use its good offices to the maximum extent possible to help the Canadian citizen, in the case I have referred to, who is now being held in a foreign jail?

Senator Roblin: I have every expectation that the present government will be successful in dealing with the two sides of this question, as was previously the case.

EDUCATION

POST SECONDARY—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Some time ago Mr. Al Johnson was engaged by the then Secretary of State to study and report on federal-provincial relations in the area of post-secondary education. I believe Mr. Johnson's mandate expired in November. My question is: Is Mr. Johnson's report available? If not, can he give us some prognosis as to when it will be available? And, in either case, will he ensure that the report is brought to the Senate in the usual way when it is ready?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will undertake to inquire into the status of the report but whether or not it is a document that will be tabled here is another question, one on which I am unable to give any assurance at the present time.

Senator Stewart: If the document is not secret, may we assume that it will be brought forward?

POST SECONDARY—MINISTERIAL MEETINGS

Hon. John B. Stewart: I have a second question. The present Secretary of State has had meetings with the council of ministers of education. As I understand it, his purpose at those meetings is to give the provincial governments an adequate understanding of the role of the federal government in this rather costly area of education. I am asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate if the series of meetings has been terminated and, if so, whether a report on those meetings will be brought to this house?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can add nothing to my reply to the honourable senator's first question because I have already said all I can say about it.

With respect to the Secretary of State's consultations with the ministers of education, I am hopeful that these meetings will be very productive. I know it is a matter of some gratification to all honourable senators that in the recent meetings in Regina, co-operation and coordination between federal and provincial governments in terms of training, which is certainly a part of the educational field these days, was remarkably productive, mainly because the federal government agreed to pay some attention to the special requirements of the provinces and regions. I think that has been a helpful development. I expect that much the same thing may be taking place in the portfolio of the Secretary of State. However, I have no information at the moment that I can give my honourable friend on that. I will ask the Secretary of State if he intends to make a report on that matter, and then pass on the information to my honourable friend.

Senator Stewart: I have a supplementary question. Can we assume that, in the area of academic post-secondary education, the Government of Canada will be equally generous? At any rate, will it be as generous as it was in the area concerning which the Leader of the Government in the Senate speaks in such congratulatory language?

Senator Roblin: I certainly hope that it will be fair and just. When the report of the Secretary of State is available, we will have a chance to examine that fact.

PROPOSED RELOCATION OF CO-OP IMPLEMENTS FROM WINNIPEG TO REGINA

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure that he is as concerned as I am about the recent report in the media regarding the purchase by a Swedish firm of Co-op Implements and the proposal by that firm to move the plant from Winnipeg to Regina. My concern is the loss in Winnipeg of approximately 70 permanent jobs as well as some part-time jobs. I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would speak to his government in regard to this matter in an effort to have this plant remain in Winnipeg.

As honourable senators are no doubt aware, this particular plant has received many grants from both the federal and provincial governments. I am therefore asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate to make representations to his government to see if there is any possible way that this plant can be kept in Winnipeg.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am sympathetic, as I usually am, to the questions raised by my honourable friend because he usually raises some pretty good ones, and this one certainly commands my attention. Insofar as I am able to do so, I shall follow his request.

At the same time, I think I might say, however, that Co-op Implements has had a very sad and unfortunate financial history. It has had a struggle to keep its doors open and to sell sufficient of its products to justify itself on an economic basis. Over the years, very substantial grants have been given by various levels of government, and I think it is true to say that the Government of Manitoba, under both the present administration and its predecessor, gave very substantial support to this company. Part of the motive for that, undoubtedly, was to retain it in Winnipeg. Therefore, I expect to have the full co-operation of the Government of Manitoba in achieving that end now.

Hon. Hazen Argue: I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to take into consideration the fact that the Province of Saskatchewan, although the plant was not located there, also gave very large sums of money to Co-op Implements in the hope that it would be a viable business. Coming as I do from Saskatchewan, I would think that consideration of the move to Regina would need to be discussed around the table at the same time. I know we are at a disadvantage around the cabinet table because I believe there are four powerful ministers from Manitoba and only two from Saskatchewan.

Senator Roblin: I think the Saskatchewan members of the cabinet are very effective and vocal, and therefore the odds of four to two are not at all unfair, and that their voice will be heard.

[Senator Roblin.]

However—and this will be made clear on examination—I suspect that the deal between Co-op Implements and the new company may have the decisive voice as to where this plant is located. One can see, therefore, that it might be a difficult problem to solve, and one can, therefore, offer no guarantees.

ESTABLISHMENT OF AMERICAN PLANT IN CORNWALL, ONTARIO

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question on a similar subject. On February 14, 1985, I asked a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the plans of an American company to build a manufacturing plant in Cornwall, Ontario. Was the leader able to obtain any additional information concerning that project?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that matter is still under investigation. I think I warned my honourable friend that information of this sort is usually regarded as being confidential by the company, and unless its consent is given to release it, it may be ultra vires to do so.

Senator Bosa: I appreciate the answer given by my honourable friend, but I am sure he is also aware that there is a great deal of concern among Canadian manufacturers who may have to confront a formidable competitor in that field. They also would like to know what might be in store.

Senator Roblin: That is precisely the point, is it not? It is a matter of competition.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROSPECTIVE STRIKE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Apparently, negotiations for a new postal contract have reached an impasse. It is well known that a postal strike places a heavy economic burden on businesses, especially small businesses. Is the government contemplating some kind of contingency plan, in the event of such a strike, in order to relieve the burden on business arising from such a strike?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Canada Post Corporation is a crown corporation and, therefore, is, to a greater extent than was hitherto the case, in charge of its own industrial relations. So, it is difficult at the moment to say whether the government will interfere in the process of those bargaining sessions.

It is true that if the post office ceases to work it causes a substantial hardship on many people. Heaven knows we have been through that before on many occasions and understand how bad it can be.

I am not sure whether it is any comfort to my honourable friend, but I do know from personal experience that the users of the post office have learned from these sad experiences in the past and are becoming adaptable and flexible in finding other methods of getting their pieces of paper moved around the country. I suspect that if we do have a strike in the post office, those alternative methods of moving the mail will come strongly to the fore.

Senator Gigantès: A supplementary question. There are some legislative obstacles to private enterprise stepping in and replacing all activities of the post office. Is the government considering any changes which would allow private companies to supplant the striking postal workers in such fields, which even under past circumstances they were not allowed into?

Senator Roblin: It would, of course, be quite improper to try to forecast for my honourable friend what the government might or might not do in certain hypothetical circumstances, so I will not do that. All I will say is that, in the past, the alternative methods of moving the mail have proved quite effective, regardless of whatever obstacles might have been in their way.

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall moved the second reading of Bill C-28, to amend the Pension Act.

He said: Honourable senators, you may recall that on November 20, when addressing a motion to review and update the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled "They Served—We Care", I referred at some length to a list of provisions which the Minister of Veterans Affairs intended to introduce and put into effect through legislation. I am therefore pleased that today I have the privilege of introducing that legislation in the form of Bill C-28, a bill to amend the Pension Act. The Pension Act governs the Canadian Pension Commission in its adjudication of claims resulting from death or disability arising from service in the Canadian forces during World Wars I and II, the Special Service Force, and those who served in the military during peace time.

● (1450)

Honourable senators, the bill is straightforward and, although, as usual, it will not, unfortunately, attract much attention or interest outside the veteran community, it is vitally important and contains amendments long overdue. These amendments have been requested for many years by veterans' associations through resolutions at conventions, and by other organizations through the channels of appeals and requests to government. The amendments are based on recommendations by every interested group. The passage of this bill will correct some serious anomalies in the act and, in addition, will have the effect of hastening the process of hearing pension applications. It will provide for more fair adjudication, and speed up applications and appeals. This bill is of concern to some 700,000 veterans and many more thousands of dependents and children.

Honourable senators, the first amendment deals with the annual increase in the basic rate of pension, which was, for many years, a matter of long and serious debate. Prior to this amendment, the basic rate of pension, which is based on the average wage of the five selected categories in the public service, has been increased each year by the percentage increase of the consumer price index.

However, veterans were placed in a disadvantageous position when the salaries of those public servants were increased by a larger amount which, as a result, reflected an increase greater than that of the consumer price index. This meant that veterans' organizations had to make repeated representations to government to provide a catch-up to grant an equal increase to veterans. In 1984, that difference amounted to $611.

The amendment will provide that, in future, the rate of pension will be increased each year by whichever is the greater—the percentage increase in the consumer price index or the average percentage increase in the salaries of the five selected categories of public servants. This is a welcome relief to veterans and veterans' organizations and, more particularly, will benefit some 90,000 spouses and children. It will also benefit many dependents other than widows.

Honourable senators, to dwell just a little further on this matter, this amendment has been requested since 1972 or 1973. As a matter of fact, in 1972, a committee, including representatives of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian Pension Commission and the Canadian Legion, was appointed. That committee advocated that the basic rate be equal to the average composite wage. This was accepted by government. Now, 13 years later, we still do not have this enshrined in the legislation. It brought about the situation where, after a few years, when the veteran fell behind, everyone had to plead with government to provide the difference in income. Now, it will be enshrined in legislation, and we will not have to go begging again.

The second amendment is most important in that it eliminates what can only be referred to as discrimination in two sections of the Veterans Charter. It will also eliminate the unfairness in the entitlement to pensions of widows after the death of their husbands. Honourable senators, I feel that matter was passed over too lightly in the other place.

In simple terms, when a pensioner dies, the widow or widower of the deceased veteran in receipt of a disability pension is currently reduced to a single-rate pension at the end of the month in which the pensioner dies; yet, at the same time, under the War Veterans Allowances Act, when a WVA recipient dies, his or her spouse is entitled to continue to receive the married rate for 12 months after his or her death.

This was a humane gesture to cushion the shock of an immediately-reduced income at a time when the spouse is under emotional distress and to allow him or her to adjust to new financial circumstances. For example, honourable senators, taking into account the maximum rate for a 100 per cent disability pensioner of $1,420.24, after that veteran dies, immediately, in the first month following, the spouse would be reduced to the single rate of $852.14—a reduction of $568.10.

On the other hand, the maximum allowable income to the married veteran under WVA is $993.66, and, when that veteran dies, the government has been kind enough to allow the spouse to continue to receive the married rate for one year.

For some reason or other, the wife of the disabled pensioner, whose husband suffered the highest category of disablement, receives less than the widow of a War Veterans Allowance recipient whose entitlement comes about by pre-aging. This bill will entitle the spouse of the disability pensioner to receive the married rate for one year. This will benefit some 6,200 widows at a cost of $7 million annually.

Honourable senators, I dwell on this matter on November 20 and, if you will bear with me, I must dwell on it again to show how, after so many years, such variations and unfairness have existed in the legislation. For example, the magic formula for a widow to be entitled to a widow's pension is 50 per cent. At the present time, that pension for the married veteran and his widow at 50 per cent is $710.13. When that veteran dies, thankfully, his wife is entitled to the widow's pension of $852.14. She receives more being single than she did when married to her husband. It is the equivalent of a 60 per cent married pension. Therefore, at 50 per cent, the widow receives 10 per cent more than she was receiving when she was married.

Taking it a step further, the disability pensioner at 60 per cent, married, receives $852.14, so, on his death, his wife would not receive any more even though his disability was 10 per cent more severe than the 50 per cent pensioner.

Honourable senators, to continue along this calculation with 10 per cent graduations, the wife of a 70 per cent pensioner who received $994.16 would receive $142 less after his death. The wife of an 80 per cent pensioner who received $1,136.19 would receive $284 or 20 per cent less. A 90 per cent pensioner, together with his wife, would have been receiving $1,278.21; his widow would receive $406 or 30 per cent less. At the 100 per cent calculation, the wife, who together with her husband would have been receiving $1,420.24, would after his death lose $568.10.

Honourable senators, this amendment will now allow the wife of a 100 per cent disability pensioner, after his death, to retain for 12 months the amount of $1,420.24. This will allow her time to recover from the emotional shock of her husband's death and to adjust to the new life she must lead.

The third amendment, honourable senators, carries the continuation of the married rate extension, which I just mentioned, one important step further. It finally recognizes the spouse of the veteran who is among the most severely disabled in the veterans' ranks. That is the veteran beyond the 100 per cent disability, who, because of the seriousness of his disability, is entitled to an attendant's allowance and/or exceptional incapacity allowance which arises out of the combined effects of serious disability and age as a consequence.

Now, thankfully, the spouses of veterans, such as the paraplegic, the double-amputee, the war blinded, and others who are victims of complications and illness arising out of their present incapacity, will be entitled also to the married rate for a full year after the death of the veteran at a cost of only $1 million per year. These spouses are perhaps only 200 to 300 in number.

• (1500)

The other amendments, which have been inserted in the bill since I last spoke on the provisions on November 20, are also more important than appears at first glance, because it is hoped they will effect an improvement by reducing the delays in the pension process.

In one case, the amendment provides for the addition of four additional members to the Pension Review Board, which is the last line in the process which, through various circumstances, is now facing an eight-month backlog of cases. It is hoped that the addition of those members will speed up the examination of appeals.

On the other hand, the last amendment will allow the first level of adjudication, the Pension Entitlement Boards, to be composed of two or three commissioners as opposed to the present necessity of having three, and will make it possible for more cases to be heard each year. For example, the maximum strength is 24 commissioners, and whereas we now have eight teams of three, as a consequence of this amendment, we shall have 12 teams of two.

A more important factor in this regard is that where, in the past, the practice has been to turn down the veteran's application whenever a split decision occurred, on passage of this legislation that split decision will always be in favour of the veteran.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: That is to say, if one of two commissioners turns down the application and the other approves it, whereas prior to this bill the decision was against the veteran, the decision will now be in favour of the veteran. The low percentage of positive decisions by the Canadian Pension Commission has been a source of deep concern over the years, as have been the long delays in the build-up of the backlog in the number of cases.

Honourable senators, those are all of the amendments. I should like to say a few words on how this legislation came about. The only reference to veterans in the Throne Speech of November 5 was in the following sentence:

My ministers will introduce measures to improve the financial situation of Canada's war veterans.

I am sure that all honourable senators will agree that the action resulting from that one sentence in the form of this bill has made a contribution to the veterans' cause of some $22 million.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: That is an appreciable amount of funding despite the preaching of restraint, and, honourable senators, that is as it should be. I would refer to it as another instalment of the debt to our veterans, a debt long overdue. To take 13 or 14 years to enshrine the basic rate of pension into legislation, even though the formula was accepted by government in 1973, is inexcusable. To allow widows of veterans to have waited so long for equality, and to have withheld recognition of the concept of fair treatment at a cost of a mere $7 million is equally inexcusable. There has been an element of complacency in carrying out the simple action required to speed up the pension process by the addition of a few commissioners, a step which has been long awaited, particularly when there have been long-standing vacancies. I notice today in a government news release, that the government has appointed two new commissioners to the Canadian Pension Commission. It is hoped that that will relieve the situation and speed up the adjudication process.

The amendments to Bill C-28 came about because the minister was willing to listen. Furthermore, he was evidently ready to act on the representations of those veteran groups, of MPs and senators, and did so after only four months in office.

We should place on the record our appreciation of the Royal Canadian Legion, the War Amputations of Canada, the National POW Association, the Dieppe Veterans of Canada, the other organizations who make up the National Council of Veterans, and those organizations outside the National Council, who will sigh with relief when this bill receives Royal Assent after the many years of pleading.

I wish to make it clear that my commendation of the Honourable George Hees does not lessen the efforts of those ministers who preceded him, such as the Honourable Bennett Campbell, the Honourable Alan MacKinnon, the Honourable Daniel J. McDonald, and others who came before, who made valiant efforts to obtain approval of the rectification of those long-standing discrepancies in the Veterans Charter, but, for various reasons, without success. Evidently Mr. Hees has the persuasive powers to gain acceptance from an understanding government a realization of its priorities, and I welcome the opportunity to present the bill today. I am sure that Senator Bonnell would agree with me that it is satisfying to note that three amendments of those recommended by the committee which he chaired are contained in this bill.

But even with the significant changes embodied in the bill, many other discrepancies still exist in the act, which must be dealt with on an urgent basis. I am pleased to point out that the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has authorized the formation of a Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs. I commend Senator Tremblay for that. That subcommittee will enable us to review the recommendations contained in the Senate committee's report entitled "They Served—We Care" and will continue to direct its efforts toward assisting veterans in the future.

From a survey of members of the Senate, I note with pleasure that approximately 22 distinguished veterans are serving in this chamber. I would welcome their participation and advice to ensure that we can, with a sense of duty, produce legislation that will fulfil Canada's commitment to its veterans.

The bill, as honourable senators will note from reading the debates in the other place, was passed through all stages on Friday last. It is equally important that we allow passage of the bill in this chamber, to ensure that all eligible widows will not miss out on benefits, and that the other benefits embodied in the act will be directed for the benefit of all Canadian veterans. I hope that this legislation will be passed as quickly as possible.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

HUMAN RIGHTS

MEETING OF EXPERTS—DESIRABILITY OF SENATE PARTICIPATION—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability of its participation in the preparations for and deliberations of the special meeting of experts on human rights, which is to be held in Ottawa, April 23rd to mid-June, 1985, as directed in the concluding document of the Madrid Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.—(Honourable Senator Doody.)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe that Senator Doody stood this because he thought that there might be other senators, other than himself, who might wish to add to the useful contribution made by Senator Yuzyk. Therefore if any honourable senator wishes to speak on this subject today, he or she would be welcome to do so.

Order stands.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fourth Report of the Committee of Selection, which was presented on Wednesday, February 13, 1985.

Hon. Orville Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 19, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Hon. Rhéal Bélisle, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE SENATE

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I am raising a question of privilege. The telephone in my office has been out of order since ten o'clock this morning. I made a complaint because there had been no warning that service would be interrupted. An hour later, some technicians came to my office. They seemed to be very surprised at the fact that there was no service, but they did not make any repairs, and I still cannot use the telephone in my office.

This is an intolerable situation. I realize that the other place is not sitting today, but I think that the senators have a right to demand this service.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Your request will be taken into consideration, Senator Langlois.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85, (No. 2)

LEAVE DENIED FOR MOTION TO INSTRUCT NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO REPORT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we begin the business of the day, I have a request to make of the Senate and that is to give me leave, notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), to move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to report Bill C-11, intituled: "An Act to provide borrowing authority", later this day.

A mere recital of the terms of this proposal indicates that it is a matter of some urgency. I think it is sufficiently urgent to bring it to the attention of the Senate now, rather than tomorrow, as I would do if leave were not granted, but I would ask for the indulgence of the Senate in order to share with you the reasons I think such a motion is entitled to the support of this house.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for giving me notice of his intention to seek leave to move this motion today. If leave were granted, no doubt the motion would be moved and a debate would ensue in which positions would be re-stated.

Before that happens, I would like the Minister of Finance to have a full opportunity to consider all options and particularly the proposal I made to him yesterday which, if accepted, would provide an opportunity to proceed with the borrowing next week. With that purpose in mind, I believe it would be premature to proceed with the motion today.

Senator Roblin: May I just offer a comment to my honourable friend. I understand clearly what he is saying to me, but part of the reason I wish to speak now is to deal with the very questions he raised, namely, whether or not the proposal he has suggested, that the Senate should pass a resolution respecting the ultimate disposition of this bill, is an acceptable one. That was the proposal that was given to the committee yesterday, and I am prepared to deal with it now. I think there are urgent and specific reasons why I should be allowed to deal with it now, so I ask my honourable friend to reconsider his position.

I understand that, while he has had an opportunity to be apprised of my intention to move this motion, members of his caucus have not. Therefore, if there is any wish on the part of my honourable friend to consult with his colleagues as to the correct course of action, as far as we on this side are concerned, we would be disposed to make arrangements for him to do so. However, I do think the matter ought to be discussed today.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have had a brief opportunity to consult with, not all but a number of my colleagues who have been principally involved in this matter, particularly a number of those who have participated in the committee. While one would have liked to hear yesterday—or even earlier today—the comments on the constructive proposal I made yesterday to provide certainty for future borrowing, I do not believe that it is necessary to have this motion debated today to have those comments.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate that this is an exchange of views between my honourable friend and me and I am not entirely clear whether we are entitled to deal with this indefinitely. However, I would like to tell him that I have information to give the house which I think would indicate that his proposal of yesterday is not suitable in the circumstances and that there are good and sufficient reasons, adequate reasons why this is so.

In view of that fact, and in view of the pressing nature of the financial constraints in which the government finds itself, I think it would be unfortunate if we lost time in respect of this matter.

I want to tell my honourable friend that the government so regards the matter that, if the Senate were to concur in this bill today, it would be prepared to advise the Speaker of the House of Commons, in the strongest possible terms, to recall the House of Commons so that Royal Assent could be given. So, this is no minor matter. However, if my honourable friend refuses to give me leave, I will have to accept that, but I must express my deep regret.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE, REGINA, FEBRUARY 14-15, 1985—FAILURES AND SHORTCOMINGS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, February 21, 1985, I will call the attention of the Senate to certain failures and shortcomings of the First Ministers' Conference held in Regina on February 14-15, 1985.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85, (No. 2)

NOTICE OF MOTION TO INSTRUCT NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO REPORT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to report Bill C-11, intituled: "An Act to provide borrowing authority", later this day.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ESTIMATES

DATE OF TABLING

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In doing so, I refer to a question I addressed to the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate on Thursday, February 7. I pointed out, in asking that question, that "in recent years the practice has been to table the main estimates in the third week of February." I asked the Acting Leader of the Government whether that normal procedure would be followed this year, and in his reply, the acting leader said that he had no reason to believe that the normal procedure would not be followed.

I then proceeded to ask the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he would tell us the timing of the tabling of the main estimates, particularly whether they would be tabled before or after the planned parliamentary break. The acting leader replied that he would make the inquiry and report back to the chamber. That assurance was given on February 7.

Today is February 19, and we are in the midst of very important deliberations, yet we have been unable to secure from the government a precise date for the tabling of the main estimates.

I want to ask the Leader of the Government whether he would facilitate our understanding of the problem before us by telling us today when the main estimates will be tabled.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that question was addressed to the Minister of Finance yesterday at the committee meeting, and he was not able to give a specific date. It may be that he can do so now. I will ask him.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am surprised at this particular attitude, because we know perfectly well that it is a key point, and I am surprised that the Leader of the Government should have been so careless about this inquiry made on February 7 and the inquiry made of him last week by Senator Kirby as to the timing of the main estimates that he should today be unable to tell us whether he has asked the Minister of Finance. Why has he not asked him? As a member of the government, is it not possible for him to call the Minister of Finance to ask him, and then tell us what the answer is?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend was present at the committee meeting yesterday and had an opportunity to speak with the minister directly, and he did. He got the minister's answer. It is quite unreasonable to expect me to say any more than the minister has already said.

My undertaking is that I will prompt the minister, to see if I can get a positive date for my honourable friend.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government realizes that last year the main estimates were tabled on February 21; the year before, on February 22; and the year before that, on February 23. The then Acting Leader of the Government, Senator Doody, said he had no reason to believe that that procedure would be altered.

Can the Leader of the Government give us an assurance that he will tell us tomorrow the precise date of the tabling of the main estimates? Surely that decision must have been made, or is the government so out of control of the management of its affairs that it is unable to tell us, on February 19, when it intends to table the main estimates, which must be tabled before the end of the month? I want an assurance that we will get a precise date tomorrow from a member of the government.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend overlooks the fact that, on the dates he was talking about, another government, which had been in office for some time, was in power. It is an entirely different matter when a new government assumes office and has to prepare the estimates itself for the first time, with all the complications that arise in respect of a change of administration.

I tell my honourable friend that, if the dates differ by several days, he need not be surprised. However, as he knows, they will be down before the end of next week. When I can give him a date, I will.

Senator MacEachen: I am delighted that the Leader of the Government has given us the assurance that they will be down before the end of next week; that would be, under the regulations of the House of Commons, by February 28.

Surely the matter is of more than academic interest to the Leader of the Government, because he knows that the moment these estimates are tabled there will be set in motion a procedure by which the government will receive its borrowing authority in short order. The Leader of the Government was earlier asking for leave to give him an opportunity to deal with this matter.

In view of the difficulties in which we find ourselves because of the inaction of the government, we think it is beyond comprehension that we are unable to know today, and be without assurance that we will know tomorrow, when the main estimates will come down.

Senator Roblin: The Minister of Finance addressed the matter in committee. My honourable friend must recognize that he is the man who will give me the information as to when they will be available. I cannot produce the date out of thin air. I have to get it from him. I will do my best to get that date from him.

We know they will be down before the end of next week because the regulations will be adhered to.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think the Leader of the Government is under a misapprehension. The person who tables the main estimates is not the Minister of Finance; it is the President of the Treasury Board.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government should ask the President of the Treasury Board when he intends to table the main estimates because, under the current law, it is he who has that responsibility, not the Minister of Finance.

Senator Roblin: That may be so. I will ask both gentlemen. That ought to satisfy my honourable friend.

Senator MacEachen: Will the Leader of the Government give us an answer and not engage in this kind of nonsense that is preventing the Senate from moving ahead to deal with a matter which the government regards as urgent, but with respect to which it is showing great negligence and considerable mismanagement?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: If anyone is holding up this matter, it is my honourable colleague and his friends.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Roblin: Yesterday in committee I asked when the committee should meet again. I asked that a date be set for a further committee meeting. There is no resolution before the committee. My honourable friend had an opportunity in that committee to submit the resolution, if he wished to do so; he did not wish to do so. He made a proposal. He does not want to hear from me this afternoon what my reply to that proposal would be. Yet, he says that we on this side are holding up the advancement of this bill. I do not think that is a fair accusation.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, as a new boy here, perhaps I can be constructive and inquire whether it is proper to discuss in this chamber what took place in committee. My understanding is that it is not.

I should like an answer to my question, please.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not make the rules of this place, but I do know that, when I am challenged by my honourable friend to deal with a matter of great public importance, I am entitled to give an answer which deals with the facts.

Senator MacEachen: And break the rules.

• (1420)

Senator Sinclair: Either the rules are there to be observed or they are there to be broken. That is all I am trying to find out. If they are to be broken, I can break them with impunity along with my honourable friend.

Senator Roblin: I have to tell my honourable friend that he does so daily. Each time there is a Question Period he breaks the rules which are usually observed by parliamentary bodies. Everyone knows that members do not adhere to any reasonable standard of questioning in oral Question Period, and my honourable friend has quickly learned that he can get away with it. So he has been doing it regularly.

Senator Sinclair: I have not been here as long as the Leader of the Government. I will follow him and try to break as many rules as I have seen him do. But I do not think I will be here long enough to enable me to do that.

While I am on my feet, I should like to ask him one question: When he is talking to the Minister of Finance, asking for instructions—I take it that is what he will be doing—would he also ask him why he was unable to comply with the normal procedure that the then acting leader, Senator Doody, said he felt would be complied with, which is the tabling of the main estimates in the third week of February, in accordance with the practice over the past three or four years. What were the specific reasons?

Senator Roblin: I will ask the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board questions addressed to me by the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Sinclair: Would you not also ask the question I put to you?

Senator Roblin: No, honourable senator.

Senator Sinclair: Why not?

Senator Roblin: The answer that has been given is one that is accepted. One does not inquire into one's motives. I said "No," and I mean no.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, it is an amazing situation, when the Leader of the Government can simply say "No," without giving any reason, when a reasonable question is asked. He is the only person in the Senate who has the right to communicate in an official way with the Minister of Finance. It is an amazing situation, that this chamber requires information and he refuses to provide it. He refuses to carry out his responsibilities as a member of the cabinet to ask one of his colleagues what is going on.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am so interested to hear the expert on the rules advance that argument. If he were to take the trouble to read the rules dealing with Question Period he would find that it is an order, it is acceptable, and it is unchallengeable that when an answer is given, that answer cannot be questioned on other grounds. If I say "No," the answer is "No." That is perfectly in accordance with the rules of Parliament. If my honourable friend is keen about it, I will even send over to him the quotation from Beauchesne so that he may become acquainted with this fact.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. Certain persons who are involved in the printing of government documents have been circulating information to the effect that the main estimates are at this moment being printed. If that is so, they should be ready for tabling fairly soon. Would the Leader of the Government do us the favour of checking to see whether that is so?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I fully expect that the estimates are being printed, and when a date for tabling is given me I will let my honourable friend know.

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING OF POTATOES

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. I may perhaps surprise him if I say that there is a war going on between Canada and the United States. In the last century there was a war between New Brunswick and Maine which was referred to as the "Pork and Beans War." Now, there is a potato war going on.

Last week I rose in this place to request of the Leader of the Government that his government reassess its prior decision to abolish the inquiry into the orderly marketing of potatoes in Canada. Other than assurances, which the leader has been giving me since I first set foot in this honourable house, I have had no indication whatsoever to the effect that the government would admit that it has made a serious mistake or that the situation is gravely deteriorating.

We now have a very unusual admission which was made last week in New Brunswick by Ms. Dorothy Kelley, Vice-President of the State of Maine Potato Council, who said that there is something dreadfully wrong with the potato industry, particularly as it refers to the movement of potatoes internationally. She was asked by a Canadian producer, in reference to harassment of the movement of potatoes through the state of Maine to other markets in the United States, "Don't you think that is harassment and dirty pool?"—To which she responded, "Yes, I do." Ms. Kelley went on to say that the problem was not so much with potatoes from New Brunswick as it was with marketing potatoes from Quebec and Prince Edward Island, that they were the culprits. I could present quotation after quotation to demonstrate the feelings of producers in Eastern Canada about this tragic situation. However, I shall not take up the time of the Senate to do that today, but I will constantly come back to this question until I get some satisfaction.

I ask once more of the Leader of the Government, who, I understand, has other serious preoccupations: Will he use his good offices to bring this government, particularly the Minister of Agriculture—who, last fall, under political pressure from his party, abolished the Royal Commission into the Orderly Marketing of Potatoes,—to re-establish that commission before things become even worse than they are now?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If there is a potato war going on, my bump of history tells me that it is the second one because there was one before between the State of Maine and the Province of New Brunswick, and this matter is a continual source of friction.

I am sympathetic to my honourable friend's plea for consideration with respect to trade into the United States. Trade has been a subject of negotiation between this country and the United States for several years. I can say that I have some personal knowledge of this, having listened to arguments on both sides at various inter-parliamentary meetings. I know that it is not easily solved.

I am disturbed to hear the honourable senator say, as I think he said, that there is also a quarrel going on among three provinces in the potato business. I am not sure, though, whether that is a matter that falls within the jurisdiction of the federal government or the provincial governments involved.

With respect to the question of the government's interest in the international trade in potatoes, I shall do my best to get statements from the Minister of Agriculture as to how he views the matter.

INDIAN ACT

STATUS OF WOMEN—REMOVAL OF DISCRIMINATORY PROVISIONS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the continuing embarrassment to Canadians, and indeed to Canada's name on the international stage, and also in view of the continuing hardship to Indian women and their dependants who have lost their Indian status, all due to a discriminatory and, in fact, unjust clause in the Indian Act, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform us why the government is neglecting to give top priority consideration to correcting this situation by legislative action?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Knowing my honourable friend's concern on this subject, I feel quite sure that he used the same eloquent, persuasive language with his colleagues in the former administration who struggled with this problem for many years. I do not say that in any critical sense of the former administration, because it is a very touchy question and the answer as to what is right and what is wrong is not readily apparent. Some form of compromise may be necessary.

I can tell my honourable friend that I, too, read the article in the newspaper that I think he read, which gave the impression that the minister in charge of this matter was at the stage where he was hoping to arrive at a decision which might be reasonably acceptable to both sides. I know nothing more than what I read in the paper, but I shall ask my honourable friend, the minister in charge of this particular matter, whether there is anything further he can say at this time.

DATE OF TABLING

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Perhaps I did not hear you correctly, sir, but I thought you said you were quite sure that the estimates were now being printed. Knowing where they are being printed, and with modern printing techniques, I am told that this process takes about 24 hours. How does this agree with your saying that under previous administrations, which were established for a long time, the estimates might come out on February 23 but, with this new administration we cannot be sure that they will be out in the same time frame as in previous years?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Is there a question involved? I would like to hear it.

Senator Gigantès: My question to the Honourable Leader of the Government is: If the estimates are being printed now, why can we not know when they will be tabled, when in effect the printing will be finished tomorrow?

Senator Roblin: There are so many assumptions in that question that I hardly know how to deal with them. I did not say they were being printed now. What I said was that I would be surprised if they were not, because it is a lengthy job.

I do not know whether it is expected of me to go into detail like this in answer to my honourable friend's question. Surely he must realize that the printing is a process which requires proof-reading, particularly when you have the figures and the vast amount of other detail that are contained in documents of this sort. It is not an easy thing to do and it is not going to be done in any 24 hours. That is a curious suggestion, to say the least.

As to the time element, if the estimates are not produced on February 23, they must be produced by February 28, so you have five days to quarrel about it.

INDUSTRY

VIA RAIL MAINTENANCE CENTRE LOCATION

Hon. Joseph-Phillipe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question I would like to ask of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure he is as concerned as I am about the fact that Manitoba has received several blows recently. In fact, I am beginning to think that we are getting more than blows; it is almost like a slap on the wrist at the same time.

I mentioned yesterday that we were losing Co-op Implementations from Winnipeg. That is the first among others and I am not going to spell out the others at this time. However, I know what I am about to say is not news to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am inquiring of him as to the possibility of getting together with the other three ministers in the cabinet from Manitoba to approach the Minister of Transport with respect to reconsideration of the proposal, with a view to keeping the VIA Rail maintenance centre in Manitoba, where it was scheduled to be in the first place.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My friend raises a point of real difficulty. When you try to make changes in any organization in the interests of efficiency, which in turn means in the interests of the survival of that organization as a transportation unit, you must have recourse to whatever economy is seen to be reasonable in the circumstances. I have no special knowledge of why the maintenance centre is being removed from Winnipeg, so I could perhaps find out for my honourable friend what the reasons for that may be, in the hope of satisfying myself that that is a rational thing to do.

Certainly, as a citizen of that part of the world, I know what he is talking about and I would like to see that maintenance centre stay in Winnipeg. However, I have to point out to him that there may be over-riding considerations in the interests of VIA Rail that this maintenance centre should be moved. If VIA Rail does not operate in the most economical fashion possible, taking into account the enormous subsidies it is now receiving, I fear it will not long continue to have the public support it needs. Therefore, it must become as efficient and as businesslike as it possibly can. If this means that we Winnipeggers must join in this efficiency process, in terms of the loss of jobs in our community, I am sad, but I must look at the larger picture.

I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of Transport, to give me the reasons this move is necessary.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The reason I am asking is that this move was scheduled before the decision was made to restore the passenger service lines previously removed from Edmonton, Vancouver and western Canada in general. Therefore, I get the feeling, as do others of my fellow Manitobans, that the necessity of maintaining this centre in Winnipeg is greater than it ever was.

I am pleased to receive the assurance of the Leader of the Government that he will discuss this matter with his colleagues and the Minister of Transport. I am hopeful that a decision will be made that will enable Manitoba to keep this maintenance centre which is worth $30.6 million a year to our province.

THE SENATE

TELEPHONE SERVICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, may I inform Senator Langlois that the telephone in his office was cut off in error by Bell Canada.

There are now representatives from Bell Canada in his office and his telephone should be restored by the time we adjourn.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Thank you, Your Honour.

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill C-28, intituled: "An Act to amend the Pension Act".—(Honourable Senator Gigantès.)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I rise in support of Bill C-28. I would like to praise the Honourable Senator Marshall for the warmth and humanity he has always expressed on issues dealing with the problems of veterans. In him, they have a friend who is diligent, understanding and courageous in his advocacy of their rights. I congratulate him, and I thank him. I share with him the view that what we have done in Bill C-28, and what we have done previously, is not enough. I share with him the hope that we will do more.

[Translation]

Those who served their country have a right to expect their country to take care of them. Canada may treat its veterans better than most other countries do, but not as well as some countries.

I shall, if I may, quote a few passages written by a former statesman on the subject. I will be brief.

[English]

These men deserve praise because they spared no pains to be able to leave their acquisitions to us, the present generation.

● (1440)

None of these men allowed either wealth, with its prospect of future enjoyment, to unnerve his spirit, or poverty, with its hope of a day of riches, to tempt him to shrink from the danger. They chose to risk death rather than choose dishonour, for heroes have the whole earth as their monument, and apart from written epitaphs on stone, the best remembrance is engraved upon our hearts.

If deeds are in question, those who lie beneath our monuments have received a very small part of the honour that is due to them, and for the rest, their children will be brought up at the public expense, and their widows, too. The state thus offers a valuable prize, not only the garland of victory, to those who fought for its defence, but the promise that their dependents, they themselves, and their progeny, would be defended.

That was said 25 centuries ago by Pericles in his funeral oration. I do not think it has been said better.

He began his speech by apologizing in advance for the inadequacy of his eloquence in treating of the glory of people who gave their best for their country. He said no words could match that. I am even less eloquent—of course, very much less eloquent than he was—but whatever eloquence I have, I would like to use in urging that this bill be passed and in praising those who have worked to produce it and produce earlier aspects of health to veterans, and to praise again Senator Marshall for his splendid feelings.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, this is too important a bill to let go by without saying a few words of praise. This is a piece of legislation that affects approximately 90,000 veterans in Canada; it is a piece of legislation that is worthwhile, and one which has the support of both sides of the chamber; it is a piece of legislation that all parties in the House of Commons supported; it is a piece of legislation that we, as senators, have been asking for; it is a piece of legislation that the Honourable Senator Marshall has been asking for; it is a piece of legislation that the committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has been asking for; it is a piece of legislation that we have asked for in the committee's report entitled: They Served—We Care.

As the former chairman of that committee, I feel it is my duty to stand before you in support of this bill.

Some years ago we tabled in the Senate that report entitled: They Served—We Care. Recommendation No. 1 in that report states:

We recommend that under the Pension Act:

(a) the proportionate pension to the spouses and dependents of deceased veterans who were in receipt of a disability pension of 47 per cent or less be paid immediately instead of being phased in over a six and a half year period as in the Statute Law . . . Amendment Act 1980.

After that report was tabled, the Honourable Gilles Lamontagne brought in Bill C-82, which did away with that phasing-in process enabling those spouses and dependents to receive their pensions immediately.

Recommendation No. 2 of that report states:

We recommend that under the Pension Act:

(a) the pension at the married rate when it is greater than the widow's/widower's pension continue to be paid for a period of one year to the surviving spouse of a deceased veteran;

That recommendation is contained in Bill C-28.

Recommendation No. 2(b) states:

(b) the surviving spouse of a deceased veteran in receipt of an Exceptional Incapacity and/or Attendance Allowance continue to receive such allowance for a period of one year following the death of the veteran.

That recommendation is contained in Bill C-28.

Recommendation No. 3 stated:

We recommend that pension increases reflect the principle of parity with the average wage of five unskilled categories of Public Servants or, the increase in the Consumer Price Index, whichever is the greater, and that this principle be entrenched in the Pension Act.

That principle was in the form of an agreement with the minister but was never entrenched in the Pension Act until now. As a result of Bill C-28, another one of the committee's recommendations is put into legislation.

Recommendation No. 4 states:

We recommend that all necessary steps be taken immediately to eliminate the unacceptable delays in processing pension applications and in pension adjudications which have accumulated since 1970 and that to this end, particular consideration be given to encouraging essential staff to continue working beyond the normal age of retirement.

That recommendation was put into effect by the Honourable Bennett Campbell as a result of the McCracken report which brought in extra commissioners. That has been expanded upon now as a result of Bill C-28 with more commissioners appointed to speed up that process.

Recommendation No. 5 states:

We recommend that the residence requirement of the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be amended to permit otherwise qualified persons to benefit from the legislation while residing outside Canada.

That recommendation has not been fulfilled as yet, but we will keep pushing for that. We have not stopped pushing, and we do not intend to stop.

Recommendation No. 6 states:

We recommend that in the calculation of entitlement to a War Veterans Allowance, the annual exemption for income derived from bank deposits, bonds and dividends be raised to at least $500.

I am not 100 per cent sure as to where that stands at the present time.

Recommendation No. 7(a) states:

(a) the Government appoint a Committee composed of officials from both the government and veterans associations to review and update those recommendations of the Woods Committee which have not been implemented and to identify, study and make recommendations about the anomalies which still exist in the treatment of veterans and their survivors;

That recommendation has not been fulfilled, and we will ask for further study of the Woods Committee report. Perhaps we can undertake some of that ourselves in our Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs.

[Senator Bonnell.]

• (1450)

Recommendation 7(b) suggests that the committee study the apparent inequities to a divorced spouse who, under existing legislation, has no entitlement to benefit under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Clause 1 of Bill C-28 contains some clarification regarding a divorced spouse or someone living apart qualifying under this bill.

Honourable senators, just the other day, I was in touch with the War Amputees concerning a widow of a 100 per cent disabled pensioner, a double-amputee, who died many years ago in an institution. Because she was living apart from her husband at the time he was in the institution, she did not realize she was eligible for a pension. In all these years, she lived in poverty when she should have been entitled to a full pension.

The last recommendation is that the committee study the apparent inequities concerning how veterans are compensated for periods spent as prisoners of war. As yet, that recommendation has been taken no further. I feel we should continue our efforts in that direction.

On several occasions, honourable senators, I have made the recommendation that veterans who were involved in the Chalk River clean-up and in the Nevada clean-up, who were exposed to radiation, should be given consideration for disability pensions. Those veterans in the United States armed forces have been given consideration and are receiving pensions for the effect of that radiation, whereas here in Canada the Department of Veterans Affairs has not given full consideration to our veterans. Our committee should push harder for compensation for those who were involved in the clean-up, many of whom today are dying, or have died, as a result of cancer.

Although it is difficult to prove that radiation did cause the cancer, I believe every benefit of the doubt should be given to the veteran. It is, therefore, my hope that our new minister will, in fact, recommend to the Pension Commission that all benefit of the doubt be given to veterans. It is my understanding that if two members on the committee disagree, one approving and one disagreeing, the veteran will receive the benefit of the opinion of the member who approves. Honourable senators, I agree with that approach. I am glad to see that principle set forth in this legislation.

Honourable senators, I approve of this bill although it may not go far enough. Still further benefits should be made available.

Veterans of Canada are receiving the best treatment of any veterans in the world. I know that increasing benefits is a gradual process, but since our veterans are becoming smaller in number and older in age, they need the help of the Department of Veterans Affairs. That department should make every effort to expand the benefits, especially to prisoners of war; those who were exposed to radiation; those who could not, because they married abroad, come back to our country. They should receive the full benefit.

Honourable senators, I would take this opportunity to congratulate the mover of the motion, Senator Marshall, himself a veteran, who has been working on behalf of veterans for many years. His efforts considerably helped the committee in formulating its recommendation. Senator Phillips, another veteran, also made an important contribution to the committee's work.

With many veterans in this chamber, this is one place where the plight of veterans will receive much sympathy. We will continue to work on their behalf.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that, if the Honourable Senator Marshall speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Marshall: It is always a pleasure to debate veterans' affairs because I have found, in the 10 years I have spent in the House of Commons and in the seven years in this place, the non-partisanship and the camaraderie, which is reflected in these debates, is a good example for all those who debate in a partisan way. It is a pleasure to debate veterans legislation because it shows an overall common support of the veteran's cause, which is only as it should be.

I thank Senator Gigantès for his kind words. He should be complimented on his research which went back 25 centuries where he found appropriate remarks concerning veterans. I commend him for his words of support for the bill.

Senator Bonnell and I have worked together for several years towards the improvement of veterans' circumstances. It was most satisfying to note the support and the camaraderie that existed in the committee and the common purpose which was reflected not only from the veterans but from those who have the interests of veterans at heart.

The participation of female senators in that committee was most gratifying, particularly when, in this legislation, there are long-overdue amendments which will benefit widows.

Senator Bonnell raised the subject of residence requirements for war veterans who remained overseas or in foreign lands after the war. The requirement is that they come back to Canada for 365 consecutive days in order to qualify for War Veterans Allowance. This is something I feel is unfair, particularly when I consider the age of veterans. I can cite examples of ill veterans who have had to return to Canada from England and spend 365 days in this country, away from their families, and incurred the expense of maintaining two places of accommodation. Honourable senators, I think that is wrong, and that changing conditions should dictate changing rules.

The veteran who served and qualified for War Veterans Allowance is entitled to War Veterans Allowance because he served during the war. No one ever said that he had to live in Canada or return to Canada after the war.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: This is an outmoded regulation.

Now that I am in government, it is pleasing to be able to go back to Mr. Hees, the new minister, and find a sympathetic ear. The minister has asked his officials to ascertain how many veterans are involved in this situation. I believe that in the near future there will be a positive reaction to this situation.

Honourable senators, many of us were involved when it was agreed to put into practice the POW Pension Act. However, after hearing from the Dieppe veterans, it is now obvious that their scale of compensation is unfair. For example, a prisoner who spent three months in a prisoner-of-war camp receives compensation at 10 per cent while the prisoner of war who was in a prisoner-of-war camp for one and a half years receives only 20 per cent. We have discussed this with the minister and I am hoping that we will see a change to recognize the suffering that was caused due to long incarceration.

● (1500)

With regard to the Chalk River situation and to the veterans who served there and who were subjected to radiation activity, the minister has met with them on a number of occasions. Agreement has now been reached with the Department of Health and Welfare that anyone affected by the radiation will be considered as being eligible for compensation. At the last meeting with those who were involved in the Chalk River episode, they appeared to be completely satisfied with the action that has been taken. We are hoping that this matter will be resolved to their benefit.

Concerning the interest rate on bonds, that is something that we must keep pressing for. The interest allowed a war veterans allowance recipient is exempt and is not charged against the maximum allowable.

As Senator Bonnell pointed out, the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs will now be able to consider such matters. We can call witnesses and hopefully we can press these matters continually until finally we will have a Veterans' Charter of which Canada can be proud. Honourable senators, I believe that covers most of the points raised.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Marshall, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 20, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85, (No. 2)

MOTION TO INSTRUCT NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO REPORT—LEAVE GRANTED TO PROCEED TO MOTIONS
IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a point of order I should like to discuss with the Senate. The motion of which I gave notice yesterday calling for an instruction to the National Finance Committee to report Bill C-11 later this day is the last item on our order paper, in accordance with the Rules of the Senate. I would like to move, with leave, a motion that would alter the order of business and make that the first item of business so that we could deal with it right away.

The reason for doing so is that the matter may be one that requires considerable debate, and in view of the time constraints, which we are all familiar with in terms of the position of the government in this matter, it seems to me it would be advantageous were we to get this debate under way now so that we could test the opinion of the Senate with the least possible delay.

I point out that on a previous occasion the Honourable Senator Connolly moved such a motion when he had an item he wanted moved to the head of the order paper, and the Senate graciously acceded to that request.

So, I make a similar request and move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 19, that the Senate proceed immediately to Motions in order to debate the motion standing in my name without delay.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Before we deal with the request for leave, I wonder if the Leader of the Government would tell us precisely what precedent it is upon which he relies.

Senator Roblin: The precedent is recorded in Senate Debates for June 27, 1978, when Motion No. 3, standing in the name of the Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., was brought forward. That motion had to do with the appointment of a special committee with respect to the subject matter of Bill C-60, which was as important a matter as the one before us today. The Senate agreed to accept that motion at that time and did allow Senator Connolly to deal with the matter as the first item of business.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 19, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., that the Senate proceed immediately to Motions in order to debate the motion standing in the name of the Honourable Senator Roblin without delay.

Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I thank you for your consideration and move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be—

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think there is a misunderstanding. I gave leave that the Motion standing in the name of Senator Roblin be moved to the head of the order paper. I did not think that that would usurp Question Period.

Senator Roblin: The motion said "right away"; that is the way it was phrased, to enable me to speak now. I took it that that was understood by the Senate and received its approbation.

Senator MacEachen: No, honourable senators, it was not understood that way by me. It was I who gave leave for this side, and I think it would not incommode the honourable Leader of the Government to agree that his motion be called after Question Period.

Senator Roblin: I have no objection to that, honourable senators. That will mean that I will get it on inside of an hour and a half!

Senator MacEachen: Before that.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ESTIMATES

DATE OF TABLING

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I assure the Honourable Leader of the Government that I will not unduly protract Question Period, with the effect of delaying his statement on his motion. However, before we leave Question Period, I would like to return to the subject matter I raised yesterday and upon which I would like further comment from the Leader of the Government today.

He assured us yesterday that he would ask the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance when the main estimates are to be tabled. I should like to ask him: What is the result of that inquiry?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have launched the inquiry, or perhaps I should correct myself and say that I have inquired again.

I am having difficulty reaching the ministers, but I have been assured that I will be able to give that information before the Senate rises this afternoon, and I expect to do so.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for this slight progress.

Is it true that the main estimates were approved by cabinet for release last week, as reported today by the Globe and Mail?

Senator Roblin: I am afraid the report is not quite accurate. Cabinet did not meet on Thursday of last week so, obviously, it could not have dealt with the matter as the report stated.

I can tell my honourable friend what did happen. The special committee of cabinet that deals with orders in council passed the order authorizing those concerned to present the estimates to the Governor General for her approval when they were ready. They have not yet been presented to Her Excellency. They are not yet ready.

Senator MacEachen: When the Leader of the Government says that they are not yet ready, he intrigues me and suggests a further question. Is it not a fact that the blue book, as it is called, is totally printed, stacked and available for distribution?

Senator Roblin: If so, I am unaware of it.

Senator MacEachen: It is a key question because, if the approval had been given by the special committee of cabinet to present the estimates to Her Excellency, and if they are now printed, they could have been tabled in the House of Commons last week or, indeed, early this week, and this borrowing bill would be on its way to Royal Assent.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Ha, ha.

Senator MacEachen: I think the Leader of the Government has a responsibility to be more candid with his colleagues and tell us the actual facts.

Senator Flynn: Joker.

Senator Roblin: If "ifs" and "ands" were pots and pans, there'd be no need for tinkers. I have told my honourable friend he will get the information this afternoon. I ask him to be patient. He will receive it.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in this chamber. My question is: Is the foreign exchange situation now reflected in the Canadian dollar a world-wide phenomenon or one related to Canadian conditions?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is not a question I feel competent to answer in oral Question Period. I will take my friend's question as notice and give him an answer in due course.

Senator Sinclair: In view of the issues that are going to come before this chamber later this day, I feel it very important for honourable senators to know whether the government does view this as part of a world-wide phenomenon or a problem unique to this country. I believe that is very important.

● (1410)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Make up your own mind.

Senator Sinclair: I would urge the honourable senator to provide an answer or perhaps one of his colleagues—I recall that recently a colleague sitting close to him was regarded as being an expert—could assist him.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Might it be correct to say that one of the reasons the value of the Canadian dollar is dropping is because the authorities have paid a great deal of attention to the proposition put forward by Premier Lougheed at the recent First Ministers' Conference that the Canadian dollar should be related to a package of international currencies? If so, that would mean that it would be related to lower value currencies. Is this part of a new course to be adopted by the government, namely, to allow the Canadian dollar to seek a lower level?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, management of the Canadian dollar is undertaken by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and I know of no statement by the governor that could relate to my honourable friend's question.

Senator Argue: Is the Leader of the Government of the opinion that the policy is still on course to keep the dollar at a given level, or a relative level, in relation to the United States dollar, and is not in any way affected by the proposition put forward by Premier Lougheed, with a great deal of support from other ministers, at the recent conference?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend knows that it is quite unlikely that a minister would offer an opinion on a question like that. It is out of order.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85, (NO. 2)

MOTION TO INSTRUCT NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Leave having been given to proceed to Motions:

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of Tuesday, February 19, 1985, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to report Bill C-11, intituled: "An Act to provide borrowing authority", later this day.

He said: Honourable senators, I must confess that up to the present I had felt somewhat frustrated by the majority in this chamber, because I have endeavoured, on a number of occasions, to rise to address the question of the fate of Bill C-11. While I admit the undoubted right of members of the Senate to refuse me leave to speak on other occasions, I cannot disguise the fact that I am sorry that they did so, and I wonder whether it was really in the best interests of the nation that that should have been done.

I am conscious that the bill is one that is before the committee, and I want to base my remarks this afternoon on a wider structure. I am not so much interested in discussing what went on in committee as I am in discussing what has gone on in other places in this country, namely, in the House of Commons, in the public prints, and, indeed, with respect to statements that have been made by members of the opposition when they have discussed the question before us with the media—television, newspapers and in other ways. So I hope to examine this bill and to present my arguments on that broad basis.

I must, however, begin by saying that one of the reasons that brings me to my feet is certainly the fact that when the committee met last Monday it declined to set any time at which it would meet again. That struck me as remarkable. At the time, I said to the chairman and to the members of the committee that I hoped they would set a date for a further meeting, but that appeal went unheeded. Consequently, the position the government is in is one where the committee that is in charge of this matter has no plan to meet again. I am not aware of any proposed meeting of the steering committee to consider the future of this matter. If they have made decisions, such decisions have not been communicated to me. As far as I am concerned, the committee has been in limbo since it adjourned sine die. That certainly makes the situation doubly difficult, not only for the government but for the country.

At the risk of telling some senators what they have already heard many times, though it may be new to others, I feel it important to trace the origin of this bill in the House of Commons. I think we should recall that this bill was not examined lightly in the other place. Not only was it debated for some period of time, but it was amended. The sum included in Part II of the bill before us was reduced from $16 billion to $12 billion, which is a pretty good indication that it received serious consideration by the opposition and by the government. While this bill was in the House of Commons no questions, that I know of, were raised respecting its regularity. No questions were raised as to whether or not parliamentary procedures had been fully considered in dealing with the bill. No questions were raised as to the timing for the amounts of money that would be borrowed under the bill. None of the points which have exercised some with respect to the defects of the legislation apparently attracted the attention of the members of the Commons, either in the government or in the opposition.

The result was that they found the bill to be a good one—sufficiently good that when all the talking was over they decided to pass it unanimously, without dissent. We in this chamber received a borrowing bill from the House of Commons, approved by that chamber without any consideration of the question of the estimates, without any consideration of the question of parliamentary procedures or technical niceties with respect to its presentation, and without any concern about the fact that part of the bill was for one fiscal year and part for another. It was approved exactly as we find it today. If there were concerns, they were not sufficient to cause anyone to object on the final decision day in the House of Commons. We in the Senate received a bill which received the approval of the government after it agreed to amend it, which received the approval of the official opposition in the other place, as conveyed by their financial critic and by their house leader and, as far as we can tell, by their caucus; and the same thing can be said of the NDP.

The bill has received lengthy debate here and, as I have said, I have no intention of going into the proceedings that went on in the Senate. However, I will say one thing that is apparent from the public statements that have been made by representatives of the opposition, that all the issues that may have been concerning them have now been resolved into one, and that one is the question of timing. The opposition has agreed to give us the whole bill, nothing but the bill, and it has agreed to give it by a certain time. It has agreed to give it to us some few days after the estimates are presented in the House of Commons and in this chamber. While I intend to deal with some of the ancillary arguments raised in connection with this matter, I want to make it clear to this house that, as far as I can see, that is the issue today. It is not a question of whether we are going to pass the bill; it is a question of when we are going to pass the bill.

We have received the most explicit public assurances from the representatives of the official opposition in the Senate that this bill will be passed by this chamber and it will be passed by March 1 next. There is no question about that. It is a question of timing. It is, therefore, important that I not only examine some of the issues which are now in the public arena—in the newspapers and under discussion elsewhere—affecting the progress of this bill, but that I offer some reasons to the chamber as to why the government does not find it a reasonable proposition to wait until March 1 next, or some other date of that nature, and asks for the bill now. That is what I am going to try to do.

I want to explain why, in my opinion, a further delay would be not only unwise but indeed obstructive. The matter of principle upon which the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues have based their case for delay, with passage of the bill coming some time next week, is certainly one which could very well be questioned.

I have just received a note and I can now tell my honourable friend that the main estimates will be tabled on Tuesday, February 26 next. That is exactly three days later than the date upon which they were tabled last year. So, I do not think there should be too much complaint about the timing of this matter. It is obvious that the present government has been able to deal with this whole question as expeditiously as the predecessor government ever did, give or take three days.

The question of the tabling of the main estimates has become an important part of this whole discussion. Some of the leaders in this discussion, in their explanation of the Liberal position in the public press, have made it perfectly clear that, in their opinion, an important constitutional principle rides on this question of whether the main estimates should be in the possession of this chamber before it votes on Bill C-11. I should like to examine that issue with you for a moment or two.

The evidence that this is a well-established constitutional principle is, to say the least, not perfectly clear. In December 1977, as Senator Stewart will be aware, a borrowing bill—so described, let me add, by the legal advisers of the Crown—a borrowing bill was introduced authorizing the expenditure of $9 billion, part of which related to the first three quarters—not the first quarter, as is the case in the present bill, but the first three quarters—of the subsequent fiscal year, 1978-79.

I can tell those interested in this arcane historical research—which I must confess I did not find particularly fascinating—that in 1983 the then Minister of Finance repeatedly refused requests for full information on the government's fiscal projections. So, the question of whether or not this question of "estimates first; bill later" is as solid as some members would have us believe is certainly open to question. I do not regard it as ironclad. But let us suppose it is. Let us examine this thing for what it is. Let us try to understand what this "principle of procedure" really involves.

What do we get when we get the estimates? Well, what we get is the government's spending program—and that is very fine; but what we do not get is information respecting the income that the government will have to finance those expenditures.

To say that judgment on a borrowing bill depends upon the estimates, and that that is the principle upon which to stake our claim when the estimates tell you only half the story, is like a man trying to clap with one hand. You cannot get the information you need to make a rational decision on a borrowing bill by looking at the estimates alone. It is ridiculous, on the face of it.

But what happened in this case—because the information was available? Some members of the Senate did not wish to look at it, but it was available. The income and expenditure estimates were available on November 6, 1984. While there are fluctuations in financial situations over time, the structure on which to make a solid decision with respect to the figures in this borrowing bill was available then, and it was available in a far more meaningful form than will be available when the estimates are tabled in Parliament. Therefore, what we are being told is, "Substance does not matter to us, but we are interested in having one-half of the equation presented to us before we deal with this bill." I do not find that a convincing argument of principle, under all the circumstances. It is like a man with one hand trying to applaud a performer, and it just does not seem to me that it has a great deal of merit.

The real substance on which the decision should be based was given to the chamber and was given to the nation. It was there on November 8 with Mr. Wilson's statement, and all the argument in the world does not change that fact. It also does not change the fact that that statement told you something not only about spending but about receipts as well, and those surely supply the basic information one needs, rather than just one-half of this equation alone.

There was another reason advanced as to why we should have the estimates, and I will not attribute this to any particular senator, but if the gentleman concerned wishes to take credit for it, I will not object. One of the senators advised—and I think he did it publicly—that he wanted to see the estimates because it was good business practice, a sound business principle, and that he wanted to see those estimates before he would have anything to do with voting on this bill.

I, too, was a businessman once. I am not so sure that I was as good a one as the gentleman who made that statement. In fact, I rather think I was not, because he was a pretty good one. At any rate, I said to myself, "Just what does this statement mean? Let us follow this line of reasoning: I must see the estimates first. There are 400 pages. Never mind, I will riffle through them and, in the two or three days, I will pick out the salient facts, and, even though the estimates do not tell me anything about the revenues, I will look at the expenditures." Then comes the key question: So what? What are you going to do with them once you have them? We already know what the answer is: Nothing whatsoever, because there has been a clear statement—and this is available on the record—that the Liberal Party will vote for this bill, holus-bolus, warts and all, after the estimates are down, without change and without amendment.

It may be that, having one half of the page open and the other half closed, some members would like to write the report of the committee in a way that would reflect their displeasure with what is going on, and that may very well be the case. However, looking at the estimates will have nothing to do with the decision. I am not sure that I would like to walk into any boardroom in this country and say, "You have a proposition you want me to support? Give me a certain piece of paper; I will look at it and then, after I look at it, I will vote for your proposition anyway." I find that to be inconsistent with sound business principles. I would not like to advance that argument very far.

Senator MacEachen: You should confer with your colleagues in the government and find out why they advanced it.

Senator Roblin: I confer with my colleagues, in any case, and I also confer with my honourable friend. In fact, my honourable friend said the same thing. He said, "We are going to give them the bill, the whole bill and nothing but the bill; the only thing we want is the estimates." He also said that there is no linkage between the estimates and the passage of the bill. That is what he said; there is no linkage. I say to him that if there is no linkage between the estimates and the passage of this bill, what is all the fighting about?

Senator MacEachen: You missed an important word.

Senator Roblin: Very well, you give me the word.

Senator MacEachen: Go back to the committee proceedings.

Senator Roblin: You give me the word.

Senator MacEachen: You can get it for yourself. The rest of your research has been so deplorable, you should try to improve it.

Senator Roblin: If you want me to give it, then I will be glad to. It is right here.

Senator MacEachen: You cannot quote from the committee proceedings; remember the rules.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is saying I cannot quote him, that it is against the rules. In that case, I will not quote him, and I also think he will not quote himself either when he comes to make his speech.

Senator MacEachen: You missed an important word.

Senator Roblin: I probably did. I have to admit one thing about my honourable friend: he is a master of ambiguity. If there is any way in which two meanings can be read out of two or three simple words, my honourable friend is a master at making that arrangement. I have to admit, I know of no one in Parliament who has the record my honourable friend has for ambiguity. Someone said the other day that if you asked my honourable friend the time of day, and presuming it was somewhere around 5 o'clock, he would have to say, "Well, it is somewhere between 5 and 7, but that is as close as I can get." My honourable friend is a master of ambiguity, and I wait with some pleasure to hear his explanation of this concept of linkage—

Senator MacEachen: You will get it.

Senator Roblin: —which he has decided is not to be found within this matter.

Senator MacEachen: You will get it, sir.

● (1430)

Senator Roblin: We are going to have the whole bill and nothing but the bill—except for this constitutional principle on which people seem to place so much emphasis.

Senator Phillips: Except for Senator Stewart.

Senator Roblin: The opposition is going to vote for the bill regardless of the word "linkage"—and if you want to find some other word, find it; if you want to qualify it, qualify it. Regardless of the concept of linkage, regardless of the concept of constitutional etiquette, the opposition is going to vote for the bill once it sees the estimates. That, to my mind, is a very hollow position indeed. That is nothing less than a charade. I do not call that a principle; I call that an unprincipled principle. They are saying that they are going to hold to a principle and then do nothing about it when they have it. I suggest to my honourable friends that they should forget that line of thought and see how they can minimize the damage they have been doing to the country.

They say that this bill will be passed willy-nilly when the estimates are tabled. That was the offer made by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, and that is an offer that I, for one, intend to hold him to.

Here we are quarrelling about time. We want it now; they want to give it to us some time next week.

Senator MacEachen: You misinterpreted another part of the proceedings.

Senator Roblin: If I have misinterpreted, my honourable friend will have a great deal of pleasure in setting me right. If he is now telling me that he does not intend to pass the bill on the terms that I have mentioned, and that I am not allowed to quote what he said in the committee—and I am not—we will have to wait for a suitable time at which we can remind him of what he actually said. If I have misinterpreted him, he will take the first opportunity to set me right.

But let us forget about all this argument about procedure, who said what, who said this, who said that, whether I am right or whether he is right. I am not particularly interested in being right; I am more interested in getting on with business. If I have made a mistake during the course of my presentation, I apologize to all concerned, but that is not really what I am on my feet to talk about. I really want to ask this chamber: Who benefits by the course we are following? Forget about the parliamentary scruples of some, which I do not share; forget about the importance of the estimates, which I do not share: what good are we doing by the debate taking place today and by the course we are following? I do not think we are doing much good. In fact, I would like to bring some evidence to bear on that particular point, because I think it is well worth considering.

I will start with the Senate. Are we doing the Senate any good? Well, I do not know. That is a matter of opinion. I have some quotations, some of which are not very pleasant. I will give you one right now from the Financial Times, which states:

The nonsense now being played out suggests to us that the ringmaster must always bear in mind that, regardless of the plans for the circus performance, . . . the clowns are always somewhere in the tent—

That is not a very pleasant comment to be made about a body of this kind, and it gives me little pleasure to report that to you, but we ought to know what people are thinking about our activities in this chamber. That quotation can be found in the November 11 edition of the Financial Times. That article has a good deal more to say about the Senate, but honourable senators can read the article themselves.

In the Ottawa Citizen of the other day, the following appears:

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has urged Opposition Leader John Turner—

Senator Davey: I would like to have the date of that article again.

Senator Roblin: Which one?

Senator Davey: The first one.

Senator Roblin: That is dated February 11.

Senator Davey: You said November 11.

Senator Roblin: I apologize.

Senator Davey: And I apologize for interrupting.

Senator Roblin: To assist my honourable friend in his research, that is found on page 43, under the column headed "The capital market", and was written by Hugh Anderson.

In an article in the Ottawa Citizen of February 18, 1985, under the heading "Fun and games in the Gritbunker," the following appears:

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has urged Opposition Leader John Turner to bring the Senate Liberals into line, warning that delay could force the government to borrow at higher interest and push up the deficit. Frith—

I am sorry that he is not here because I do not like quoting him or using his name in his absence, but he is somewhere else.

Senator Guay: How about that!

Senator Roblin: I am sorry I cannot restrict myself from giving the facts just because the Honourable Senator Frith decided to go to Florida instead of staying here.

Senator Argue: He went with Mulroney.

Senator Roblin: The difference is that the Senate is sitting and the House of Commons is not. One must admit that that is a difference. That article goes on to state:

Frith answered for Turner—

That is an interesting phrase; we had better ask Keith Spicer about that.

—and refused to budge. He called the Prime Minister "hysterical" and denied Turner is taking orders from the Senate.

But, before this case, Turner had been on the side of the supremacy of the elected House of Commons, affirming that view on the Commons floor. Unless he takes a firm line with his senators, Turner will indeed look like their captive.

I make no comment on that; that is an internal problem for the Liberal Party, not for me.

Senator Haidasz: Tell us what you think.

Senator Roblin: I have told you what I think, but it will do you good to listen again. I am telling you what I think.

Senator Haidasz: You are taking—

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend finds my conversation a little tiresome, he can withdraw. That will not hurt my feelings at all. He can go.

In the Gazette of February 20, 1985, the following appears:

Walking in on the Senate finance committee is like stepping into a time warp where last year's federal election never took place.

There is Allan MacEachen, former deputy-prime-minister-cum-chief-parliamentary-fixer to Pierre Trudeau orchestrating the proceedings with the backing of a dutiful Liberal majority.

I would like to say to those interested that the Honourable Senator Pierre De Bané, the Honourable Senator Romeo LeBlanc, the Honourable Senator Keith Davey, and the Honourable Senator Michael Pitfield are given honourable mention in the article. That can be found under the byline of Hubert Bauch of the Gazette. He goes on to state:

The standoff has not only brought the Senate to the forefront of partisan manoeuvring in Ottawa after years of being dismissed as an inconsequential backwater of the parliamentary process, but it is already raising questions about the continued existence of the Senate as we know it.

In the Telegraph Journal of February 15—and these are only a sample of the clippings that I have accumulated—we find the following:

If the authority to borrow almost $20 billion is denied much longer, a serious effect could be to push up interest rates.

I know that Senator Sinclair does not agree with that, but many others do.

Senator Sinclair: Who?

Senator Roblin: The article goes on to state:

But if interest rates, and thus mortgage and loan costs, are nudged upwards anymore than they already are because of the Liberal tactic, the ordinary taxpayer is going to sit up and take annoyed notice.

The article goes on to state:

So interest rates may go up and the Canadian dollar may go down—all because Liberal senators have decided to thwart the will of the House of Commons on what could not really be considered a critical issue.

That is only another editorial, and honourable senators may pay no attention to it if that is the way they feel, but I want to tell honourable senators that, in my opinion, the Senate is not profiting from this exchange. I do not think the parliamentary system is profiting either, because it is perfectly clear that the Liberal Party in the House of Commons does not share the concerns that some Liberal senators have. The Liberal Party in the House of Commons was apparently unaware of the parliamentary tradition of estimates that was eloquently expressed by Senator Stewart. In fact, I do not believe he even mentioned that to them. So, that indicates some idea of the seriousness of his concern in the matter when he did not take it up with the people who are really able to do something about it, namely, the members of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons.

I do not think that this will do the parliamentary process any good, but what about the public interest? I think that the public interest is, indeed, the main point to which we must direct our attention. I think it is perfectly clear from the public statements made by the Minister of Finance that because he has been hindered by the lack of authority in this bill he has had to reduce his borrowings in the public market to the tune of some several hundred millions of dollars, and much more. Had he been able to use the authority to borrow, as he would have liked to have done, he would have paid a certain interest rate, but he was unable to do that so he had to give up borrowing certain sums of money, but the consequences are that he has to borrow at a later date. Yesterday the loss was $1,850,000. I have been informed that changes in the interest rate in the last short period of time have raised that loss substantially, to about $3 million.

Some may say that he has not borrowed it yet, and when he comes to borrow it he may find that he is all right. I certainly hope that that is the case, but if anyone here is bold enough to say that that is going to be the case, if anyone here is bold enough to say that that is a risk that a prudent Senate ought to tolerate, then I think that that is going a little too far. I do not think that that is the right thing to do. I think there is little doubt that a very real cost will accrue to the taxpayers of Canada. If you read the press reports by the members of the media outside this chamber right now, you will find that that is their general opinion as well. Of course, people have opposing points of view. Speaking for the country, I hope they are right; speaking from experience, I rather think they may not be right, and it will turn out to be the way I have said.

There is another very serious problem, and it has been alluded to already in this chamber today. It has to do with the situation facing the Canadian dollar. Honourable senators, I would read from a statement by the Minister of Finance made before our committee and publicly. On this point he said:

—let me express to honourable senators my concern about international financial conditions. The United States dollar has experienced a period of unprecedented strength. The Canadian dollar cannot be isolated from that. It has fallen about three-quarters of a cent in recent weeks. The Bank of Canada has provided support in the market to moderate that decline. This has reduced our foreign exchange reserves. Any further Bank of Canada intervention may well necessitate external borrowing by the federal government.

The international situation is quiet today. Some stability has returned to the marketplace, but this can change on short notice. None of us can say what will happen this week or next.

In my judgment, it would be irresponsible for honourable senators to delay action on this bill any longer—

[Senator Roblin.]

Let us consider what happened after that statement. Yesterday, the rate of the Canadian dollar sank to its lowest level in history. I believe it closed at 74.10 cents, or somewhere in that neighbourhood.

Senator Argue: The price of wheat went up.

Senator Roblin: Thank God something good happened. I am not going to give my honourable friend credit for that.

Senator Argue: Give the credit to Premier Lougheed or Mr. Mulroney.

Senator Roblin: As a result, much sooner than I think the minister expected, he was called on by the bank for more money. He had to find $500 million to help the Bank of Canada in its effort to support the Canadian dollar. To do so, he had to have recourse to section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. It is the opinion of those who manage public finances that recourse to section 39 has only one effect, and that is it makes the price of money higher than it otherwise would be.

Today we have a similar situation. Earlier this morning, the price of the Canadian dollar was 73.99 cents—the lowest in history. It has recovered a little.

Senator Haidasz: Whose fault is that?

Senator Roblin: It certainly has nothing to do with anything the government has done.

Senator Haidasz: It certainly has nothing to do with the Senate study of Bill C-11.

Senator Roblin: It has a lot to do with the financial administration of this country.

Senator Haidasz: The mismanagement of the government.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend will hear my point in just a moment if he will be quiet long enough.

One of the pressures on the Canadian dollar is the financial management of our country for the last 20 years. The senator sitting opposite has something to say about that because he was party to those arrangements. The present government has been in office for a short period of time and it certainly is not going to reverse those trends in any great hurry. The American dollar is the deciding factor which we have to take into account.

If the Canadian dollar keeps on sliding—and the evidence of the last two days is very discouraging—the Bank of Canada will need more money, and the government does not have the power to give it. It has to revert to section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, which is not the preferred route and which has hazards in respect of the cost of money which have to be faced. That is the fact of the situation.

There is another answer, though. If the Bank of Canada does not have the financial resources it feels it needs, it can raise interest rates. That is what I would like my honourable friend, Senator Haidasz, to think about: It can raise the interest rates. I am not predicting that will happen. I sincerely hope that it does not happen. I sincerely hope the government does not need another five-cent piece to support the Canadian dollar, but how can I know? I cannot know. The situation right now is one that requires our attention.

If things go sour in the next few days, we will have a responsibility for part of it. I say to my honourable friends: Why not put all this contention aside? If my honourable friends want to use my next argument, I commend it to them. Why not say that the Canadian dollar is in a situation which was not before us when we started to talk about this several weeks ago; it is a new factor; it is an urgent factor and justifies our changing our minds? It justifies our saying we don't give up our principles. We are going to write a report to lambaste the government for what we do not think is right, but we are not going to delay the bill until sometime next week; we are going to give it to them now. We think, in the interests of the nation, that is what we ought to do.

I beseech my honourable friends to think about that. This is the chamber of sober second thought. No one will fault us if we change our minds. No one will fault us if we say, yes, there is a difficult situation and we are not going to let some principle, to which not everyone subscribes, stand in the way of action. We are going to say that we will change our minds and do what the circumstances require. We will do what senators ought to do. We will take sober second thought. We will pass this bill, though some may say we sleep with the government, but at least we will let them have the money. That is my plea.

Honourable senators, I say to you sincerely and with a great deal of trepidation: There is no man and there is no woman in this chamber who is truly representative in the parliamentary sense, in a way that our colleagues in the House of Commons represent the people. Think about that for a minute. I also say there is not a man or a woman in this chamber who is truly responsible, in the democratic sense, as are our colleagues in the House of Commons.

If one were to ask whom the members of this house represent; if one were to ask to whom these men and women are responsible, it would be a difficult question to answer except to say "to themselves," because we are not representative in the parliamentary sense. We are not responsible in the democratic sense. We are responsible to our conscience. That is what we are responsible to.

I appeal to honourable senators to consider that fact; to reflect on their duty; to engage in sober second thought; to support the government in this measure; to put aside their past difficulties with this bill; to recognize a difficult financial situation; and to act accordingly.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Haidasz: May I ask the Leader of the Government a question? He has dragged into this debate the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Is it his opinion or suggestion that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance should hear from him as to the relationship between Bill C-11, interest rates in Canada and the falling dollar?

Senator Roblin: If the committee decides to meet again, it can decide its own procedures.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): That is ambiguous, I guess.

Honourable senators—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen:—I want to begin by saying that the problem we are facing today is just one piece in an overall problem, and that overall problem is the inability of the government to get its act together and to speak and act coherently. I think the spirited address of the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate illustrates how incoherent the performance of the government has been.

How surprising it is that, having asked on February 7 for the date of the main estimates, we are given that information through a note passed to the leader after he has begun his speech. How surprising that, having told the Leader of the Government that the passage of this bill could be facilitated and accelerated by the tabling of the main estimates, he was so negligent not to make an inquiry and give us some advance notice as to when those estimates would be tabled. We have been given this information today by virtue of a note from a messenger, which we hope is from an authoritative source such as the President of the Treasury Board or the Minister of Finance. The estimates will be tabled on Tuesday next, and that is an aspect of our debate that we will likely pursue further, because if the government is so desperately eager to have this borrowing bill at the earliest possible moment, then it can accelerate that moment by the tabling of the estimates on Monday.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Why not here, today?

Senator MacEachen: I would say further that if the government is so cognizant of, and the Minister of Finance is so alarmed about, alleged additional costs to the taxpayers, then that too could have been avoided by tabling the main estimates this week in the House of Commons. In that case, we could have had them before us here and the bill could be passed and given Royal Assent within the time schedule mentioned by the Leader of the Government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: What is evident is that there is really no political management of the relationship of the estimates to the legislative program. I do not wish to be overly political—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator MacEachen:—but one cannot but be tempted by the highly partisan nature of the Leader of the Government's speech when he not only resorted to his own mouth but to the mouths of the deepest critics of the Liberal Party to support his contention.

We know that we have had very little legislation to deal with. We have received a couple of pieces this week, but for the past three weeks we have had nothing before us in this chamber. Why is that? Because the government has no legislative program, either here or in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: That is the question. I do not find the plea of the Leader of the Government very impressive on the alleged delay in dealing with this bill, when I look at the guidance which the government itself has given to its passage.

We were in the midst of hearing testimony from the Minister of State for Finance and questions were still being asked by members of the committee when a motion was made to report the bill without amendment. That motion was defeated. The government then suggested that we adjourn for further reflection, until the country could find out what was going on. We lost eight days, honourable senators—

Senator Roblin: You had the majority.

Senator MacEachen: We lost eight days. The adjournment was sought by the government, and the meeting was adjourned by the deputy chairman. That is the reality. Eight days were lost and urgency is pleaded today. Then, last Thursday, when the committee was seized of the bill, and when the House of Commons would have been sitting on the Thursday and Friday, the Leader of the Government said, "Let us hear the Minister of Finance next Monday." I cannot make any sense of that proposal. He must have known that the House of Commons was to adjourn and that it would not sit this week, that even if the members of the committee were totally convinced by the minister's evidence, Royal Assent could not be given this bill until Monday next.

Don't talk to me about bringing back the House of Commons and attempting to influence the Speaker that the public interest requires the recall of the House of Commons. What is required is the political interest of the Conservative Party to get itself off the hook upon which it is now hanging because of its bad political management.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: I must say that I have heard a lot, but I have never heard such a profession of innocence on the part of the Leader of the Government when he says, "Well, the committee is in limbo." Why is it not meeting? The Leader of the Government is a member of that committee, and at the present time one of his colleagues over there is the acting chairman of the committee. Did they seek to have a meeting? Did anyone oppose a meeting?

Senator Roblin: Yes, you did. I tried to get you to agree to a meeting, but you would not do so.

Senator MacEachen: The meeting was adjourned to the call of the Chair, and it could have been called by the Chair with the consent of the steering committee. But the steering committee was not brought together to activate the committee. I do not know whether the acting chairman tried to have a meeting of the steering committee. But to say now that the committee is in limbo is a profession of innocence that is so unconvincing as to give further evidence to my statement that this government really does not know what it wants, and, if it does know what it wants, it does not know how to get it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator MacEachen: Characteristic of this attitude is the refusal of the government to accept reasonable proposals, a refusal to listen to the suggestions that we have been making. The Leader of the Government has accused us of a confrontational approach. I disagree with that, because a month ago we were prepared to pass the borrowing requirements for this fiscal year in the amount of $7.3 billion. A month ago the Minister of Finance could have had his $7.3 billion. That was made clear and that would have been accepted. It is not exactly a novel departure, because time and time again Parliament has insisted that these borrowing bills be split.

Senator Flynn: The House, not the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: I said "Parliament".

Senator Flynn: I said "the House".

Senator MacEachen: I am speaking now. When you have the floor, you can speak. But don't speak from your seat. You are not an architectural beauty. Let me tell you that. Parliament has frequently insisted upon the splitting of these bills, and don't, honourable senators, let the government say that this delay is costing the taxpayers money. If it is costing the taxpayers money, it is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance and the government—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: —because they could have had the $7.3 billion four weeks ago. Don't talk to me either about the difficulties in the exchange market and relate them to this bill, because, of the $7.3 billion that the government asked for for this fiscal year, according to the evidence of the minister of state before the committee, $2 billion was intended to deal with unpredictable fluctuations in the foreign exchange markets. So had the government taken the $7.3 billion today, it would have been unnecessary to use the Financial Administration Act, because that $2 billion explicitly requested would be there for that purpose.

So I find that we have made a reasonable proposal. It was turned down by the government, or not accepted, because really it was never explained why it could not be accepted. We also said, regarding the $12 billion for the next fiscal year, "You will have it well before the effective date upon which you can borrow the money sought in the next fiscal year."

That was the proposal that we made, not in the spirit of confrontation but in the spirit of meeting, at one and the same time, the requirements of the government, the undoubtedly justified requirements to borrow, and preserving parliamentary principle; and that solution would have achieved both objectives.

I made another proposal, because the Minister of Finance had pleaded for certainty. He said to us, "Give me certainty on Monday next by passing the bill this week, and give me certainty by having royal assent next Monday". I said that we could not give certainty by Monday but that we could give certainty for next week, no later than Wednesday or Thursday.

Senator Flynn: Without any conditions?

Senator MacEachen: I thought the Minister of Finance was interested in the proposal when it was put before the committee. I think one or two of the colleagues of the honourable Leader of the Government were interested, but the Leader of the Government said, "No, I will stick to my guns." "Guns," he said—the gunslinger! When he said that he would stick to his guns, I thought it was reasonable enough for us to stick to our principles, and that is what we are doing.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: I am putting on record the fact that we did make a proposal, not a novel one because it has been frequently resorted to by Parliament in the past—

Senator Flynn: Not by the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: —to fully accommodate the requirements of the government and the requirements of parliamentary principle.

While I mention parliamentary principle, I want to deal with another point that has become one of the false issues of this debate. That is that what we are doing is thwarting the will of the House of Commons. In a letter from the Prime Minister to the Leader of the Opposition, which was made public, the following series of sentences were laid out. After having referred to financial markets and the alleged cost to the taxpayers, the Prime Minister said, "Let me return to my principle point, the Senate, a non-elected body, is thwarting the will of the House of Commons."

Senator Haidasz: Not so.

Senator MacEachen: Here is Bill C-11 as it came from the House of Commons, and it will go out of the Senate in exactly the same form.

Senator Roblin: I hope so.

Senator MacEachen: That is not thwarting the will of the House of Commons, because the decision taken by the Senate, at least our side, will be identical to the will expressed by the House of Commons. In the next sentence the Prime Minister said, "This bill was not forced through the house by the use of our majority." That is right. The Liberal opposition and the NDP opposition did not bring the government to its knees by forcing it to use closure or time allocation, as was a regular tactic of the Conservative opposition. However, I pass that off as just an unpleasant memory. But the government comes on to say, "it passed, following an all-party agreement that had passed the scrutiny and approval of your caucus." What was the all-party agreement, what were the elements of it and who were the parties to the all-party agreement? It does not take much to find that out because it is recorded in a house order which can be found in Hansard of December 21, 1984, and it prescribes the conditions under which Bill C-11 would pass the House of Commons. I do not think it is important to relate the items in that agreement because they are quite technical, but it did provide a way of dealing with second reading, the committee stage, the report stage and when the bill would be passed.

I have searched through this all-party agreement, which became a house order, for any mention of the Senate or for any mention, commitment or expectation that the Senate would deal with the bill at any particular time and in any particular circumstance. The Senate was not part of that all-party agreement as inscribed in the record of the House of Commons. So let us drop that argument. Surely, the Leader of the Government in the Senate would not go as far as to say that every single thing that is done in the House of Commons is binding on the Senate. Even if he said that, the house order does not say when we should pass the bill, whether it be January, February or March.

Senator Roblin: Of course, I never said that.

Senator MacEachen: They were totally uninterested in the house order.

There is another surprising political comment that has been made; namely, that we are somehow taking an attitude that is not consistent with the views of our Liberal colleagues in the House of Commons. The Leader of the Government in the Senate surprised me in saying that the Liberals in the House of Commons did not express any concern about the matters which have agitated the members of the Senate on this side. That is false.

Senator Roblin: That is not what I said.

Senator MacEachen: Then, I shall put it positively and say that the views which we are putting forward are fully consistent with the views of our Liberal friends in the House of Commons. Let me quote from an amendment which was moved by the Honourable Don Johnston on November 28. He proposed as follows:

this House will not proceed with a Bill to provide borrowing authority for a fiscal year for which the Government has not provided complete details of spending requirements or revenue projections.

That is what we have been saying.

Senator Flynn: You did it!

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Johnston's motion was ruled out of order.

Senator Haidasz: Shame!

Senator MacEachen: Subsequently Mr. Riis, a member of the NDP, moved a motion which said:

that this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-11—

So both opposition parties held to principle. We are doing exactly the same thing, expressing a concern that was expressed by our colleagues in opposition in the House of Commons. May I say that it is fully in accord with the position taken consistently by members of the Conservative Party when they were in opposition, fully consistent because they demanded that this principle be observed, and fought fiercely to uphold it.

Senator Roblin: What did you do?

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government asks what we did. In almost every case the government yielded to the demands of the opposition, which were much more rigorous than any demand that is being made upon this government by the members of the opposition. Of course, governments will ask, but is it not the responsibility of Parliament to refuse until the government comes to its senses? We still hope that this government will come to its senses in its denial of parliamentary principle and uphold the views which its Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of Finance, Minister of Employment and Immigration, Minister of Indian Affairs, and Minister of Energy upheld and fiercely battled for in the House of Commons.

● (1510)

We heard the Minister of Finance debate this question on television last evening. During that debate he implied that principle was not of paramount importance.

Let me quote the remarks of the current Minister of Finance, as reported in Hansard of July 20, 1982:

There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year.

These are the words of the current Minister of Finance, the Honourable Mr. Wilson. Again:

There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year.

Senator Haidasz: That is a flip-flop.

Senator MacEachen: I am amazed that the Leader of the Government in the Senate should ask us to abandon parliamentary principle. I am amazed that he has forgotten what has been said by colleagues of his today when they were dealing with these issues, not in the ancient past, but just a year, or two, or three ago.

Mr. Epp said, on the same question:

This government is asking for an additional $17 billion, but we are not to ask any questions as to how they are going to spend it. It is not our right to know.

Those are the words of Mr. Epp, accusing the government of the day.

And Mr. Harvie Andre, a distinguished minister, a westerner—perhaps also a gunslinger—said:

We are not told what the money is required for, what government expenditures are going to be next year, what anticipated revenues will be next year, what rates will be, and whether there will be increases or decreases in taxes. We are told nothing.

We are making a minimum demand, a demand much less rigorous than that made by Mr. Andre. His views were re-echoed by the present Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Mr. Nielsen, who said:

[Senator MacEachen.]

We want the minister to follow the practice of previous ministers back to Confederation. We want him to outline his cash requirements in a budget for that period, clearly outlining the state of the economy, the government's fiscal/monetary position, the measures it contemplates taking to restore confidence and put Canadians back to work.

Let me also quote the words of the present Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable Miss MacDonald, who said:

The government refuses to provide the answers for the most fundamental of parliamentary procedures, the most basic issue with which we are ever asked to deal, concerning what the Government will do with the money which it is requesting authority from Parliament to borrow.

And we want to know, in the words of Miss MacDonald on February 28, 1983, what the government will do with the money which it is requesting authority from Parliament to borrow. That is why we want the spending program tabled before approving this borrowing bill.

I do not intend to go through all of the precedents. Let me just say that I view with amazement that members of the present government are prepared to abandon the principles for which they fought and had adopted when they were sitting in opposition. They are now turning a deaf ear to the pleas of an opposition that these principles be upheld.

Senator Haidasz: That is a hypocrisy.

Senator Phillips: You should know; you are an expert.

Senator Haidasz: That is pure hypocrisy. What a circus!

Senator MacEachen: To illustrate how deeply felt these principles were by the members of the opposition of that day, let me refer to an incident which occurred when the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, came to Parliament for borrowing authority. Similar questions were put forward at the time. The minister brought before Parliament a borrowing bill authorizing borrowing for the then current fiscal year and for the subsequent fiscal year. At that time the opposition took the position that, even for the current fiscal year, Mr. Lalonde would not get his money. They held him off until the end of March—the moment that the present Minister of State for Finance described as “high noon.”

Mr. Lalonde had used up all of his borrowing authority, totally. The opposition was unsympathetic, impervious to the pleas made by the government, as they were made today. “Forgive us our sins,” the Leader of the Government was saying, “because it may affect the markets or it may affect interest rates.”

The opposition was impervious to those demands when they were made by Mr. Lalonde. They forced him to use the Financial Administration Act—not once, not twice, but three times in March of 1983, for a total amount of $1.8 billion. Each time he went to the market, he had to get treasury bills in the amount of $600 million.

We heard the Minister of Finance tell us at the committee on Monday how pivotal the role of treasury bill rate setting is on the financial markets. Well, where were those thoughts in March of 1983 when Mr. Lalonde was forced to the market three times to borrow treasury bills in the amount of $1.8 billion?

And why did the opposition take that view? Because they felt, obviously, that parliamentary principle was important. They were ready to push the minister to the wall, not once, not twice, but three times, in the amount of $1.8 billion.

Senator Haidasz: Shame!

Senator MacEachen: So, let us bear that in mind, and let us bear in mind, also, that we are not taking that course. We have not done that to the current Minister of Finance. We have offered an alternative. Mr. Lalonde was not offered an alternative. A month ago we offered to approve a borrowing of $7.3 billion, a borrowing that would have financed all of the foreign exchange operations and domestic borrowing needs of the current Minister of Finance. That offer has been on the table for a month. But Mr. Lalonde had no alternative. He had to do that dreadful thing for which the Leader of the Government wept so copiously, saying: "This is unthinkable. Why are they doing this? The nation is falling apart. Look at the costs."

Well, I say, perhaps like the opposition of a former day, that while there may be costs—and I do not admit that they are—there are certain principles that have to be met. We have offered a way to eliminate the costs and preserve the principle, and it has been turned down.

● (1520)

Honourable senators, I want to conclude by making one more point and that is to say that the big argument being made is that there is an alleged additional $2 million in borrowing cost because of the Liberal Senate. I reject that. The responsibility for any additional cost is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance. He is the man responsible for the finances of Canada; he has an obligation to reduce the costs, and he did not do it. He could have avoided those costs by being reasonable and accepting the reasonable position that was taken by the members of this opposition.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, what we are seeing today, and what we have seen for some weeks now, in this chamber and in the committee, is the long arm of the former Minister of Finance reaching back from his political tomb—

Senator Haidasz: He is only five foot nine—

Senator Roblin: We call him Lazarus.

Senator Murray: —to create mischief and to introduce more chaos and havoc into the nation's finances. Surely the honourable gentleman did enough damage to the national economy and to the nation's finances during his ill-starred tenure in the Department of Finance a couple of years ago.

The honourable senators we saw coming into the meeting of the National Finance Committee these past few weeks are not the honourable senators we have been accustomed to working with in that committee for the past four or five years. What we saw coming into that committee was a hit team under the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition; a hit team inspired by frustration, bitterness and vengeance. Nothing could be clearer than that the inspiration is one of vengeance, and that the object is to get even; nothing could be clearer from the speech we just heard from the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

What we saw in the committee are the remnants of the Trudeau machine, that government that Mr. Turner so pithily described as being without money, without organization and without policy. With no money, no organization and no policy, they have set themselves to the destructive work of creating mischief and of thwarting the will of the elected House of Commons. That is what they are up to.

I must say that I find it extraordinary to hear accusations of lack of coherence coming from one who, when he was the Minister of Finance, saw two of his colleagues in the cabinet joining with 10 or 12 other Liberal members from the Montreal area to dissociate themselves from his budget and a third minister of the crown, Mr. Kaplan—

Senator Haidasz: What has that got to do with Bill C-11?

Senator Murray: It has everything to do with accusations of lack of coherence directed at the present government.

An Hon. Senator: When was that?

Senator Murray: It was not too long ago. It was at the time of the honourable senator's 1981 budget that we heard the Honourable Robert Kaplan going public with his opinion that Allan MacEachen's budget was a political disaster. Talk about cabinet solidarity; talk about coherence; talk about—

An Hon. Senator: You looked pretty sad on television last night—

Senator Murray: Talk about—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, order.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, it may come as a surprise to some, but this is a serious discussion. Please conduct yourselves in that fashion.

Senator Murray: Talk about cabinet solidarity—

Senator Roblin: I have some duties as the leader of this house, and one of them is to maintain order.

Senator Murray: To hear accusations of lack of political management coming from one who, when he was Minister of Finance, in one fiscal year forecast a budgetary deficit of $10 billion that turned into a deficit of $24 billion. How is that for political management, economic management or financial management?

I was also astonished to hear the Honourable Leader of the Opposition once again trying to put some distance between himself and his counterparts in the other place in respect of the all-party agreement that was achieved in the other place on this bill. It is not the first time that he has tried to do that. On several occasions in committee and in this chamber, he has put the question: "What was this agreement? Who were the parties to it?" I find, in reading the current issue of Maclean's magazine, in an article with respect to the resuscitation of the Liberal party, the following quote:

Every day that the Commons is in session, House Leader Herb Gray and party whip Jean-Robert Gauthier and their assistants meet with MacEachen and Fairbairn and the five MPs who head the caucus working groups.

I cannot believe that the Honourable—

Senator MacEachen: Do you believe everything you read in that magazine? My authority is House of Commons Hansard.

Senator Murray: I am telling the Honourable Leader of the Opposition that I cannot believe that he was not a party to that deal. If he meets every day, he and Senator Fairbairn, with the house leader and the whip in the other place—

Senator MacEachen: If, if.

Senator Murray: Does he deny his influence? Does he deny his influence on his counterparts in the other place? Surely he is no stranger to this deal. In fact, hearing him today, I begin to think that this whole business was cooked up; the honourable members in the other place being encouraged to go ahead on the understanding that, in this place, Liberal senators would drag their feet and thwart the will expressed by the passage of the bill in the other place.

When I heard the Leader of the Opposition today talking about the costs, and casting doubt on the statements made by the Minister of Finance about the costs of further delay, my mind went back in time some 17 years to a parliamentary crisis in the winter of 1968. At that time, the government of the day, the Pearson government, had lost a vote in the House of Commons on a budget bill. That was a minority government, and a government that was not, at that time, in very good odour in the country.

There was a stand-off in Parliament; the House of Commons was paralysed; there were demands from the opposition, from the media and from large sections of the country that the government resign, or that Parliament be dissolved and an election called. At the same time, in the international money markets, there had been pressures on the Canadian dollar.

At that time, no less a personage than the Governor of the Bank of Canada was dispatched by the government of the day to see the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Stanfield. I must say that I was not present at the meeting between the governor and Mr. Stanfield. However, I will say that I thought it was rather unconscionable for the government of the day to send the Governor of the Bank of Canada on such an errand. In any event, there was no doubt about the purpose of the mission, which was to impress upon Mr. Stanfield the risk that would be run; the risk of further pressures on the Canadian dollar if there was further delay in dealing with the budget, and if there was a protracted parliamentary stand-off.

On Monday of this week, the Minister of Finance came before our committee. This was not a private briefing by the Governor of the Bank of Canada; no secret meetings. It was the Minister of Finance speaking on his responsibility as the minister, and he warned us of the increased costs to the taxpayer of compressing the money requirements of the government into a shorter time frame. At that time, he was in a position to document his case by reference to two current examples in which he told us that delays had cost the government and the taxpayer more money.

At the same time, the Minister of Finance went, I believe, as far as a minister of finance could go in public at this time to caution us, to warn us, to express his concern about the state of the international money markets and the vulnerability of the Canadian dollar. Those concerns were expressed and placed on the record by the Leader of the Government earlier in this debate.

Notwithstanding those warnings from the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the considered statement of the responsible minister in a parliamentary committee, notwithstanding his appeal—and it was an appeal—that we get on with our job and get this bill through, the Leader of the Opposition and other members of the committee, including Senator Sinclair, took it upon themselves to ignore or reject the judgment of the minister.

The Leader of the Opposition today said, "Don't talk to me about the increased costs; don't talk to me about the influence of delay on the exchange rate, you should have split the bill." He knows that if we split this bill we would have to send it back to the House of Commons, and to send it back to the House of Commons would mean a debate for who knows what duration, of who knows what quality, and on who knows what subject, but the debate probably would have centred very quickly not on the financial requirements of the government, but on reform of the Senate.

In any case, Senator MacEachen, at the committee meeting, told Mr. Wilson that he did not agree with his judgment. Senator Sinclair said, "It's just a matter of judgment." That is true, and it is true that Senator MacEachen has the right to disagree with the judgment of the minister, but it is still the minister's considered judgment that is important, and it is the minister's judgment, as the competent authority in this case, that further delay will cost the taxpayers money and render the Canadian dollar more vulnerable. That message came through loud and clear to me. Notwithstanding that appeal, honourable senators opposite have chosen to turn their backs on it.

Of course, they have been proven wrong already because yesterday, having said a day or so before that he could not predict what the needs would be immediately in view of the volatility of the world currency markets, the Minister of Finance had to use section 39 of the Financial Administration Act to increase the level of our international reserves by $500 million (U.S.). That is what he had to do. So, they have been proven wrong. The Minister of Finance points out in the press release that he issued that that will entail additional costs to the government's debt program, costs that will be borne by all Canadian taxpayers.

I say that in the face of the appeal made by the Minister of Finance to the committee, and in the face of the decision that he had to make yesterday, that for honourable senators to persist in dragging their feet on this bill, to persist in thwarting the will of the elected members of the House of Commons, borders on the irresponsible.

Honourable senators, I want to deal with this question of the main estimates, and in particular I intend to discuss the instance raised by Senator MacEachen in his concluding remarks. I will leave aside the ludicrousness of a position referred to by Senator Roblin in which the opposition is prepared to say "table the estimates and we will pass the bill no matter what is in the estimates."

The question of the main estimates and the connection of the main estimates to this borrowing bill is nothing but a red herring. There are three types of financial authority that Parliament gives to the government. There is spending authority, the approval of the estimates and appropriations bills. They go through Parliament in a process quite distinct from this one. Secondly, there is also the revenue raising authority which is granted to the government by means of a budget and the tax legislation that goes before the two houses of Parliament. Thirdly, there is the borrowing authority, which is, to oversimplify it, the difference between what is spent and what is raised by taxes. The borrowing authority is what this bill is all about.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to the precedents and to previous debates in which borrowing authority was held up because of a lack of adequate information for the fiscal year in respect of which the borrowing authority was being sought. But it was not the lack of main spending estimates that exercised the Leader of the Opposition in the other place and the members of the opposition in the other place at that time; it was the lack of information as to the size of the deficit, and a lack of an overall revenue and expenditure forecast.

I want now to refer to the situation with respect to Bill C-143, which the Leader of the Opposition referred to just before he concluded his remarks. Let me give the chronology. On February 17, 1983, Mr. Lalonde came to Parliament looking for borrowing authority of $14 billion for the next fiscal year. That is what he wanted. As I said, what exercised the opposition was not the lack of main estimates, because the main estimates came down fairly soon thereafter; it was the lack of fiscal projections for the year 1983-84. The last fiscal projections Parliament had had were Minister MacEachen's forecasts in his budget of November 1981. In his budget of November 1981, the minister of the day brought in forecasts up to 1985-86.

In June 1982, Minister MacEachen, as he then was, brought in a budget with fiscal projections for the current fiscal year, 1982-83, but no projections for the next fiscal year, 1983-84. Mr. Lalonde came to bat on October 27, 1982 with an economic statement. He provided the fiscal projections updated for 1982-83, but again refused to offer projections of the deficit and the revenue and the financial requirements for 1983-84, and then a few months later, as I said, on February 17, he came back to Parliament and said, "Give me borrowing authority of $14 billion for 1983-84".

If honourable senators read the debate that took place in the House of Commons at that time, and the debate that took place in the committee, they will see that what exercised the members of the opposition was not the lack of main spending estimates, because the estimates came down on February 22. That did not stop the argument for a moment.

Senator MacEachen: As I said, they were more vigorous than we are. You are proving my argument in that they were much more rigorous.

Senator Murray: No; I am saying that the spending estimates are irrelevant.

Senator MacEachen: You are saying that, but that is not what the current minister said.

Senator Roblin: Give him a chance.

Senator MacEachen: Yes, Speaker Roblin.

Senator Murray: I am saying that the spending estimates are irrelevant to the argument; I am saying that it was a failure of the previous government for 15 months to not provide revenue projections, spending forecasts and financial requirement projections for 1983-84 that caused that bill to be held up. That is why the government had to use time allocation on second reading, at the report stage and at third reading. That is why the government did not get Royal Assent for that bill until March 30.

On November 8 last, we received from Mr. Wilson, the Minister of Finance, his published projections as to revenues, as to expenditures, as to financial requirements, and those financial requirements—and the Leader of the Opposition should know them fairly well—are of the order of $29 billion for 1985-86. Surely, no one questions that the financial requirements of the government in that year are going to be of that order of magnitude. Surely, no one questions that $12 billion, which is what is being asked for now in respect of 1985-86, is but a down payment on the overall financial requirements. In any case, we have an undertaking given by the Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn, the government house leader in the other place, that in two weeks following presentation of a budget the government will be back with another borrowing authority bill to give honourable members of the other place and honourable senators an opportunity to have their say.

• (1540)

On November 8, the Minister of Finance brought in his projections as to expenditures, as to revenues and as to financial requirements. This was the information that was lacking in the case of Bill C-143 back in 1983, the case to which Senator MacEachen referred earlier. This was the information that was lacking, and that is why the opposition of that day held that bill up as they did, and properly so.

I want to put on the record, if I may, a statement made within the past few weeks at the committee by the Deputy Minister of Finance. He told the committee:

—you do have before you, with respect to the fiscal year 1985/86, all of the information that you would ordinarily have had there been a budget. Again, I repeat—

Senator Sinclair: Is it in order to read—

Senator Murray: Honourable senators do not want to hear this again because it destroys their argument.

Senator Sinclair: It does not destroy anything. I am just asking if it is in order to repeat verbatim the transcript of the proceedings.

Senator Flynn: It has been done from the beginning of this debate.

Senator Sinclair: It should be paraphrased and not read.

Senator Murray: If the honourable senator wants me to paraphrase what the deputy minister said, I will do so. I thank the honourable senator for his instruction. I will paraphrase.

Senator Sinclair: I have heard paraphrasing which is, in fact, verbatim before.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If any senator wishes to speak, he should stand up and be recognized by the Chair.

Senator Murray: I am sorry that honourable senators find this testimony from the Deputy Minister of Finance, whom they appointed, so uncongenial.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. This is the second time today that the His Honour has intervened in the proceedings. I suggest to you that honourable senators are in charge of their own house and do not require interventions from the Chair.

The practice of this august body is that we, the senators, are in charge. We address our peers. We do not address the Chair. The Chair does not intervene in our proceedings unless the Chair is asked to do so.

I would hope we could follow the traditions of this body.

Senator Roblin: In speaking to the point of order, may I say, if all senators conducted themselves with the decorum Senator McElman displays, we would not have a problem of this kind.

I do second his suggestion that senators should exercise reasonable self-restraint and gentility in their dealings with this chamber. Sometimes I myself may be guilty of an ill-advised word and, if I am, I apologize for it, but that is no excuse for anyone else.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, rule 15 states:

The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide points of order, subject to an appeal to the Senate. In explaining a point of order or practice the Speaker shall state the rule or authority applicable to the case. When the Speaker rises, all other senators shall remain seated or shall resume their seats.

Honourable senators, I was merely attempting to restore some civility in this honourable distinguished house.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator McElman: On a point of order, although I do not wish to upset the speaker—

Senator Murray: The honourable senator will not upset me; he will delay me.

Senator McElman: I do not intend to delay him at any length.

The point I have raised is one that is very clear within the traditions of this body. There are senators here who know of what I am speaking.

The honourable person occupying the Chair at the moment has intervened a second time without being asked to do so.

In order not to delay Senator Murray, since it is not my wish to do so, it will be my intention, at a later date, after discussion with others, to refer this matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders so that there will be a clear delineation of what the Speaker can and cannot do in this body. This is not the House of Commons. This is not a confrontational place in normal circumstances.

Senator Roblin: Hear, hear.

Senator McElman: The Speaker is not required, by tradition or otherwise, to act in this house as is required in the House of Commons.

I am sorry to have delayed Senator Murray.

Senator Murray: I thank the honourable senator.

Before the various interruptions, I was attempting to convey to honourable senators something of the testimony the committee heard from an expert witness whose objectivity can surely not be in any doubt, the Deputy Minister of Finance. He told us in committee that we had all the information that we would have had in respect of this borrowing bill had there been a budget in November last. He told us there was nothing more. He told us there was an economic forecast as current as it could have been at the time. He told us there are some measures, and the fiscal impact of those measures was reflected in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. He told us that the department had given us a view which indicated that there was not enough in those measures to alter the underlying economic view. The deputy minister told us we had the fiscal requirements flowing from that. He told us that although there was not a budget last November the pieces of information before us added up to all the information that we would have had had there been a budget last November. He went on to repeat that he was talking with respect to the year 1985-86, not with respect to the five-year plan. He told us that, in terms of the pieces of information that are before us, they are not significantly or profoundly different in any way, shape or form from what we would normally have.

That is the testimony of an experienced public servant, the Deputy Minister of Finance, appointed by the previous government. I think his testimony on that matter, while I cannot read it directly into the record, ought to be read in the verbatim transcript of the proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance for Thursday, January 31, 1985.

Honourable senators know that the "linkage," to use Senator MacEachen's term, between the estimates and this bill is tenuous at best. As I say, approval of the estimates is a matter that is the subject of quite a distinct process in both houses of Parliament. The estimates are brought down on or before March 1. When that happens, they will be divided up in the other place and sent to various standing committees of the House of Commons. The committees will examine them until May 31. They have the opportunity to call ministers of the Crown, and to examine each estimate in detail if they so wish. They can reduce any estimate that is before them.

Then there are interim supply bills and opposition days on which estimates can be brought forward and reduced. There are appropriations bills.

I find it rather puzzling that a procedural expert like Senator Stewart should say, as he said on numerous occasions, that the borrowing bill is the bottom line. I do not understand that. There are plenty of opportunities in the other place and here to call the government to account for its spending, for its taxing, and for its borrowing. We have three different procedures in respect of each of those exercises.

The estimates are tabled in the Senate. They go to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, and that committee is perfectly free to examine them as it wishes. We can call various ministers of the crown; we can go into a particular department in detail, as has been done on occasion. Typically, we call the President of the Treasury Board and have a general discussion of the estimates. Debate in this chamber tends to centre sometimes on supplementary estimates or on the appropriation bills.

It seems to me to be a complete red herring to suggest that the borrowing authority should not be granted until the spending estimates are down, especially when, as of November 8 last, we had before us an updated set of projections as to revenues, expenditures and financial requirements in the name of the Minister of Finance.

Finally, I wish to say a word about what this exercise is doing to the Senate, to the role of the Senate and the future of this chamber. While much criticism can be made of it, and some quite far-reaching reforms have been advocated by senators themselves, I believe the Senate has usually done useful work with respect to legislation, to policy, and to government spending and borrowing programs.

Senators are familiar with the device of pre-study, by which we have an opportunity to suggest to ministers and to the government amendments that should be made in the legislation before it comes to us officially and formally. Senators are also aware that from time to time we take it upon ourselves to pass a bill about which we have some doubt, or about which we have reservations as to the process or principles involved. We pass a bill and we attach a narrative or commentary stating what we consider to be the proper course, and telling the government that we consider that changes should be made to the procedure in the future.

All of these devices are used by the Senate precisely for the purpose of avoiding confrontation between this chamber and the elected house. These devices that have been used have been helpful and constructive; they have contributed to the legislative process, to policy development, and to the welfare of this country. But it seems to me that the conduct of Liberal Party senators on this bill indicates that in the present Parliament they have decided to take the path of confrontation. They have decided to abandon the path of moral suasion vis-a-vis the government and the House of Commons. They have opted instead for the confrontational approach. I say that if they think they are going to repeat this performance on future bills coming before this body, they are signing their own death warrant—

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

An Hon. Senator: And yours.

Senator Murray: And mine, but more important than that, the Senate, because I tell honourable senators that we have a Prime Minister and a government that has (a) an overwhelming mandate in the House of Commons; (b) overwhelming popular support still in the country, as evidenced by every poll that has been taken since the election—

Senator Roblin: You are in third place now.

Senator Murray: —and the people have had an opportunity to judge the conduct by the government of the nation's affairs; and (c) I suggest, on the basis of last week's meeting in Regina, that there is now a climate of federal-provincial relations that would enable the government, if it were faced with systematic obstruction by the Senate, to get whatever provincial consent is required to take whatever measure of reform, up to and including abolition, that it thought was necessary under the circumstances. I believe it is important for honourable senators to bear that in mind, particularly those honourable senators who value the work that this Senate and its committees have done over the years and who have themselves, in the past, made a useful contribution to that process.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have listened carefully to what honourable senators had to say. I do not intend to discuss the various procedures that have been followed in the past. Others know more about those procedures than I do, and I am sure they will draw them to the attention of honourable senators in due course. However, I wish to say that I am not at all interested in what happened between the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the leader in the other place in 1980. I know from experience that one cannot walk backwards into the future, no matter how hard one might try, and I was astounded, as I am sure were many others, to see an attempt made at saying "Let us look back and see what happened two or three weeks ago, and let us project that forward and see what would have happened under those circumstances".

Let us take a look at what I understand the parliamentary principle to be, the principle that we have been discussing.

Senator Flynn: I am very curious.

Senator Sinclair: I believe it is important to understand it from the modern viewpoint of business and money markets. I am not interested in confrontation. I am interested in getting a job done. No matter what anyone says, I did not come here with the idea that I was to rubberstamp everything that was sent here from the other place, irrespective of whether it is right or wrong; and, as long as I am here, I will continue to maintain that position.

The parliamentary principle to which I refer is that one does not permit tranches of anything involving total expenditures. One gives the whole picture. That is the principle. That is what I understand is meant by the main estimates. The main estimates are tabled. They set out the government's spending program. That is the only time, as I understand it, that the government's spending program is set out in the one place. As Senator Murray has said, they take a look at it in the house and send it forward to various committees as it is divided up. Quite so, and why not? But the point is that it has to be tabled first so that people can see it; otherwise—and here I will use the phrase of the Honourable Michael Wilson, who, at another time, said: "If that is not so, what you are asking for is a blank cheque. "That phrase is his, not mine, and that is why business does not give people blank cheques.

Borrowing authorities are very carefully considered. The Leader of the Government said something earlier about having only one side of the ledger. Of course that is so in government, because the government is sovereign. It has the full power of direct and indirect taxation. It can raise money, and, with its majority, it can raise money easily if it wishes by putting through bills and taxing in any way it so desires. It could have a value-added tax, even a flat tax; or it can increase taxation wherever it wishes, impose an import tax or an export tax and impose foreign exchange controls. It can do all kinds of things. So why, then, in accordance with business principles, do we look for the total government's spending? That is what I mean by good business practice. That "good business practice" requires us to have it, and if we do not have it, then, as the Honourable Michael Wilson has said, it amounts to a blank cheque.

Let us take a look at the money markets. The money markets have, for a considerable time, been volatile. But they are monitored, the information is available and judgments have to be made as to which way they will go, whether it be long-term, medium-term or short-term. Year after year the government goes short, open-ended, even so short that it sometimes constitutes billions of dollars in demand money. Why is it so horrendous to use 90-day money under a Governor General's warrant? Three-month money is certainly more stable than demand money. Why does the government have lines of credit to $4 billion U.S. if it is not going to use it? I see nothing wrong or horrendous about using these forms of borrowing in the way they have been used, if that is the proper thing to do.

I will not say whether it is right or wrong to borrow American money at this time and convert to support the dollar. However, I will say that it has not been effective. This approach has not been effective in this country, in the United Kingdom or in West Germany. I do not think that a bill of this kind has been introduced in the Australian Parliament. Yet, the Australian dollar hit an all-time low against the U.S. dollar yesterday. So did the deutschmark and the pound. Why did these currencies go way down?

The Minister of Finance cannot have it both ways. He constantly says that, "I am proud of what we have done in regard to the dollar." Let me give honourable senators a couple of percentages using the year-end close as compared to the February 21 close on the devaluation of certain currencies as against the U.S. dollar. The deutschmark is down five per cent; the pound, six per cent and the Canadian dollar, 2 per cent. These major currencies have devalued by two to three times more than the Canadian dollar. That is why I asked the question earlier today as to whether the foreign exchange markets were a world phenomenon or whether they were unique to our country. I did not get an answer, but I would have been very surprised if the answer was other than that it is part of a world phenomenon. The story is not the Canadian dollar. The story is the American dollar.

Senator Murray said something about the Deputy Minister of Finance. The Deputy Minister said that he could not say where the delay would cost money. Any person who is experienced in money matters would have to state that that was the position. You can only say "may." With all due respect to the Leader of the Government, I am not impressed when he says that we are going to experience some squeezing, that it will cost a premium. To make such a statement means that he is capable of saying just how many government securities the market can take. I do not think he has the experience or the knowledge to make such a statement. The Minister of Finance and his experts would not say such a thing.

We in business fight to preserve principles that result in the orderly handling of money affairs. That is why I support the parliamentary principle we stand upon. I have been called many things in my day. But I do not play crap any more, and "Guys and Dolls" is a wonderful show though I never made as much money as the character Big Julie. However, I want to thank the honourable senator for including me on a hit team. That is new for me. I think hit teams are generally successful and if that is what he meant, then I thank him for it. If we are successful, we have made a valiant stand against the intransigence of my friends on the other side for principles and for good business practice.

Senator MacEachen has indicated that if there is a loss it is blood on the head of the Minister of Finance because he did not take advantage of the $7 billion offered to him. I do not blame him for not taking advantage of it. He has the right not to take that advantage. He may have thought that he would rather have it later on. How do I know that he did not want to use Governor General's warrants? Just because he said so? I do not know. Why are they there? The minister would like flexibility. Everybody likes flexibility, but at the same time the people of this country have to get the signal that good business practices will be upheld.

Senator Flynn: CPR practices.

Senator Sinclair: They should also be made to feel that good business principles shall be retained, irrespective of grunts and groans from those on the other side.

There has been quite a bit of talk about a statement that was made back in November. I read that statement. I think everybody knows that there has been a lot of back-tracking from some of the basic principles set out in that statement. Who knows what further changes will be made? However, we are not dealing with November 7. We are dealing with February and with the situation that exists now. Senator MacEachen has very reasonably offered to the government a modus operandi which would give the opportunity of more flexible financing within a few days.

● (1610)

They turned their back on that. And why? I wonder why. Is it because they do not wish to say to the Senate: "Yes, you have a point; yes, we think we should accede to that; yes, it seems to be a reasonable proposition."

Are they of the view, as Senator Murray seemed to indicate, that this is a means by which we would test the resolve of the government? Of course not.

Senator Flynn: Of course you are.

Senator Sinclair: If we were going to test that, there are other ways of doing it at other times.

Senator Flynn: There are better ways, of course, but the best is not what you are doing now.

Senator Sinclair: You may think what you wish; that is your privilege. I hope you will recognize that I may also think as I wish.

Senator Flynn: Oh, sure.

Senator Sinclair: Thank you. I am wondering why there is such a reluctance to accept compromise. Why does the Minister of Finance insist that it be done his way and only his way, when there are alternative ways that have been brought to his attention?

Senator Flynn: It has been a long-standing practice.

Senator Sinclair: Senator Murray talked about the great Tory leaders having gathered, at great expense, on the wind-swept plains of western Canada a few days ago and the fact that they were all in lockstep together—

Senator Perrault: A love-in.

Senator Sinclair: —and would be prepared to march to the whistle of Brian Mulroney.

Senator Perrault: An Irish flute.

Senator Sinclair: An Irish flute. I say to Senator Murray that he is wrong.

If he plays that flute, as you have suggested, you will find out that, for one, he might have difficulty with the distinguished first minister of the second largest province of this land.

In any event, the Mulroney tune that he talked about will be tested. It will be tested in the province of Manitoba on the question of transfer payments; it will be tested in the province of Ontario on the question of free trade; it will be tested in the Province of Quebec in respect of many matters.

So, don't come here and suggest to honourable senators that unless they do what you say, they may not be here. That does not bother me at all.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: We knew that. That is not a revelation.

Senator Phillips: With your pension, it shouldn't.

Senator Flynn: If I were in your place, it wouldn't bother me either.

Senator Sinclair: I thought we were going to have civility and gentility and not confrontation.

You mustn't talk unless you stand up. You look better standing up. Why don't you stand up and I will sit down.

Senator Flynn: I will stand up. I have no objection—

Senator MacEachen: You look better sitting down.

Senator Flynn: Of course I do; but I wanted to give honourable senators a rest from Senator Sinclair by forcing him to sit for a few minutes. I see that a good many of them are on the verge of sleep.

Senator Sinclair: If they are going to fall asleep, that's fine.

The learned Leader of the Government made an impassioned speech and then rushed out of the chamber. I do not know whether he had another appointment, or whether he just got tired.

Senator Perrault: He went to get reinforcements.

Senator Sinclair: Whatever the reason, he is not now in the chamber. The Leader of the Government, in speaking to this matter at the outset this afternoon, said, according to my note, that it is a matter of timing; that that was the whole question. He was going to tell us why the government does not find it reasonable to wait until next week to get this bill passed.

I listened carefully as the Leader of the Government went through his harangue, and I heard no answer to that question. I may have missed it, but I do not believe he answered the question, a question posed by him, as to why the government does not find it reasonable to wait. He did not address it in his remarks.

He said that the Minister of Finance wants the bill to go forward. He said that the delay has affected interest rates and the foreign exchange situation. I think I have demonstrated quite conclusively that foreign exchange is not a factor in this. It is a red herring to bring foreign exchange into this debate.

Certainly the government used Governor General's warrants under the Financial Administration Act to draw down on its line of credit in American funds in support of the dollar through the Bank of Canada. Governments have done that before; they will do it again. There is nothing wrong with that. That is why it is there. But to say that a delay in the passage of Bill C-11 somehow impacts on the world's interlocked money markets is nonsense. It is absolute, utter balderdash.

Senator Murray: That is not what the minister says.

Senator Sinclair: It is a contention that was brought forward in an attempt to mislead, and for no other reason, in my judgment.

Honourable senators, we have a duty in the Senate to rely upon principle and to correct mistakes, however made. I think it is wise that we do so in a way that allows the government to save face in the matter. That is important. It seems to be important to the government, in any event.

This is why we are in session this week discussing this measure. I suggest that we even work in the evening so that we can take a good look at these estimates and the total program. We can try to accommodate the government by working long hours.

Senator Phillips: You are not going to pass this bill without looking at the estimates?

Senator Sinclair: I certainly hope that where there are departures from the estimates in the future, there will be explanations demanded. And they will change. Once we see the estimates and they are there in stone, we can refer to them and require explanations in the future as to any changes.

● (1620)

I urge honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: May I put a question to the honourable senator? Are you suggesting that we should delay the passage of this bill until the Senate or its committee has had an opportunity to look all through the estimates? Is that what you are suggesting?

Senator Sinclair: No. I am suggesting that, once the main estimates are tabled and in our hands, that we will expedite our look at those estimates. Then, as they proceed through the House of Commons, if those estimates are altered, explanations can be demanded—

Senator Flynn: But you said that you would pass the bill; that is what you said.

Senator Sinclair: Yes, we will pass the bill, as has been said, next week, after the estimates have been given to us and we have had an opportunity to look at them.

Senator Flynn: The Senate has always proceeded in that way. That is nothing new. Perhaps you do not understand how it works.

Senator Sinclair: I do not know whether I can quite hear what my honourable friend is saying, but if what I have just reiterated is what has always been done, then why are you not doing it this time?

In any event, I think that is the proper way to proceed. I am sorry that the Leader of the Government in the Senate feels that my questions to him from time to time are improper. I do hope that he understands that when a government produces the full spending program, it is not necessary to have the other side in order to make a decision. Thank you, honourable senators.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, since the beginning of the year I have been attempting to find some logic in the irresponsible and reprehensible action of the Liberal senators in dealing with Bill C-11. Unfortunately, their action has been devoid of logic, reason and conscience. They still continue in the old ways of placing the Liberal Party above the welfare of Canadian taxpayers.

Today, I thought we would get some reasonable explanation from the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. When that honourable gentleman was the Minister of Finance, and defending his budget, I thought he was pathetic; I thought he was even more pathetic when he was defending the Gillespie affair. Today, however, his actions are beyond description, except to say that they are worse than pathetic.

I tried to find some possible explanation for the behaviour of the Liberal Party in the Senate. In this morning's paper, I read an article describing their actions and I thought to myself, "That is the real problem there." The real problem is that Senator Davey has been manipulating and controlling the Liberal Party in the backroom for years. After the last leadership convention and the last election—

Senator Davey: I wonder if the senator would accept a question? It is merely for information. I would like to know to which publication he was referring to when he said "this morning's paper."

Senator Phillips: I believe it was the Gazette, but I will certainly send you a copy of the article. I am sure you will find it enlightening.

Senator Davey: Thank you.

Senator Phillips: Senator Davey then decided he did not like being just an ordinary Liberal; that it was not fair after some 20-odd years, so he decided to hijack the Liberal Party. Senator Davey thought he was hijacking a 747. Imagine his surprise, honourable senators, when he found out that he had hijacked a hot air balloon. It was not even a modern balloon; it was one of the original balloons from around 1880. Senator Davey had a bit of trouble keeping that balloon afloat, and, as everyone knows, when a balloon is having difficulty staying afloat, particularly in turbulent weather, you throw ballast overboard—

Senator Davey: More hot air; that is what keeps the balloon up in the air, senator, hot air.

Senator Phillips: I will come to your hot air in a moment. Take your time. Be patient.

The first piece of ballast to be thrown overboard was John Turner. They threw him out of the basket so quickly that he broke the sound barrier on the way down. Senator Davey then looked around for the next piece of baggage or ballast that could be disposed of and he settled on Herb Gray. They threw Herb Gray overboard and he broke the law of gravity on the way down.

Senator Davey then looked around at the rest of the people in the basket and decided he must keep a few of those, so he kept Senator MacEachen and Senator Frith to be a front for him.

Senator Davey looked around again, and decided, as he said, that he needed some hot air. He then picked Senator Sinclair for that purpose and, for a backup, he picked Senator Gigantès. Ever since, he has been attempting to keep the balloon up with the aid of those two senators.

A balloon, however, also requires ground crew. For that purpose, Senator Davey used Senators Kenny and Kirby for manipulating the ropes. There is another factor necessary that is known in the trade as dead or dumb weight and, for that purpose, he has been using the Senate.

There is another possibility and that is that Senator MacEachen looked at the present leadership and said, "I have lost my opportunity. The present Leader of the Liberal Party must go." Senator MacEachen remembers his efforts to obtain the Liberal leadership and has come to the conclusion that it is unfair that he never became Liberal leader.

Senator Davey: I wonder, senator, whether all of this information is in the Montreal Gazette, or are you making it up? I would just like to know which?

Senator Phillips: No, I am just reminding honourable senators of the background to this opposition.

Senator Davey: So you are making it up.

Senator Phillips: I do not want Senator Davey to be confused, as he usually is. I am attempting to straighten him out, and I wish he would pay attention.

Senator MacEachen decides that it is time he became Prime Minister. He assesses his situation. He leads the majority in the Senate; he leads the majority in the Liberal caucus, so he decides that he is now Prime Minister MacEachen—a sort of Prime Minister in exile. Honourable senators, when Senator MacEachen gets up in the morning, he looks in the mirror and says, "I am just a shorter version of General de Gaulle in exile."

I believe my honourable leader and Senator Murray both mentioned the agreement in the House of Commons. Honourable senators, I would like to emphasize that that agreement was made in caucus. It was approved by all three parties in caucus—

Senator Davey: May I ask Senator Phillips if he attended the Liberal caucus? Is he sure of what happened there?

Senator Phillips: God forbid that I would attend that group.

Senator Davey: That is the first thing you have said that I agree with, senator.

Senator Phillips: I merely took the word of the Leader of the Liberal Party and the house leader of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons, who both said that it was approved in caucus.

Senator Davey: May I ask another question, senator—

Senator Roblin: Why don't you wait until Senator Phillips has finished? You can make your own speech later.

Senator Davey: If Senator Phillips does not choose to answer the questions, that is his decision.

Would you like a question or not, Senator Phillips?

Senator Phillips: No, I am getting tired of your questions. They are not very good.

Senator Sinclair: Gentility, gentility.

Senator Phillips: That is right; if he keeps his seat, that will be gentility, senator.

As I have said, the agreement was made and approved by the Liberal caucus. Now here is an interesting situation that arises: The majority of those attending the Liberal caucus are senators, and let me remind you, if you did not have Liberal senators, you would not have a Liberal caucus. You would not have enough members to hold a caucus meeting. Therefore, somewhere, those honourable senators must have agreed to the principle that was later adopted in the House of Commons. Honourable Senator Stewart shakes his head; I am sure that when he speaks, he will explain to us what took place in Liberal caucus, and I look forward to hearing that.

• (1630)

I think a third possibility for the origin of the delaying action by the Liberal senators is due to the fact that the Honourable Senator MacEachen looked back in history and thought: "Well, Trudeau came back, why can't I?" Perhaps he sees this as his first step on the long road back. I understand that he has also picked his theme song. He went back a few years and picked a hit tune, "The Cat Came Back", and Senator MacEachen is trying to come back through his actions on Bill C-11.

However, honourable senators, a more likely course of action is that John Turner is masterminding the whole nefarious scheme. The public is aware that it was John Turner who not only appointed Senator MacEachen to this chamber, but also made him Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: No, they are not aware of that because he did not. That is not true. Get your facts straight.

Senator Phillips: He made you Leader of the Government in the Senate and, after the election, made you Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: No, he did not appoint me to this chamber.

Senator Phillips: He made you Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: That is right.

Senator Phillips: Fine; I am glad to hear we are making progress.

Senator MacEachen: Prime Minister Trudeau summoned me, and I was rather reluctant.

Senator Phillips: I wonder why you had to have that letter if Prime Minister Trudeau appointed you.

If the Leader of the Liberal Party is dissatisfied with the performance of Senator MacEachen, and is opposed to his action, it would seem logical that Mr. Turner should replace Senator MacEachen. Since we see him there, we see him meeting with Mr. Turner every day—

Senator MacEachen: One threat a day is enough.

Senator Phillips:—one can only assume that Mr. Turner supports Senator MacEachen's actions.

Senator MacEachen: I lost my job anyway, according to Senator Murray. So, another blow is all right.

Senator Phillips: That would be progress.

John Turner made an agreement in the House of Commons on behalf of his party. The question arises: Did he instruct the Honourable Senator MacEachen, as Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, to break that agreement? Obviously he must have, or he would have replaced Senator MacEachen.

In all fairness to honourable senators opposite, I want to make it clear that not everyone on the other side who has spoken to me about Bill C-11 supports the action taken by Senator MacEachen. He obviously has had some dissension in his caucus over this, but he persists, in his petulant manner, to oppose Bill C-11. He must be getting instructions from somewhere or he would have listened to the objections in his caucus, and those instructions, I am sure, originate in the office of the Leader of the Opposition in the other place.

There has already been some discussion about replacing Senator MacEachen. I will skip the rest of my speech in that regard in deference to my friend and hope that he will be man enough to depart on his own.

Senator MacEachen: I am disturbed enough already.

Senator Phillips: At the meeting of the Senate Committee on National Finance we heard from the Minister of Finance concerning the urgency of passing this bill. The deliberate delay—and it is deliberate and petulant—has already cost the taxpayers of Canada $3 million.

Senator Guay: It is going up.

Senator Phillips: Obviously the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate is thinking back to a former television program entitled The Six Million Dollar Man. He wants to become the "six million dollar man"; he is prepared to delay this bill until it has cost the taxpayers of Canada $6 million so that he can walk out of here and call himself "the six million dollar senator." I hope that he will reconsider and settle for being "the three million dollar senator." Not even Senator Guay or Senator Kenny cost that much, and surely they would be satisfied with being three million dollar senators.

Senator Guay: I do not say anything unless I know what I am talking about.

Senator Phillips: That is good. I am always glad to see someone reform.

Senator Guay: Don't start anything.

Senator Phillips: The Minister of Finance has already explained that he has cut back on two bond issues. He is most anxious to proceed with another one on Monday.

I was disappointed with the reaction of the committee to that plea. I found a smirk of glee on many faces there that I did not appreciate. That is something new in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: Happiness is new, is it?

Senator Phillips: Ministers who have appeared before Senate committees in the past have always received consideration for their requests. I have been here many years now, honourable senators, and that principle has always been followed, particularly for a Minister of Finance who has appeared before a Senate committee and explained his reasons. In 22 years I have never seen a minister refused.

Senator Sinclair: Would you permit a question?

Senator Phillips: Certainly.

Senator Sinclair: When did a similar situation exist where a parliamentary principle and good business practice had been ignored? That is why the situation is different.

Senator Phillips: I am not impressed by the arguments of sound parliamentary principle and of financial responsibility from the Honourable Senator Sinclair. Anyone who supported a party that doubled the national debt in seven years is on very shaky ground when he starts talking about parliamentary principles. In case you have forgotten, Senator Sinclair, you supported that government.

Senator Guay: Would you permit another question?

Senator Phillips: I should like to finish my remarks and then talk to you.

Senator Guay: In your 22 years' experience in the Senate, have you ever seen a Minister of Finance walk out of a Senate committee meeting before it had finished its inquisition?

Senator Phillips: I have seen many occasions when ministers appeared before a committee and said that they had a limited amount of time.

Senator Guay: The House of Commons was not sitting on Monday.

Senator Sinclair: He did not say that he had to leave, he simply left.

Senator Phillips: When he began his remarks he said that he had a limited amount of time. As to your idea of the house not sitting, surely you, as a former cabinet minister, realize that ministers have other duties to perform as well as duty in the House of Commons. I believe you were in the cabinet when cabinet duty was initiated, when a roster was established with each cabinet minister having to spend so much time in the House of Commons, and the rest of his time on department business.

Senator Guay: He knew he was going to appear before the committee on Monday morning, so he could have made arrangements to stay until the end of the meeting.

Senator Phillips: The difficult thing for a number of senators to accept is the decision made by the electorate last September. We repeatedly hear from those opposite about this being a matter of judgment, a matter of timing. Honourable senators, the public told honourable senators opposite last September that they did not want any more of their judgment or their timing. How many times must they hit you over the head? They have already hit you over the head 211 times, and you have not absorbed it. How many more times do you want to be hit?

Senator Sinclair: I am a hit man.

● (1640)

Senator Phillips: The honourable senator is certainly behaving like one. That was not formerly his practice, but he certainly seems to have changed because he has come under the tutelage of Senator Davey. If the honourable senator would just revert to being himself, he would get back to being a reasonable sort of man.

The $6 million senator attempted to explain his instructions in committee. He has now been instructed not to divide the bill. Part II is now quite acceptable to the Liberals. Up until a week ago, they insisted that the bill be divided.

Honourable senators, why that change in attitude? Somebody in John Turner's office found out that, if the bill went back to the House of Commons, it would have to be debated again. We all know what would happen if it went back to the House of Commons. John Turner would have to explain the actions of Liberal senators. He is not any keener about being associated with them than senators opposite are to be associated with him. Mr. Turner wants to make sure that the bill is not returned to the House of Commons. That is why he does not want it divided.

Senator Sinclair asked why it should not be divided. The reason is that if it goes back to the House of Commons, it may be there for some considerable time. They will make senators opposite look like pikers by delaying it. Perhaps that is what they wanted in the first place—that is, for the bill to be returned and cause a delay.

Senator MacEachen: There was an all-party agreement.

Senator Roblin: Not to divide the bill.

Senator MacEachen: That was never discussed.

Senator Phillips: I wonder if Senator MacEachen has read the agreement.

Senator MacEachen: Yes. I will provide a copy of the Hansard in which the agreement is contained.

Senator Phillips: The agreement would not apply if the bill were returned.

Senator MacEachen: They never mentioned the Senate. We did not even exist in their minds.

Senator Murray: We meet every morning with them.

Senator Phillips: Do those in the other place realize that Senator MacEachen is a member of the Senate? I am sure they must.

Senator MacEachen: I have never tried to conceal it.

Senator Phillips: I hope he will from here on in.

The Liberals are awfully keen to see the estimates. They are trying to create a smokescreen by suggesting that there is something in the estimates they may object to. They keep asking what this money is going to be used for.

Has any senator opposite looked at the national debt recently? Do they realize what legacy they left behind? Do they realize that the interest on the debt next year will be $24 billion? The borrowing authority requested for the first three months of the next fiscal year would merely pay half the interest of their legacy. Need they ask any more questions regarding the reason for the borrowing? I would think they would be the last people in the world to be asking what that money is going to be used for. I repeat, honourable senators, the interest on the debt next year will be $24 billion, which is $2 billion per month.

Honourable senators opposite pretend to stand up and say they want fiscal responsibility. I wish the honourable senators opposite had adopted that attitude years ago and we would not be in debt for eternity because of their reckless spending.

In our discussions about the estimates, one thing disturbed me. Senator Sinclair started equivocating about when this bill would be passed after the estimates were presented. He wants the estimates to be studied. He has been a member of this chamber now for perhaps one or two years and he must know very well that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance studies the estimates every year. In committee the other day, Senator Stewart expressed the same sentiment when Senator Roblin asked for a guarantee that Bill C-11 would be passed as soon as the estimates were tabled. Then the expert on equivocation started shaking his head and retreating from his statement.

Honourable senators, let us have some clarification on that point. Will Bill C-11 be passed as soon as the estimates are tabled?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Phillips: Another "no."

Senator Sinclair: We still want an opportunity to look at them.

Senator Phillips: What is their intention in that regard?

Senator Sinclair: Within the next week.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, since I know there will be a number of questions, I will omit some of the points in my notes. I will mention, however, that, when I hear Liberal senators talking about financial responsibility, it seems to me they have now become responsible. I think to myself, "Ye gods, Pierre Elliott Trudeau would never make that claim." I find myself in agreement with Mr. Trudeau for this first time in my career in Parliament. Perhaps it is too bad that he left.

The Leader of the Government referred to the effect on interest rates. Surely, honourable senators do not wish this government to return to the exorbitant interest rates of the previous government. Does Senator Argue want farmers in western Canada to return to paying interest of 16.75 per cent? Does Senator LeBlanc, who opposes this bill, want fishermen to return to paying interest of 22 per cent? Is that why he is opposing this bill?

Senator LeBlanc: I am concerned about vessel insurance.

Senator Phillips: If the honourable senator had studied the bill, he would know that it has nothing to do with vessel insurance.

Of course, we have heard a great deal about universality. All the social programs ought to be continued. Senators opposite were very busy attempting to paint the Conservative Party as being opposed to social security. Are they attempting to leave the government in a position where it will have no money and have to reduce social security payments? We may even hear Senator Sinclair's inquiry on that one of these days.

Honourable senators, I cannot see why the timing of the estimates is so urgent. Why are senators opposite so keen to see the estimates? In committee the other day they agreed to pass the legislation when the estimates were tabled. Surely, someone must be expecting something unusual in the estimates. What do they expect to find in the estimates and what do they expect to find omitted from the estimates? Can they tell us what is so magical about the blue book?

One of the honourable senators opposite suggested to me that I should give Senator MacEachen last year's blue book because he would not know the difference. Perhaps we would have solved the whole problem if we had done that. He would probably have been satisfied.

Honourable senators, later on this evening we may be asked to vote on this motion. The public is not only watching us carefully; they are watching John Turner's leadership to see what instructions he has issued to senators opposite. Between now and the time of the vote, he will have an opportunity to change his mind. If he does not change his mind, he will be labelled in the same way senators opposite have been so justly labelled.

Senator Murray mentioned the future of the Senate. I, too, will touch on that, but not in any threatening way. We all know the public's opinion of the Senate now. We know what the public will demand. You know what the public will demand. This is a government that believes in consultation, and when it gets that message from the public, you can be sure that reform will be moved to the front burner. That is too good an opportunity for the government to miss. Your vote will decide not only the future of the Senate but also the future reputation of the Liberal Party. Perhaps many of you are like Senator Sinclair who says he does not care. Others have been around here for a long time and have respect for this institution, for the way it has behaved in the past and for the way it has handled legislation and made every effort to accommodate governments in the past. I hope the Senate will continue to show to the government that respect and co-operation it has always shown in the past.

● (1650)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Davey: I wonder whether the honourable senator will now take a question.

Senator Phillips: If the honourable senator will guarantee that it will be better than the last one.

Senator Davey: I cannot guarantee that. The last one was so good. As the obvious Tory expert on the all-party agreement in the other place, I wonder whether the honourable senator can tell us whether in that agreement there was any reference to the Senate or to Royal Assent?

Senator Phillips: The agreement was of the Liberal Party—that is, before it was hijacked. Perhaps that is the distinction the honourable senator is trying to make.

Senator Davey: It is very simple. Is there any reference to the Senate or to Royal Assent? Either there is or there is not. Presumably the honourable senator has read the agreement.

Senator Phillips: I have already given the honourable senator an explanation, but I suppose that it takes more than one attempt. I will try once more.

Senator Davey: You are incapable of giving a "Yes" or "No" answer.

Senator Phillips: The answer is that the agreement was made by the party, by the caucus. If the honourable senator is part of the party and the caucus, he is included.

Senator Davey: The answer to my question is "No". Thank you.

Senator Phillips: I would ask the honourable senator how many different caucuses one would have to include in the agreement? Would we have to include the Quebec caucus, or the Ontario caucus? In the past, agreements have always been made by caucus and applied to that party.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I believe that for the most part this has been an excellent debate. If we have to have what Senator Murray deplores as confrontation to bring forth Senator MacEachen and Senator Roblin to heights which hitherto I had not heard them reach in this chamber, and Senator Murray in the way he held forth this afternoon, then this argues that perhaps we should have more such confrontations.

I am not at all impressed with the notion that if someone happens to detect that the Senate exists, they will immediately get a flyswatter and squash us out of existence. That, it seems to me, is not the principal threat to our future. If we want to make this institution the important body that the Fathers of Confederation conceived of it as being, then we have to be prepared to accept some confrontation and the debate that goes with it, and also some of the publicity, good and bad, that that will entail. So I do not believe that we should entertain the notion that somehow or other we are preaching our own funeral sermons here today. That is not the case at all.

Senator MacEachen: Thank God.

Senator Stewart: If this motion is carried, Bill C-11 will come back to the Senate. The third reading motion will then be moved and honourable senators will be forced to line up either for or against the bill. The effect of adopting Senator Roblin's motion, I suggest, would be to frustrate the constructive proposal put forward by Senator MacEachen. Under that proposal the unamended bill would come up for third reading when the main spending estimates for 1985-86 have been presented to Parliament. Under that proposal, Bill C-11 can have Royal Assent next week. I do not believe that honourable senators want to reject this middle course, a course that will give the government the borrowing authority it has requested, while doing no violence to a fundamental principle of parliamentary government.

I believe it is important, honourable senators, to look at this bill, because it is almost unprecedented. The bill, as we all know, is in two parts. Part I will produce a distinct statute called the "Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85, (No. 2)". That part will become effective immediately after Royal Assent. It will authorize the government to borrow $7.3 billion in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985.

It is important to notice that that act will permit the government to carry over $2 billion of that $7.3 billion for use in the forthcoming fiscal year. That is a very important point to note, because, as I shall show later, it was the antecedents of that non-lapsing aspect of Part I of the bill that in previous sessions attracted the hostility of the Progressive Conservative opposition.

Part II of the bill will produce a separate statute entitled "Borrowing Authority Act, 1985-86". As we all know, that part will become effective only on April 1, 1985. It will authorize the government to borrow $12 billion for the fiscal year that will end on March 31, 1986.

The problem facing your committee is that the parentage of those two separate statutes is provided in this one bill. I suggest that had we been confronted with only Part I, there would have been no problem. The bill would now have been enacted and the government would have $7.3 billion, with $2 billion available to be used in the forthcoming fiscal year.

But the government, in its wisdom, decided to anticipate the borrowing needs for 1985-86. The government made that decision. It is my view that it was a mistake to incorporate Part II in the bill, because it was that decision, the decision of the government, that led to the problem that has been troubling your committee. The problem confronting your committee is that the bill raises the following question of fundamental importance: Has the Senate, and therefore the committee, the right to pass Part II of the bill? That is the question Senator Roblin's motion puts before the Senate this afternoon. In order to answer this question, we must turn to the parliamentary precedents for guidance. The precedents show that if Part II of this bill goes forward for Royal Assent at this time, it will be without precedent. The problem is that Part II is premature. The Leader of the Government is asking this house to acquiesce in an action for which there is no relevant precedent. It has been stated—and I do not question the validity of the proposition—that the committee's extensive consideration of the bill is extraordinary. It is extraordinary because the committee has been confronted with an extraordinary and unprecedented request.

This matter is very important. I think it is worthwhile to look at the precedents which bring us down to where we are now. Until 1977 Parliament conferred borrowing authority on the government in the appropriation bills, which are based on the main estimates. We all know that the main Appropriation Act is the one that goes through at the end of June, the one that produces the headlines which say, "Parliament votes $10, $15, $20 billion in 10 minutes." This is when we get our biggest black eye. However, during the middle seventies, the official opposition objected to this procedure. It said that by reason of the changes to the rules of the House of Commons it was no longer possible for it to perform its responsibility with regard to the request for borrowing authority. It wanted borrowing authority factored out of the appropriation bills. The government of the day agreed.

There has been reference to what was done in the fall of 1977. The Leader of the Government looked back to that instance this afternoon, if I heard him correctly. In the fall of 1977 the then Minister of Finance requested borrowing authority for fiscal 1977-78 and 1978-79 in a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. I should mention to honourable senators that the Minister of State (Finance) and the Minister of Finance regard this precedent as a relevant basis for the bill now before the Senate. I suggest that they are mistaken. I think honourable senators will find upon reviewing the record that what was done in 1977 was an aberration. It was a half-way house between two settled types of procedure. In introducing his bill, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, then the Minister of Finance, dealt with this matter. What he said can be found on page 646 of the House of Commons Debates for November 7, 1977. He laid out what I have just mentioned, that traditionally borrowing authority was incorporated in the appropriations acts. He went on to say that honourable members had complained and that as a result:

—it was agreed that the government would change the procedure for obtaining a new borrowing authority. The government intends to introduce a bill soon providing a new procedure which will give ample opportunity for normal debate. In the meantime, there is need for an increase in the borrowing authority.

The minister's statement did not escape notice. A former speaker of the House of Commons, the Honourable Marcel Lambert, called it to the attention of the house when he said:

—following the adoption of the throne speech resolution, a ways and means motion was put down, as well as what I call a bootleg motion, to increase the borrowing authority of the Government of Canada. It has been a good smuggling effort on the part of the government.

In other words, Marcel Lambert regarded what was done in 1977 as a bootleg motion or a good smuggling effort on the part of the government.

Later, the present Deputy Prime Minister dealt with this instance. I know that the quotation is becoming a favourite of the Leader of the Government and I am almost deterred by that consideration from reading it. However, I know that some senators have not had an opportunity to read the notable words of the Honourable Eric Nielsen. On February 10, 1982 he referred to the development of the procedure by which borrowing bills are dealt with. He mentioned what was done in 1976-77. Then he went on to mention what was done in 1977. He said that a borrowing authority clause had been included in an income tax bill. He went on to say:

It should be noted that this slipped through without any comment, but it is a very doubtful precedent because the practice was not confirmed by ruling, was not accepted as a definite precedent in your ruling, Madam Speaker, of January 19, 1981, and, most important, it has been superseded by the practice subsequently adopted in the last three administrations.

In other words, the Honourable Eric Nielsen dismissed the 1977 incident as a kind of aberration which, he thought, had slipped through without comment. Actually, as I have mentioned, his colleague, the Honourable Marcel Lambert, had detected what was happening. Mr. Nielsen's point was that since 1977 the request for borrowing authority has been dealt with distinctly and has become a very important part of the financial legislation program of Parliament.

Now, we have to look at the years since then. I do not intend to go through every year in absolute detail. We know what happened in 1978-79, when the government of the day brought in a bill to provide borrowing authority for 1978-79 and 1979-80. The opposition objected and said that this was improper. What happened then? The government of the day decided, regardless of how much face was involved, to drop Part II of that bill. Then in 1979 the Clark government sought borrowing authority for the balance of the fiscal year 1979-80. During the session from 1980 to 1983 seven borrowing bills were introduced. I should like to put before honourable senators the dates of Royal Assent for those bills because they are very revealing. They are as follows: July 17, 1980—well into the fiscal year; April 8, 1981—a week into the fiscal year; June 17, 1982—again, well into the fiscal year; August 4, 1982; November 8, 1982; March 30, 1983; and June 29, 1983.

[Senator Stewart.]

• (1710)

During the 1983-84 parliamentary year, one borrowing bill was introduced. That bill received Royal Assent on April 5, 1984.

Only one of those eight bills contained two parts, one part requesting borrowing authority for the then current fiscal year, and one part for the subsequent fiscal year; that was Bill C-143, which received Royal Assent on March 30, 1983.

In respect of all that legislation, the Progressive Conservative Party, then the official opposition, made very clear what it believed to be the principles that should guide Parliament in dealing with requests by the government for borrowing authority. It is important to be reminded of those principles.

On June 15, 1982, the Honourable Michael Wilson had something to say about this matter. The main estimates for that year had been tabled, and the budget was to be delivered on June 28, about two weeks later. However, Mr. Wilson urged the government to withdraw its bill until after the budget had been brought down. At page 18479 of the House of Commons Debates of June 15, 1982, he stated as follows:

—for this minister to come to the House and ask for permission to borrow $6.6 billion is totally in contempt of Parliament and in contempt of the Canadian people. We are being asked to vote on something when we have no idea what the end result will be.

In other words, he thought that the then Minister of Finance, the Honourable Allan MacEachen, should not come to Parliament to ask for borrowing authority until he could give a specific statement as to the total borrowing requirement for the then current fiscal year.

He had other things to say later on. After the June 28, 1982, budget the government of the day sought authority to borrow $11 billion for 1982-83, the then current fiscal year. As in the case of the bill now before us, there was a provision that a certain portion of that request—in that case, $4 billion—would not lapse at the end of 1982-83. What the opposition did at the time was to attack the idea that any part of the borrowing authority for the then current fiscal year should remain valid in the following fiscal year. They argued that March 31 was a real end; that there was a kind of guillotine that dropped at midnight on March 31, and that in no case should borrowing authority be provided by Parliament to the government if that borrowing authority were to extend beyond midnight of March 31 of the fiscal year in which the authority was being requested.

The Right Honourable Joe Clark moved an amendment. He proposed that the motion for the second reading of the bill be amended so that, if carried, the House would have resolved that:

—this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than that amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle—

Speaking in that debate, the Honourable Michael Wilson explained Mr. Clark's amendment. In doing so, he said, in clear, distinct and admirable prose, the following:

There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year.

If that principle were to be applied to Bill C-11, the bill now before your committee, not only would Part II be struck out, but even part of Part I of the bill would be out. That is how rigorous the present Minister of Finance was in 1982. That is how rigorous a standard he enunciated in respect of this matter of giving borrowing authority for a subsequent fiscal year.

He also picked up from another member of the other place, the expression "slush fund," an expression which he used to describe borrowing authority that extended beyond the end of the current fiscal year. Why did he pick up that term? He did not originate it. He picked it up because, he contended, it was not known how that money was going to be spent and that it would be irresponsible to provide the government of the day with a "slush fund."

That is not language that I am adopting; indeed, I suspect that, on reflection, the Honourable Michael Wilson, would not adopt it either. But that is the way such a measure struck him at the time. It struck him that the providing of borrowing authority beyond March 31—in other words, authority for a subsequent fiscal year—was simply providing a "slush fund."

And what did the government of the day do when confronted by this statement of high principle? The government of the day responded by agreeing to amend its bill. I do not know how much face was lost; I really do not care. It agreed to amend the bill by dropping the amount that would have been provided by the non-lapsing part of the bill. That was the response of the government of the day!

Honourable senators, we then come down to the one bill which, in my opinion, is sufficiently similar to the one now before us as to be a guiding example, and that is Bill C-143, a bill introduced in Parliament in 1983.

On February 17, 1983, the Honourable Marc Lalonde, then the Minister of Finance, moved the second reading of Bill C-143. That bill, like Bill C-11, contained two parts: $5 billion for the balance of the then current fiscal year and $14 billion for the forthcoming fiscal year. Mr. Lalonde stated in his speech on the motion for the second reading of the bill that the main estimates would be tabled in Parliament on February 22, 1983, and that a budget would be presented to Parliament early in the new fiscal year.

On February 22, 1983, the very day the main estimates for 1983-84 were tabled, the Honourable Erik Nielsen stated in the House of Commons that it was absolutely and vitally necessary that Parliament have adequate time to study and debate the budget, as well as the new borrowing bill. On that same day Mr. Wilson reaffirmed his support for what he regarded as parliamentary principle. What he said is to be found, in part, at page 23086 of the Debates of the House of Commons of February 22, 1983. He is referring to a statement by the Minister of Finance and he says:

● (1720)

Last October the Minister said:

And he now quotes the Minister of Finance:

In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year—

That budget, as honourable senators may remember, was presented April 19, 1983.

Mr. Wilson went on to say:

He has not done that.

He then continues his quotation:

—set out estimates for 1983-84—

We have not seen them.

And then he refers to the matter to which Senator Murray referred, the projection for future fiscal years. He did not refer, as Senator Murray seemed to imply, only to this matter of projections. He wanted also both a relevant budget and the current, main spending estimates. Of course, the main spending estimates were tabled that very day, February 22, 1983.

The Minister of Finance, the Honourable Michael Wilson, stated at that time that, since the relevant budget was not before the house and that since the main estimates had not been seen, he would not be prepared to support the motion that the bill be read a second time. We know what happened; that bill eventually became law on March 30, only at high noon, notwithstanding that Part 1 of that bill provided money for the fiscal year which was then expiring—virtually in its grave—as well as borrowing authority for the forthcoming fiscal year which would start on April 1.

In March 1984 the government brought in a bill to provide borrowing authority for 1984-85. That was after both the main estimates and the budget had been presented. However, there was a provision in the bill that provided for non-lapsing money in the amount of $4 billion, and of course the official opposition, consistent with the position it had always taken, objected. It attacked that non-lapsing provision. Some honourable senators may remember this, because so strongly opposed was the Progressive Conservative Party to the provision of non-lapsing authority in Part I, indeed to the provision of non-lapsing authority of any kind, that they conducted what I call a "bellabuster" on March 28, 1984. Senator Flynn remembers that. He remembers that that was the night when—

Senator Flynn: What kind of a filibuster are you conducting yourself, now?

Senator Stewart: Thank you for your assistance. He remembers well that that was the evening when the representative of His Excellency, the Governor General was seated at the foot of the Throne, waiting to give Royal Assent to various bills. The "bellabuster" to which I refer made it impossible for that Royal Assent to take place that evening. I know that Senator Flynn remembers that very well.

The following day, so ardent were the Progressive Conservatives in maintaining their principle that a borrowing authority for a current fiscal year should never contain a non-lapsing provision that they had a second "bellabuster" on March 29, 1984. We must concede that they certainly were consistent: they believed in their principles; they stuck by them; they rang the bells.

They did something else; they moved an amendment. I know that Senator Flynn does not like the words of his Conservative friend; he finds them abhorrent; but this is what they proposed:

That this House holds the opinion that the granting of a sum greater than the amount required to meet the government's needs to the end of the the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle . . .

That quotation is to be found in Hansard at page 2641.

Honourable senators, I ask you: Is it any wonder that the people of Canada become cynical about ourselves, the politicians? I ask you, I ask myself, is it any wonder, when these principles have been laid down so clearly and have been so persistently maintained against the former government, is it any wonder that the people become cynical about politicians?

Senator Flynn: There is no doubt about that.

Senator Stewart: The truth of the matter is that Parliament has never enacted a borrowing authority bill before the main estimates have been presented. That is the parliamentary principle demonstrated by the relevant precedents. Moreover, Mr. Wilson and his friends have opposed even non-lapsing provisions as contrary to the principles of sound parliamentary government.

Senator MacEachen has said that the opposition here is not being as rigorous as were the Progressive Conservatives, and he of course is right. What they objected to when in opposition is mirrored in Part I of this bill; yet we have said that the present government could have had that part a month ago. They could have had $7.3 billion, notwithstanding that $2 billion of that sum is non-lapsing. It will carry forward beyond April 1, 1985.

Notice, however, that these men of principle talk of much more than the main estimates. They say, "We must have the relevant budget." That is what the Honourable Michael Wilson said on February 22, 1983. Honourable senators, he had a point. However, the timing of a budget is a matter for which there must be flexibility.

The Honourable Michael Wilson, the present Minister of Finance, intends to bring in a budget within the next few weeks. This will be a most important budget. It overhangs our economy. I hope it does not overhang too long, because then we will hear some politicians saying that it is causing insecurity, and they will undoubtedly tie it in to the value of the Canadian dollar and other such considerations. That is what we can expect. That forthcoming budget will be a very important budget. I say to those honourable senators who scoff at the importance of the tabling of the main estimates that what they are really arguing is that we should have been much more rigorous; that we should have said, "No, in conscience we cannot give you the second part of this bill until we have seen not only the main estimates but the forthcoming budget." I plead with those honourable senators that that kind of rigid position would have been excessive. I think we save the principle by insisting upon only the main estimates.

The government is applying for the authority to borrow. Its application, like every other application for permission, ought to be in order. Its application ought to be properly supported. Merely to say, "We know that everything is going to be in order," is not an approach that any issuer of licences would ever accept. The application ought to be in order. The government ought to explain its spending intentions, just as one might say that the pilot of an airplane ought to be required to file a flight plan. To continue with my metaphor, to fill up the tank without a flight plan would be irresponsible. I know Senator Phillips will want to vary that and say that to gas up the balloon without a flight plan would be utterly irresponsible, and he would probably accuse Liberals of behaving in that way.

I have gone over these matters because I think it is fair to say that the Progressive Conservatives established that the borrowing authority bill is a very important bill. They fought the Liberal government in past parliaments on precisely this point. They were insistent. Their standards were high. What they were objecting to was non-lapsing borrowing authority, and I suspect that they were too demanding in that regard.

• (1730)

I want to go back to the beginning; I will not be long. I do not think that it is devastating to have a good debate in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: You do not contribute to a good debate.

Senator Stewart: Senator Flynn, in all likelihood, is going to give an eloquent speech, and when my poor speech is taken with his, the average will be extraordinarily high. I am counting on him for that.

Senator Roblin: You won't be disappointed.

Senator Stewart: I suspect that most of us did not come here to be sober, rubber stamps. But that is the suggestion that is being put before us. I do not think that that suggestion is being put before us maliciously. I have a good deal of sympathy for my friend, Senator Roblin. He has a tough job to do but he soldiers on and sticks to his guns. We have to admire him for that.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Stewart: I may not be from Manitoba, but we from Nova Scotia recognize a good man when we see one. He has a tough job. He reminds me of a lawyer who has been assigned a weak case; he is doing a good job of it, and we have to admire his effort, notwithstanding that he is not convincing us as the jury.

Senator Sinclair has demonstrated that it is quite inaccurate to assert that the country's finances have been devastated because Royal Assent has not been given to Part I. If it were accurate that serious consequences for our dollar, our finances, and our economy flow from the fact that Part I of this bill has not become law, I think it could be argued, as it has been argued here this afternoon, that Mr. Wilson has to assume some of that responsibility. He is the one who rejected the enactment of Part I.

I think we have to be sympathetic. The Minister of Finance is a very busy man, and I rather suspect that this bill was fairly well along before he detected that there were serious objections on grounds of principle, principle which he well understands. I think this bill was fairly well along before he became seized of the matter. I would hope that, even at this late date, he will take advantage of the proposal which is before him.

May I say to my Progressive Conservative friends that I think that if the Minister of Finance had said "yes" a month ago, if he had said, "I do not care about losing face; I can explain this to my colleagues, but I am going to do the right thing consistent with what I have always advocated"—if the minister had said that, it would have rounded to the political advantage of his government and his party.

I suggest to honourable senators that, if the government would demonstrate that kind of flexibility and consistency today to the principles that they formerly advocated, the same will still happen. If I were an ardent, rank, rabid Liberal, I might be uneasy that they may come to see and grasp the opportunity. I think it would be good for the country and for Parliament to have the Progressive Conservative Party in power, as in opposition, recognize the great principle that Parliament ought not to vote borrowing authority without adequate documentation of the need to spend that money having been placed before Parliament.

Thank you, honourable senators, for your attention.

Senator Sinclair: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Flynn: Not another speech!

Senator Stewart: I am hesitant to permit a question because someone might suspect that I have prompted my seatmate, but I will try to answer the question.

Senator Sinclair: On Monday, when the Minister of Finance gave evidence before the Senate committee, he put a great deal of emphasis and reliance on the precedent that he said permitted him to do what he wanted the committee to do and what he wanted the Senate to do.

My question is this: Is the precedent on which he was relying the one that the Honourable Mr. Lambert referred to as "bootleg" and the Honourable Erik Nielsen referred to as being "flawed," and one that had not been accepted? Is that the precedent the minister was relying on?

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the short answer is, yes. I thought I had made that abundantly clear. That precedent of 1977 occurred during transition from the old procedure, when borrowing authority was contained in appropriation bills, to the new procedure, which came into use in 1978, the new procedure under which borrowing authority is sought in separate and distinct bills.

So, the 1977 instance occurred during a time of transition, and I think it ought not to be relied upon at all. It is not a relevant precedent. That is my answer, Senator Sinclair.

Senator Phillips: I wonder if I could direct a question to the Honourable Senator Stewart. In my brief and concise remarks, I asked him to explain his attitude concerning passing the bill after receiving the estimates. I noticed that he carefully avoided that in his remarks. Would he now tell us what his intentions will be after receiving the estimates?

Senator Stewart: Yes, I have no problem with that. What I am arguing is that the government's application for authority to borrow ought to be in good order, as any application ought to be in good order.

What my reaction will be to that application, supported by the main estimates, I can tell you in candor. If the main estimates do not contain provision for money to support the Parliament of Canada, I will have great difficulty in reacting favourably. Frankly, I do not expect the absence of that kind of provision. If, for example, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is abolished, if there is no provision for that department, I will have great difficulties. But I do not expect that; consequently, I can give Senator Phillips an assurance on which he can rely. I can assure him that, if the main estimates are tabled on Monday next, I will be prepared to vote on Wednesday next for the acceptance of this bill. If they are tabled on Tuesday next, I will do so on Thursday next. I have no problem there at all.

However, if Parliament were going to be deprived of its necessary funds, I would have difficulties, but I have no notion that the present government would ever think of doing that. That is why I can give the honourable senator that kind of assurance. I think that is a fairly reasonable position, and Senator Phillips seems to agree with me.

• (1740)

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macdonald: I think what I have to say I can say before 6 p.m. I can assure you that, had I had my druthers, I would have chosen another occasion to rise in this chamber for the first time, and it would have been to speak on just about anything other than Bill C-11.

It is almost a month since I was sworn into this august chamber—almost the same length of time since Bill C-11 had second reading. I rather feel that Bill C-11 and I have started to grow old together.

Senator Gigantès: You age better.

Senator MacDonald: Listening to my colleagues, Senators Murray and Phillips, this afternoon I also had the chilling feeling—having checked the order of precedence of the swearing-in—that my colleague, Senator Baroote might, in years to come, be pickled and put on display at the Museum of Man as “The Last Senator.” That thought brings me no joy.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank honourable senators for the warmth of their welcome, their greetings and the many courtesies which have been extended to me. I have the happy privilege of knowing about 40 per cent of the members of this chamber, which makes the task of my becoming acquainted a little easier. I will not single out those who greeted me so warmly except for one, and that is, of course, the distinguished Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, Senator MacEachen. He was kind enough, when welcoming me, to make some very generous remarks, and I would simply reciprocate those sentiments.

Senator MacEachen and I go back a long period of time. We were classmates. Over the period of years I have known him, I have regarded him as a credit to his native province, to his native county, to his alma mater, and to the Parliament of Canada. I regard him as probably one of the ablest parliamentarians Nova Scotia and Canada have ever produced.

Without intending to simplify this matter, I suppose the question which may divide us is whether the length of time we have taken to study this matter has been either reasonable or necessary. As I think back over the last month, I find myself wondering if there was at any particular time, an opportunity—as they say in matters involving motor vehicle cases—to avoid the last chance for an accident.

Senator Sinclair refers to matters involving compromise. I think the offer Senator MacEachen made, when he suggested accepting $7 billion now and leaving the $12 billion until later, was a splendid idea. It would have solved the problem, and I was pleased to hear that offer. Unfortunately, we were in no position to accept it. That option was closed out. It was made abundantly clear by the minister, the deputy minister and the House of Commons that they regarded the entire bill as constituting an interim borrowing measure so, for reasons best known to themselves, it could not be returned. The dog was back in our laps.

Where, then, did the opportunity come to avoid what appears to have been an unprecedented time span? Considering the nature of the temperament of members of this chamber, where would students of conflict have seen an opportunity for some kind of deal, some way to resolve this matter? Would Barbara Tuchman have been able to find some material for a book, which would have resolved this matter? Has this been a charade, or is this an experience for me to which I will have to become accustomed in the next 13 years?

When I use the term “accident,” I use it in the sense that this borrowing bill has created an increasing amount of public attention with an accompanying amount of misunderstanding. I really cannot conceive of this reflecting any credit on this chamber.

[Senator Gigantès.]

Honourable senators have clung, with scholarship and I have to say some tedium, to their constitutional right to insist that a borrowing authority be preceded by something other than that which was presented on November 8. They have discarded that as a responsible forecast; they have considered that the precedents are irrelevant; and they have been impervious to the suggestion that this is but an interim borrowing measure with the assurance from the House of Commons and the minister that the balance of the expenditures will be outlined following a budget. I should have thought that would have been enough, but apparently it was not. That which is wanted now is the estimates. That has always been wanted. Not even the silken persuasive arguments of Senator Phillips could convince the senators opposite otherwise.

Senator Perrault: Synthetic silk.

Senator MacDonald: I should have thought those three things would have been enough: the November statement; the compelling precedents of other borrowing bills; and what appears to be the evidence of the delays costing taxpayers money.

I should have thought a compromise might have been—and I quote a right honourable distinguished Canadian—for us to “hold our noses and pass it,” and to be encouraged by the remarks of the Minister of Finance to accompany the passage of this bill with our views as to why this should not happen again. I thought we might be unanimous in that regard, but apparently that is not to be the case.

The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate has made it clear that his colleagues do not intend to defeat the bill, to amend it, or to send it back, now that that option has been closed. He tells us that, once they see the estimates, they will pass it. It is very clear that there was a guarantee in his statement, which resembled that which a Customs inspector might make—“We will let you into the country; we will look inside your bags; but we do not want to inspect them.”

Senator Sinclair suggests that the presentation of the estimates is a matter of “good business practice.” Does the presentation of estimates, which you consider to be pro forma, constitute sufficient grounds upon which to defend the principle of good business practice? You must fight on some grounds. What are they? Tell us where it is. Last night I watched with great interest the televised discussion between the Minister of Finance and the Honourable Senator Sinclair. I found it fascinating. Without suggesting anything with respect to the outcome of that matter, I was fascinated to note that when Senator Sinclair started to make his point and to get into the discussion, he was repeatedly interrupted by Barbara Frum who said, “But you are appointed.” That is the expression she used on more than one occasion to interrupt the honourable senator. She should not have done that with heaven knows how many hundreds of thousands of people watching.

• (1750)

Senator Sinclair: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator MacDonald: Yes.

Senator Sinclair: I did not feel that it was my place to explain to Barbara Frum the British North America Act, parliamentary procedures and so on. I did not consider that to be the time to do so.

Senator MacDonald: I agree. As a matter of fact, I was trying to make it clear that I was somewhat frustrated that you were unable to make your point. The fact that she would say "But you are appointed," indicates that hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of people are starting to miss the entire point. That is why I return to my original point and say that I do not believe that these past few weeks have been the greatest weeks in the history of this assembly, and, since this is my first month here, I do not particularly like to begin my appointment in this particular way.

In conclusion, I would say that those senators who have chosen to fight this bill on a matter of principle cannot but be admired, even though, in this instance—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I am sorry to interrupt the honourable senator, but it is now six o'clock and, according to our rules, I have to leave the Chair. We shall resume the sitting at eight o'clock.

Senator Roblin: Your Honour, that is indeed the rule and you are quite proper to invoke it. However, I believe the honourable senator has only a few sentences, or perhaps a paragraph, left to conclude his speech. If he promises not to go beyond the next five minutes or so, I am sure that we would be disposed to hear him now rather than interrupt him in his concluding remarks.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I believe that I can conclude what I wish to say in less than one minute. An enormous amount of political capital has been expended on this matter, on the part of ministers of the Crown, of honourable senators and others. I get the impression, from my briefings, that some important matters lie ahead of us for which all of the political capital that we have will be required. I believe that the amount of political capital that has been exhausted on this matter has been disproportionate, and I hope that we can get on with passing this bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Gigantès: Your Honour, may I request that the debate be adjourned until eight o'clock in my name?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I will now leave the Chair until eight o'clock.

The Senate adjourned.

● (2000)

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity, though it seems to be a digression from the debate, to congratulate Senator Mac-

Donald on his maiden speech. In fact, it is pertinent to the debate to do so because here is a reasonable man, a gentleman, a decent man, urbane, witty, civilized and admirable. I wish some of the others were like him. They were not. We have heard this evening one of our colleagues say to another senator that if he kept his seat it would be gentility. We have heard threats, which in Tory terms constitute civility.

Senator Nurgitz: What do you know?

Senator Gigantès: We have been told that one should respect this house. I ask the senators on the Tory side if there is any greater form of disrespect than to use threats against people who disagree with your views.

Let us review the facts a little. I shall not repeat at length what my distinguished colleagues have said. We were given a convincing demonstration by Senator Stewart that what we are dealing with is a principle for which the Tory party has fought, and fought hard, in the other place; and not just any members of the Tory party, but the very members of the Tory party who are now asking us to retreat from that principle. We heard Senator Stewart, following Senator Sinclair, say that it is perfectly normal and reasonable to ask that we see the Main Estimates, just to determine whether something untoward and unacceptable has been included. When you go to get your driver's licence, you are asked for a certificate of insurance and they will not give the driver's licence to you until you have shown the certificate. You cannot merely say that you will call or that you will show it to them next week. You have to show it first.

We have been told by Tory senators that there are financial dangers the country is running because of the obduracy of us Liberals. If we accept that the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, and the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Michael Wilson, have the welfare of the country at heart—and I accept that—then it seems to me that, if there really were a danger, they would have accepted the Liberal compromise. They would have accepted the NDP amendment long ago to avoid those dangers. If they did not accept that compromise, which was along the lines they have fought so hard to establish in the past, then the only conclusion must be that they did not really believe that there was any danger.

We are told that we must abandon this principle. The first reason given is that we are costing the taxpayers money. However, the government knew what it was planning to do before we broke for Christmas. The Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate could have approached the Honourable Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and told him then what the government plans were. I am sure that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition in the Senate would have informed the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate before Christmas that we would oppose this bill in its present form, that we would not want to pass Part II before seeing the estimates. Then the government could have split the bill. There is no likelihood that they would have had trouble splitting it and there would not have been a long debate because splitting it would have meant accepting the views of the opposition in the House of Commons. It would have been a reasonable act and they would have gotten the $7.3 billion. Immediately after the estimates were tabled they would have gotten their other $12 billion. But, no.

Such flexibility on the part of the government would not have been unprecedented. On February 14 the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate—and I shall not quote him verbatim, since it is not allowed—during a meeting of the finance committee praised previous administrations for listening to Senate suggestions and for changing government proposals. However, these reasonable situations, which Senator Roblin presents to us as laudable examples, arose because the government then consulted and informed the Senate that the government was willing to reach a compromise. Earlier we heard Senator Stewart lay out the record. The Liberal government backed down before the persistence of the then opposition. That did not happen this time. Moreover—and this is what I find hard to take—the government has already approved the estimates. With the modern printing techniques at its disposal, those estimates could have been tabled by the government last Friday.

• (2010)

Senator Haidasz: Oh!

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

Senator Haidasz: How do you know?

Senator Murray: A good question.

Senator Gigantès: It is information that came in a brown envelope. I will tell you afterwards. I cannot give you more details, because the person who so informed me would be fired. This government is sufficiently paranoid to believe that it can keep secrets. You cannot print 450-page blue books and have stacks of them lying about and still keep it a secret. That is how I know. There are too many people who have seen them, people who have bundled and labelled them. They are ready to be distributed.

Senator Haidasz: And they told you so?

Senator Gigantès: They did not tell me so. An employee of the government told me so.

The government could have had this bill last week. They could have shown us the estimates this week. But no, they chose not to. And we have to ask ourselves why. Why do they want to create this psycho-drama?

Senator Flynn: And what is your answer?

Senator Gigantès: I can only speculate as to why—and I do not accuse any member of this house of having a part in this reasoning, because the members of this house are honourable men and women. I think it was to create a diversion in the minds of the media and the public so that they would stop harping—

Senator Flynn: Who is trying to create a diversion?

Senator Gigantès: —harping on the constant errors and foot-in-mouth mistakes of members of the government and concentrate on some other event.

[Senator Gigantès.]

They could give us the estimates this week. The government has said that it is willing to bring the House of Commons back. Why not bring the House of Commons back and table the estimates. If the government were to do that, it would have Royal Assent on this bill on Friday. But no, it does not want to do that. What it wants is to have this little crisis. Well, it is having a little crisis—

Senator Flynn: We are not the ones having a crisis.

Senator Gigantès: It is a crisis that has been deliberately fabricated by the government. It knew it could have avoided it. Why was it fabricated by the government? For the answer to that, I should like to quote from a newspaper interview given by Senator Lowell Murray. The article states:

In terms of the borrowing bill, the government could easily agree to a compromise with the Liberal senators without adversely affecting the government's borrowing capacity.

But if it does so it will represent a political victory for the Liberals and an ominous portent of troubles to come.

"If they get away with this one," said Senator Lowell Murray, one of the Tories on the finance committee—

Senator Murray: Just one moment—

Senator Gigantès:

—"they'd be encouraged to repeat the performance on any bill that strikes their fancy."

Senator Murray: May I ask the honourable senator to read the quotation that is attributed to me within quotation marks and not attribute to me statements that are made by the reporter in interpreting a political situation.

Senator Gigantès: I did not attribute the remarks to you, Senator Murray. You attributed them to yourself. So, if the shoe fits—

Senator Murray: I am asking the honourable senator to attribute to me the words that are attributed to me in the article between quotation marks—

Senator Gigantès: I am about to do that.

Senator Murray: Enough of this dishonesty!

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Murray: Enough of this dishonesty. My honourable friend had some difficulty a few weeks ago with Senator Phillips. Let us not have the same type of problem tonight.

An Hon. Senator: Are you threatening again?

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Murray: I am asking the honourable senator to place on the record—

Senator Gigantès: If you will stop for a moment, I will read it.

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Murray: I ask the honourable senator to place on the record the statements that are attributed to me within quotation marks and not attribute to me the interpretation of the journalist.

Senator Gigantès: If you will just stop for a moment, I shall do so.

Reading between the quotation marks, then, Senator Lowell Murray said:

"If they get away with this one, they'd be encouraged to repeat the performance on any bill that strikes their fancy."

Senator Murray: Right.

Senator Gigantès: And the journalist says:

In terms of the borrowing bill, the government could easily agree to a compromise with the Liberal senators without adversely affecting the government's borrowing capacity.

Senator Murray: The journalist said that.

Senator Gigantès: I have just said so. Continuing:

But if it does so it will represent a clear political victory for the Liberals and an ominous portent of troubles to come.

Senator Murray: That is the journalist again.

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

An Hon. Senator: Sometimes they speak the truth.

Senator Flynn: Sometimes. Not very often.

Senator Gigantès: The second argument which we have heard from the Progressive Conservatives seems to be that if the House of Commons passes a bill, even in circumstances when the government has not consulted this chamber at all beforehand, this chamber should acquiesce, that it should not discuss the measure but let it pass.

This view asserts that if a bill is passed by the House of Commons, it is perfect. That is what it means. If it is passed by the House of Commons, it is perfect; it has no flaws.

This view asserts that what the majority in the other place wants is, of necessity, right and infallible. That is the only possible conclusion.

What then of the occasions on which, by some procedure or another, the Senate obtained a change in the view held by the majority in the other place? I am referring to those very cases which the Leader of the Government placed before the Finance Committee on February 14 last, on which occasion he said that the Senate's views have been heard by ministers when the Senate produced those views.

This happened because the ministers were prepared to compromise, were prepared to listen. That is not the case now. We were not even consulted.

Senator Roblin thinks that the changes which the Senate suggested and which ministers of previous governments accepted were good changes. So he told the committee. I agree with him.

Are we to understand now that only those changes effected by the Senate should be considered good which have been effected by a Liberal Senate majority on views held by a Liberal Commons majority? That is the only conclusion. If we touch a holy of holies, a sacred trust Tory view, then it is not all right.

There is more to this. Various members of the government have been maintaining that if the House of Commons passes legislation, the Senate must roll over and play dead. What that means is that we would no longer be able to bring about the types of improvements to legislation that the Senate has effected in the past and in respect of which Senator Roblin had praise.

What the Leader of the Government is saying to us, both Liberals and Progressive Conservatives, is that we do not exist and should not exist; that we do not matter. What he is saying is that what we suggest should not even be listened to by the other place; that the type of compromise that has been made in the past should no longer be made. If we do not roll over and play dead, we are menaced by the Honourable Leader of the Government speaking in front of the committee. That was a more implied threat than the one made this evening by Senator Murray. I do not refer to the threats made by Senator Phillips. He is not here, and I must be coming down with a cold because I am beginning to have a sneaking feeling of affection for him.

I am surprised that Senator Murray should stoop so low. In my opinion, it is demeaning to the institution and to its character to have a member of this institution menace other members of the institution because they express their opinion. This is not democratic, and yet we all heard it.

I owe a great debt and obligation to this country. I do not think that I would fulfill this obligation, and even remotely begin to repay this debt, if I were to allow myself to be impressed by threats. And I am convinced that the members of this chamber on both sides will not be impressed by threats. In my opinion, it is demeaning and unworthy to have uttered such threats.

In sum, what is happening here is that the government has shunned normal practice for reaching a reasonable compromise. The government could have tabled the estimates, kept the Commons sitting and had Royal Assent by this Friday. It chose not to do so. The government has caused this crisis. It is a convenient diversion, I repeat, from the public embarrassments of some of its minister so of course, the government says that it is all our fault. This reminds me of a trial during which a man accused of rape pointed to his victim and said to the judge: "This is all her fault, Your Honour. If she had said 'yes' this would not have been rape." Thank you, honourable senators.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order—

Senator Roblin: May I speak to a point of order before my honourable friend speaks? I am attempting to get the flavour of the house as to how the members want this debate to proceed. We have had a pretty stimulating three or four hours' debate on this matter and I suppose that there are still quite a number of members who would speak, if encouraged. I know there are on my side, and I am quite sure it is probably the same on the other side.

However, it occurred to me that there might be some merit in giving consideration to the proposition that, since many of the points—possibly not all but most of them—have been ventilated in the debate so far, we might be willing to draw the debate to a conclusion.

Speaking for myself, if I were allowed to close the debate at this minute, I would be glad to do so. I do not say that that is anything I have any control over. Obviously, it is not. Members will use their discretion as to when they decide they have had enough of speaking on the subject. I simply raise the topic to find out if there is any interest in having an understanding as to how long we want the debate to proceed.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, my point of order was the mention by Senator Gigantès of an article in The Gazette of February 20, about which Senator Lowell Murray took objection and asked Senator Gigantès to quote him properly. I rise on a point of order, or privilege, as the case may be, to finish the quotation properly. In the article, it says, quoting Senator Murray:

'If they get away with this one', said Senator Lowell Murray, one of the Tories on the finance committee, 'they'd be encouraged to repeat the performance on any bill that strikes their fancy.'

The article then continues:

Until now, Senate reform has been low on the government's list of priorities, but that might change. 'If they keep doing this kind of thing for very much longer,' said Murray, 'the prime minister will feel obliged to act on some measure of Senate reform.'

Honourable senators, I say that is unbelievable. Not only did he say it this afternoon. I call it a real threat—

Senator Murray: Far from being unbelievable, I assure my honourable friend that that is exactly what I said, and I was quoted quite accurately.

Senator Guay: I know what you said. That is why I am quoting it, because I would like the record of the Senate Hansard.

Senator Flynn: This is a phony point of order. I ask the Speaker to intervene. This is not a point of order.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, let us call it a point of privilege, then.

Senator Flynn: No, not during the debate—

Senator Guay: Call it what you want; I am telling the truth in any case.

Senator Roblin: I just wonder how far my modest proposal about the course of the debate will go now. In any event, I would like to elicit some response to that idea because, if we could have an understanding as to how far we want to proceed, I think that would be advantageous. There are other items on the order paper which will be dealt with at some time. Perhaps we should not try to deal with everything tonight, but if there is a disposition to conclude the debate, I would certainly be agreeable to such a move.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has suggested that a response be made. It would not be my expectation that this debate would conclude today. I would expect that the debate would continue tomorrow so that the maximum number of members can participate.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend. I am quite agreeable and I recognize the right of the Senate to continue the debate in accordance with our rules.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable Senator Flynn.

Senator McElman: Before Senator Flynn begins, honourable senators, I would like to ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate if he has some compromise to offer that might be of interest to the Senate. If so, perhaps he could seek the indulgence of the house to offer such a compromise and have it considered.

Senator Roblin: If you are talking about a compromise in the proceeding and the time of the debate, I may be able to make some suggestions on that.

Senator McElman: No, I thought it was quite clear that honourable senators who might wish to speak in any debate should have the privilege of doing so.

Senator Roblin: Quite so.

Senator McElman: However, since the Honourable Leader of the Government is speaking on behalf of the government, I thought perhaps he might have some compromise to offer on the part of the government which could have appealed to the senators at large. In that event, it would be useful, of course, if he were to state such a compromise at this point.

Senator Roblin: I cannot really respond to that in a constructive and authoritative sense, because we must realize that the resolution is one which refers the matter back to the committee. The committee will then have to consider what to do. I do not know what the committee will wish to do. If this motion is defeated and the committee does not meet—and I must confess from the tenor of the debate so far, that that seems to be the possible fate of the resolution—then we have to see where we go from there. However, until this debate is concluded, I think it would be premature to consider what move we make after that.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I believe, gave the impression that he would like to see this debate concluded as early as possible. In view of the allegations made by our colleague, Senator Gigantès, that the 1985-86 estimates are already printed and ready to be distributed at the decision of the government, I am wondering whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate would seek permission from his government, as a member of its cabinet, to table the estimates in this chamber. Our committee could then look at these estimates and deal quickly with Bill C-11.

Senator Roblin: To put it very bluntly, I am afraid Senator Gigantès does not know what he is talking about.

Senator Phillips: Would you take last year's estimates?

An Hon. Senator: Senator Gigantès is not here.

Senator Gigantès: I am here, thank you very much.

• (2030)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: You are here, but you are not in your seat.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I have been in the Senate for over 22 years, and I do not remember having taken part in a debate as superficial, artificial and unworthy of this chamber as this one.

I heard the arguments put forward by the Leader of the Opposition, I listened to the senators who spoke today, including those who have been newly appointed and I wondered exactly what they were trying to prove.

The only reason I could find was in the comments we saw in the press and to which the Leader of the Government referred. There is one I would like to read into the record, since it seems to provide the only possible explanation for this very unusual occurrence, which, I hope will not be repeated within the lifetime of this institution.

This morning, in an article by Lise Bissonnette headlined: "Games in the Senate", the newspaper Le Devoir offered the following conclusion:

—our newly appointed Liberal senators who have nothing to do and are bored with petty politics are indulging in some post-electoral kneecapping.

I emphasize the phrase "post-electoral kneecapping . . ."

This should come as no surprise—

I am not surprised either.

This may give the public cause to ask some serious questions about the usefulness of this institution. However, their golden handshakes are blatant enough without making the public pay for their expensive little games. Eventually, it might be advisable to create another kind of Senate, but the Senate we see in action today gives ample justification for requesting the abolition of that institution—

I do not mean this as a threat to Senator Gigantès, nor to Senator Sinclair, who says he couldn't care less, and I am not surprised. Nothing scares him.

I am not worried about the senators but about the institution itself and what value it may have. Honourable senators are aware that I have always been outspoken about the fact that this institution needs major reforms. I agree with the Leader of the Government who said that an elected Senate would be a better institution than what we have now.

I have seen this group of senators for years on this side of the house, keeping quiet, never speaking up if they could help it and following the instructions given by their leader who was himself receiving instructions from the Leader of the Government in the other place, who was, for a time, Senator MacEachen. He gave his instructions to Senator Frith, for instance, who relayed them from the other place. That is an issue raised by the present debate and it will continue to be an issue.

To get back to the editorial by Lise Bissonnette, I was rather amused by the phrase "newly appointed Liberal senators". Indeed, Senator MacEachen is a "newly appointed senator". Senator Sinclair may be a little less newly appointed but not by much. Senator Stewart and Senator Gigantès are also "newly appointed senators".

I noticed that other senators who have had differences of opinion with Senator MacEachen have not spoken in this debate. It would have been interesting, for instance, to see whether Senator Davey would have been able to support the arguments put forward by Senator MacEachen and repeated, without necessarily being understood, by Senators Sinclair, Stewart and Gigantès.

I have not heard a single experienced senator who was willing to support the absurd arguments—and I say this without any hesitation—of Senator MacEachen.

I suppose the only explanation is the one we find in this article, which is that they are seeking revenge. They are seeking revenge for what has been happening in the House of Commons, to soothe their wounded pride and express their partisan feelings. However, this is not the appropriate place. The debate in the House of Commons and the debate in the Senate are separate and distinct.

During the time I have been in the Senate, there has never been any delay of the kind we are experiencing now in connection with this legislation.

Bill C-11 was adopted by the House of Commons on December 21, 1984, more than two months ago. It would have come to us on the twenty-first if we had been sitting that day. Since we were confident that the Liberal majority would use its head and dispose of the bill after the holidays as has been customary in the Senate, we could assume—

[English]

Senator McElman: Do you not remember the Air Canada bill that you and I worked on?

Senator Flynn: What Air Canada bill are you speaking of?

Senator McElman: The one in which we stopped the Minister of Transport cold in his tracks and forced him to accept our amendments before he got the bill.

Senator Flynn: I am not disputing at this time the question of whether the Senate can amend bills; it has done that often, thank God, but that is not the situation in this case. Do not mix things up.

[Translation]

You are not trying to amend the legislation, it is mere filibustering. Your strategy is both despicable and hypocritical. I am going to prove it irrefutably.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Flynn: First of all, I say that contrary—

[English]

Senator McElman: Would you reconsider—

Senator Flynn: Coward! That is the word.

Senator McElman: Would you reconsider that?

Senator Flynn: No, not at all, because I am speaking collectively. You can assess things for yourself and decide whether it applies to you, but collectively I will prove that point. "Coward" is the word I used.

[Translation]

Following this interruption, I come back to my notes. This is against our practice. I remember the days when even the party leaders were asserting that the Senate had nothing to do with finance and borrowing bills. Even their referral to committee was considered as being a useless exercise.

In the days when you were on this side of the house, you would probably have obtained before the Christmas recess our formal agreement, recorded in Hansard, that as soon as we would be back on January 21 or 22, the bill would go through within the next three days. Otherwise the Senate would have been recalled on January 14, that is a week earlier. This we have not done because we said to ourselves that usually this type of legislation is passed within three days. Given those assumed conditions, the Senate was only recalled on January 22 and even, at the end of that week, the bill having been referred to committee, the Senate adjourned for another 10 days.

Now we have a bill passed two months ago by the House of Commons still before us. This is silent filibustering because in committee, as soon as we were through hearing a witness, they did not want to proceed any further. They would say, "Maybe next week we will decide what is to be done." This filibuster is something that goes absolutely against the practices of this house.

Second, the Senate practice concerning borrowing and appropriation bills certainly is to make recommendations, never to obstruct. In matters of finance, and especially appropriation and borrowing, the views of the elected house are paramount. This debate, or the lack of it, this refusal to proceed we are being faced with since we came back from the Christmas recess flies in the face of the Senate's role in this respect.

Let us come now to Senator MacEachen's argument that there is a basic principle that the government is not to be granted any borrowing authority unless it has put before the House the budget or the estimates. In fact, in the November 8, 1984, economic statement of Finance Minister Wilson, the government clearly explained the budget requirements.

[Senator Flynn.]

If we refer to pages 18 and 19 of the French version, we note that total revenues will amount to $70.50 billion and total expenditures to $104,968 billion, which leaves a $29,193 billion deficit for financial requirements excluding exchange operations. This is the situation outlined by the Minister of Finance on November 8.

At that time, we knew that the 1985-86 estimates would amount to about $105 or $104 billion.

What more can you learn by looking at the detailed estimates? Absolutely nothing substantial.

Of course, Senator Sinclair, who does not have a lot of experience in Parliament, but who has a lot of business experience, spoke of being able to look at these estimates. We know that the estimates are examined by House committees throughout the year. There is no way to get a specific and detailed idea of expenditures only by looking at the blue book. This changes nothing. It will confirm within a few million dollars the figures mentioned by the Minister of Finance in his November statement. We know exactly what to expect.

You have all the information you need. When you say that this is a matter of principle, I say that it is a farce, it is spurious and infantile to act in this way and to present such an argument. This is a strategy invented by an old hack like Senator Davey, who has, of course, come back to the Senate. He very humbly admitted that he had been busy elsewhere. Now, he becomes a senator once more and says that he will play his role fully. His first task it seems was to devise this strategy in an effort to make trouble and perhaps to improve the image of the Liberal Party or to console himself about the results of the last election.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Neither suggestion is true.

Senator Flynn: I understand his reaction quite well and I also understand Senator MacEachen for having the same feelings and for recruiting—

● (2040)

[English]

Senator Davey: Senator Flynn has been listening to Senator Phillips too much.

Senator Flynn: I have also been watching Senator Davey very closely.

Senator Davey: I have been watching the honourable senator opposite for years.

Senator Flynn: Yes. Perhaps Senator Davey will tell me that he did not participate in this plot. I am quite sure he is very proud of it up to now, but I am not sure that in the days to come he will be as proud of the consequences of his actions.

I saw Senator Davey in committee, along with Senators Sinclair, Stewart and others.

Senator Davey: On a question of privilege, I really wonder if the fact that I have attended committee meetings with my colleagues, who are friends, indicates that I am part of or head of a plot. That is a fairly serious charge which has no foundation at all.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Well, there are all sorts of plots. Political plots like those I am talking about are not very serious. During most of your political life, I am sure you have plotted with various individuals during election campaigns to pull the wool over people's eyes. I do not see anything wrong with that.

[English]

Senator Davey: Do I remain, in Senator Flynn's view, an honourable senator?

Senator Flynn: Oh, sure.

Senator Davey: Thank you.

Senator Flynn: I can assure him that, in my view, he has not changed a bit since I first met him.

Senator Davey: I am happy to pay Senator Flynn the same compliment.

Senator Argue: Both youthful.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Undoubtedly, when they got together in committee, they thought of delaying the passage of this bill to create a diversion. I find it amusing when Senator Gigantès claims that it is the government, not the opposition, which is creating the diversion. He probably knows the story of the boy who was pulling a cat's tail and, when ordered to stop, claimed that he was not to blame, that the cat was doing all the pulling. That is Senator Gigantès' position.

[English]

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege.

Senator Flynn: Again?

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I am a lover of animals. I have never pulled a cat's tail at any time. I want this clearly understood.

[Translation]

I also wish Senator Flynn would admit he was saying that as a figure of speech and that he did not mean to say I mistreat animals.

Senator Flynn: Don't worry. I won't call the Humane Society.

So my point is there is no justification for the argument based on the tabling date of the main estimates. If we were to agree with the lengthy and I would even say boring argument set forth by Senator Stewart, it would boil down to a full and absolute censure of the opposition in the House of Commons.

You would be telling your Liberal colleagues in the Commons and the NDP members that they did not do their job, that they voted without knowing what they were doing. That is exactly what you are saying today. If you accuse us, you accuse your Liberal colleagues and the NDP members. After all, when they decided to adopt this bill, after a compromise was reached, they knew what was involved, or at least they should have known. Is it the job of the non-elected members of Parliament to tell them what kind of precautions they should take? Do you realize what kind of situation you are creating for Mr. Turner and your Liberal colleagues by saying they did not know what they were doing on December 21? That they were imprudent and abandoned their principles, their basic principles, as Senator Stewart has been repeating ad nauseam? They adopted the bill unanimously. And that is a fact.

I realize that it takes time for newly appointed senators, to quote Lise Bissonnette, it takes time for Senator Stewart, Senator Sinclair, Senator Gigantès, to learn all the subtleties of Parliament. However, it is very dangerous to go along with an argument like the one proposed by the Leader of the Opposition without having had a chance to think about it or to understand what is involved, and then recite the kind of platitudes you have been repeating all afternoon. That is incredible. You swallow that and at the same time you want to teach your colleagues in the other place a lesson. Senator Guay, you know perfectly well that members, as far as borrowing authority bills are concerned—

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Excuse me. I was only saying that Senator Phillips was indulging in a lot of rhetoric. I apologize for commenting while you have the floor.

Senator Flynn: That's all right. I have no objection.

Senator Guay: I did not want to interrupt because I was trying to listen.

Senator Flynn: No, I understand. In fact, I did not expect to be able to explain everything to the honourable senators. I am perfectly aware of this because there are some people who will never be able to understand.

Senator Guay: I find this quite possible to believe when I look at the other side.

Senator Flynn: It is quite possible. Moreover, there is no need to draw you a picture to tell you who I have in mind at this time.

Senator Guay: Me neither; but the problem is that we do not see you as often.

Senator Flynn: Then, Senator MacEachen told us: "We have not been informed." This is not true. You already have the information, and Tuesday, you will have the estimates. You will be willing to pass the bill the next day. Come on. This is nonsense. Who are you kidding when you say that you will be better informed on Tuesday than today? No one will take you seriously. I challenge you to find someone who will.

Now, you are telling us: "Come to a compromise; be nice and accept what we are asking for. Table the estimates and we shall vote for the bill." It is a whim. In the last year, the Senate has seen every one of its vacancies filled with supporters of a government which had lost the confidence of the people. Now the Conservative government has been given a clear and definite mandate by the people in September. If, everytime instead of acting responsibly you were to use your numbers and if we had to give in to all your whims, the government could no longer operate. You know quite well that you cannot expect that. I think that Senator MacEachen will realize eventually that what he has begun here at this time can become an extremely dangerous precedent.

Finally, you will have won because you will have delayed us the passing of the bill. What will be the cost to the Canadian taxpayer? The Minister of Finance says yes. He adds that at least the risk is there and everyone agrees. One cannot make the required calculations in that area. But sure enough this is a kind of filibuster that is carried out under a false, childish pretence and it does not hold water. Such a delay could be costly to Canadians and may jeopardize the Senate's normal operation. This is a dangerous precedent that is undermining the Senate's credibility. On some occasions, your duty is to fight the government, but you made a very wrong choice for that first battle. It is not justified, neither by the subject of the bill nor by your own argument. You have obtained all the useful information, and you will not have any more the day the bill receives Royal Assent. However you will have jeopardized this institution's credibility.

Under the circumstances, if we are to close this debate, one of you who supports that resolution will need to have the courage to tell us exactly at what specific moment the Opposition will agree to support third reading of the bill in order that the issue be placed before all the members of the Senate. I seriously suspect that the opinion held by the Leader of the Opposition is not shared seriously by all the Liberal senators. You should tell us at what time you will be ready to accept the bill and introduce an amendment to the resolution of the Leader of the Government asking the committee to report the bill back next week, but please have the heart to say so.

It is in that sense that I maintain that your strategy was cowardly, because from the outset you never had the heart to say you were only groping in the dark. You are caught in your own snare, with your own problem. You have the baby on your knees, try to get rid of it now. At least do tell us at what time you are ready to let go. Have the heart to suggest a clear solution to the debate.

At that point, we will know where you, as the Leader of the Opposition and the other senators will be sitting. Apparently some of them support the Leader of the Opposition, but I am sure a good number will not be here. I challenge the Leader of the Opposition to prove that the vast majority of the Liberals here endorsed that scheme which is in my view, unworthy of the Senate. It is unworthy of a group of people who oppose a new government with a strong mandate, and which picks on a matter that is so far remote from the Senate's responsibilities as a borrowing bill to say: "No, we are not passing that bill because we do not have adequate information". And you know full well beforehand what you will be getting as far as information is concerned, since you already have to the extent needed for making a decision.

Therefore, I urge the Leader of the Opposition to appoint someone who will tell us at what time you are ready to pass the bill and who will introduce an amendment, so that we know where we stand and stop wasting our time nit-picking as we have now been doing for too long here.

[English]

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I would like to begin my remarks by complimenting Senator Roblin on making such a good plea for such a bad case. He really did a very good job, and I was glad that Senator MacEachen followed him and demolished his case so expertly. I am quite aware of the fact that this is a motion to direct the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to report Bill C-11 forthwith today. I am also aware that most of the debate has taken into account the merits of Bill C-11, which is not surprising, and I shall continue my remarks along the same lines.

I am opposed to the passage of this bill in its present form at this time. I am opposed to it because it is bad parliamentary practice, and we have heard many well documented arguments to verify that in this chamber this afternoon and this evening.

Senator Flynn: You don't believe them.

Senator Hicks: Furthermore, the action would be unprecedented, so far as I can discover, but I do not need to elaborate on that in view of the very elaborate presentation given by Senator Stewart this afternoon, who certainly did his homework. In any event, I agree with the argument that to give a blank cheque to a government to borrow for a future fiscal year without any spending program being outlined, either by way of a budget or even by tabling the main estimates, ought not to be done. We had some indications from Senator Stewart this afternoon that the same Conservatives who now form the government had expressed even stronger views about this when they were in opposition and had insisted, not only that they should see the main estimates before passing the borrowing resolution, but that the legislation should wait until the budget resolution had passed. Frankly, that was the view that I took when I originally addressed myself to Bill C-11. My colleagues persuaded me that we could compromise to the extent of saying that we would allow the bill to be reported after we had a chance to examine the main estimates. That is the situation in which we find ourselves now.

I do not want to be repetitive and I need merely recite that we have no objection to Part I of the bill. We were willing to grant the $7.3 billion borrowing authority for the current fiscal year fully a month ago. However, I am totally opposed to Part II of the bill as, indeed, are all my colleagues on this side of the house.

Senator Murray: But they are going to pass it.

Senator Hicks: In due course, after they have examined the evidence which the honourable senator's colleagues in the other place consistently insisted upon while they were in opposition and to which Liberal governments in those times, even though they had a majority and might have forced such legislation through, gave way. That would have been the gracious thing for the present Minister of Finance to have done.

Senator Flynn: What about your colleagues in the house?

Senator Hicks: I point out that the Progressive Conservative minority opposition opposed similar propositions which the Liberals wrongly tried to have passed, which was well documented by the Leader of the Opposition when he referred to the 1978 episode when the then Finance Minister Chrétien attempted to get borrowing authority for a succeeding fiscal year. He gave way when the Conservative opposition objected strongly to it. Of course, Senator Stewart documented several other instances in his speech this afternoon. I agree with all those.

Interestingly enough, Senator MacEachen also referred to the Progressive Conservatives insisting, while in opposition in 1984, that the Liberal government cut $5 billion from the borrowing authority which otherwise would have been sustained today and would have prevented them from getting in such a hassle over the present borrowing bill before us now. The birds have come home to roost. That is ironic, but they may very well have been right in insisting that the Liberal government cut that $5 billion.

I want to make one or two other remarks. The Minister of Finance alleges that delaying the passage of Part I of this bill may have added or may add to the cost of borrowing. I think Senator Sinclair dealt very adequately with that assertion and I cannot deal as well with it. I know something of the difficulty in predicting reliably the future cost of money. We made it clear on January 23, exactly four weeks ago today, that we would not oppose Part I of the bill. Money may cost more today or it may cost less next week. Who knows? However, if the Minister of Finance felt a month ago that delay would increase the cost of borrowing he should have accepted Part I of the bill and abandoned or, more accurately, delayed his insistence on the inclusion of Part II, and all his problems would have been solved.

Senator Guay: Right on!

Senator Hicks: Again, I repeat that that is exactly what the Liberals did in 1978 and on the other occasions to which Senator Stewart referred and documented for us this afternoon. I suggest that the present situation is due entirely or nearly entirely to the stubbornness and intransigence of the present government, particularly the Minister of Finance. I am encouraged to underline the view by the evidence that we have had today—though it is perhaps not provable in a court of law—that the main estimates have been ready for tabling for some days and they might have been before the other place and this house earlier this week. It makes one wonder if the holding up of those main estimates was not an outcome of the stubbornness and intransigence of the Minister of Finance, who wanted to see if he could force the Senate to do what he would not have allowed the Liberal government to do when he was in opposition, hold up the main estimates so we could not see them until we had granted the borrowing authority.

Senator Haidasz: Shame!

Senator Flynn: You won't even look at them.

Senator Hicks: I will look at them.

Senator Flynn: Oh no you won't.

Senator Hicks: I realize that there is some speculation—

Senator Flynn: Be serious.

Senator Argue: He wants to see what has been cut.

Senator Hicks: I am serious. I realize that there is some speculation in this assertion but it looks to me from what we have heard in this house and elsewhere today that this is true.

The other thing that amazes me about this whole debate is that there has been no explanation whatsoever and no apology for the different attitude of the Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues today compared with their views of a very few years ago which they expressed when they were in opposition. I would have thought that someone would have felt it necessary to try to justify the 180 degree turnabout on the part of the Minister of Finance, the Deputy Prime Minister and others in the Conservative Party in the other place. Also, I am not the least bit concerned—

Senator Flynn: That is not true.

Senator Hicks: Of course, it is true.

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Hicks: Were you not here this afternoon? Did you not hear Senator Stewart?

Senator Flynn: I heard him.

Senator Hicks: How can you dispute his documentation from the records of the House of Commons?

● (2110)

Senator Flynn: Oh come on! You have all of the information you need. You will not know any more when you have the blue book. That is it. You have never understood. Try to get that into your head.

Senator Hicks: This is not the view that the present Minister of Finance took in 1978 and on those other occasions already referred to. But I do not want to get into a dogfight with Senator Flynn. I did not interrupt him when he was speaking, notwithstanding the fact that he made some statements with which I disagreed violently. Perhaps he will let me finish my remarks uninterrupted.

The threat that the Senate will be interfered with if it does not bow to the majority vote in the House of Commons has no weight with me whatsoever.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hicks: I am ashamed that threats of that type have actually been made by some honourable senators on the other side of this house. This is absurd. If that is the view we have of the Senate, then I think we should agree voluntarily to its abolition.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hicks: If the Senate is not entitled to take a position different from that of the House of Commons, then let's agree voluntarily to its abolition.

The British North America Act sets out very clearly that, while we cannot add to money bills, we can curtail expenditures set out in money bills. We are certainly within our constitutional rights in what we are doing now.

The allegation that Liberal senators should be bound by the actions of the House of Commons falls into exactly the same category. This is a matter within the Liberal Party, but we are an independent house, and the fact that I am a Liberal senator in no way means—

Senator Flynn: A Liberal-controlled house.

Senator Hicks: —that I have to agree with the actions that were taken in the other place. Senator Flynn, I am sure, will agree that I have, on several occasions since I have been in this place, voted against government measures when I felt it was right to do so, and I shall continue to do so. On this occasion, I am entirely in agreement with what my colleagues are doing.

Senator Flynn: Of course.

Senator Hicks: The last statement that Senator Flynn made was that what the Liberal senators are doing constitutes a dangerous precedent. Not so. The passage of this motion and this bill under the present circumstances would be a very dangerous precedent, a precedent not before seen in our parliamentary history.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hicks: For this reason, honourable senators, we are insisting upon a sound parliamentary principle and practice, and we shall continue to insist upon it. Hence, we will not support this motion.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, Senator Hicks has, I hope, set a trend for shorter speeches for the rest of the evening. I am going to try to emulate him, at least with respect to the quantity of the remarks that I pass.

I have listened carefully to this debate today and, while at times it has been enjoyable, there have been times when I have had intimations of unreality coming in upon me. I am not quite sure where in fact all of this is leading. As I listen to the contributions of the members of the other party, I am unclear as to what they want.

I hear now that the production of the main estimates will bring about a profound transformation of judgment—judgment based upon not just what is in the bill but on the most profound views as to the value of the second chamber.

I have been on the Hill for 28 years and I have heard those heavy tomes drop 28 times, and I have yet to see them bring about the claimed transformation—the intellectual thunderbolt that I have heard referred to several times today.

I have noted, especially this evening—a very poor time for people to be making speeches or to be listening to them—a concern about threats.

My usually genial colleague, Senator Murray, has become a bête noire. He has been making terrible threats, acting like a fierce dragon; a terrible man so it has been said.

He, of course, can look after himself, and always could. But I think that there has been some abandonment of realism in honourable senators saying that the course being pursued by the majority of this chamber is not one that is bound to arouse bitter public criticism.

We all know that people have written of, and hoped for, Senate reform for years and years and years. I have had to put a new shelf in my library to accommodate all of the reports dealing with Senate reform. Everybody knows what to do with it. Some people think that if senators were elected, everything would be great. I say that with both houses elected, you would really have confrontation. In any event, we will see about that.

As Senator Roblin mentioned in his excellent speech this afternoon, there is danger in this for the Senate.

What do you suppose the public of Canada will think, and will say, if this non-elected body carries out a course of non-action that costs the taxpayers of this country millions of dollars—

Senator Haidasz: Not so.

Senator Macquarrie: —at a time when they are deeply concerned about economic issues.

Senator Hicks, in his very concise and excellent speech—wrong in some ways, of course, but a good speech—quoted the British North America Act.

If one looks at the British North America Act, one will find that this Senate is one of the most powerful second chambers in the whole world. But we know that in reality it is not.

The Senate has preserved itself. It has survived. It has survived because always there were people with sufficient wisdom to stop it from moving into the formal area of its powers; always, there were people with sufficient wisdom to keep it within the realm of common sense.

In the Speaker's Chambers there are some Latin inscriptions on the wall, one of which is sapere aude—dare to be prudent.

And I would invite the Liberal majority, with all of the muscle that it can flex—and I read Senator Frith's comments about these threats—to dare to be prudent, to dare to be wise.

Someone said earlier today that he doesn't care whether the Senate is abolished. I do care—not that I will personally be here all that long and not that I do not realize that the Senate can get along without me, but because it is a body that should not be foolishly altered, and certainly not abolished.

As its changing status is undertaken, it should not result from a hasty act of obstruction, such as the present one—and I use that word advisedly.

We talk about prudence and we talk about wisdom; but one of the essential elements of wisdom is to know something about timing.

What a time, as Senator Murray mentioned, for the non-elected body to take on the elected!

• (2120)

Robert Borden used to say to Wilfrid Laurier, when the Liberals were scuppering the legislation of the government of that day, "You will stand up and say that you are not bound by the House of Commons and make great statements about independence, but you will bind yourself to the minority of the House of Commons. That is what you are doing." However, that is not the situation today; all parties supported this bill. I do not know about the Liberal Party. Like Senator Phillips, I have never been in their caucus, but in the Conservative caucus members of both houses are members. Some years ago, a historian wrote that R.B. Bennett had ordered the senators out of the Conservative caucus. At the time, I talked to Arthur Meighen about that. Imagine ordering Arthur Meighen out! His reply was that of course he could do that. The caucus is a coming together of all the parliamentarians. It is not up to a leader or a prime minister to invite them or not invite them.

In our party, we senators are there. We sometimes keep quiet because the young bloods do not always want to be coached by the old-timers; the old-timers can sometimes be boring. However, what is done in the national caucus binds us. We have a chance to be there and give our views, and once in a while we are listened to.

Senator MacEachen: Binds your actions in the Senate? You said that it binds you. Do you mean you are bound by the actions of the members of that caucus?

Senator Macquarrie: In our caucus, Senator MacEachen—and again there may be a profound gulf fixed here—when a decision is taken, I consider myself bound by that while I am in the party. If I cannot do that, I then must go through certain motions of intellectual separation, if nothing else. In any event, I thought that this was a pretty general way of proceeding, and I am convinced that it is.

There is an old story that a majority in the non-elected house usually is called in as a sort of avenging angel for the defeated party in the other house. It is interesting that the only chamber in the whole country today that has a Liberal majority is this one, and it is using that majority. The day may come when it can use it with wisdom and with great effect, but I say—

Senator MacEachen: I hear senators say all the time that that day will come when we all reach our 75th year.

Senator Macquarrie: I, too, hear that all over the place. You and I are far too young to be thinking along those lines. I used to tell Stanley Knowles, over in the other place, that when I was 74 and one-half years old, I would support the bill that he proposed that would abolish this chamber, but not until then.

Senator Guay: You, too, will get the cheque that Stanley Knowles is receiving.

Senator Macquarrie: I have already received mine, and most welcome it is, too, if I may say so. There is nothing like cushioning old age with a little cheque every month.

I promised that I would be brief, but I am concerned about the growing ill-will in the press and among the people of Canada. Senator Roblin did not complete his reading of the editorial from the Telegraph Journal. I hope no one is offended when I say that that is a pretty sedate paper. That editorial winds up by saying:

The Liberal senators seem to be using their power play to test the nerve of the Mulroney government. But if a principal result is to make life more difficult for ordinary Canadians with loans and mortgages to pay, the stalling tactic could backfire.

And so say I.

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, in rising to speak on Bill C-11, I do so mindful of some of the things that Senator Murray said in his remarks.

May I say at the outset that I rise to speak as a member of what he called the “hit team” for this particular issue and for this particular debate. I think it is only fair, at the outset, that I say to Senator Murray how much I appreciate his compliment. It seems to me that, if one looks at the concept of “hit team” or “SWAT team,” as it is popularly used these days by teenagers and others, one discovers that it is a modern version of what many years ago would have been regarded as a “gun slinger.” The nice thing about being regarded as a member of a “hit team” is that it is good to be up-to-date, whereas it seems to me that the Leader of the Government in the Senate much prefers to be thought of in quite an old-fashioned role, that of a “gun slinger.” I would therefore like to thank Senator Murray for his compliment.

The second thing I would like to say at the outset is that, as the fifth Nova Scotian senator to speak in this debate, I would like to compliment Senator MacDonald on his maiden speech today. While pointing out that I am the fifth Nova Scotian senator to speak on this issue, in fairness to Senator Murray, although he is a senator from Ontario, I think all of us from Nova Scotia regard him as one of our own. In effect, then, I am the sixth Nova Scotian to speak today on this matter. To my mind, this is tremendous testimony to the fact that political parties and democracy are certainly very strong and alive in one of the four provinces that formed this country in 1867.

During my attendance at all of the meetings of the committee, and in listening to the debate today, I have been repeatedly asking myself one very simple question. That question was alluded to in Senator MacDonald's remarks, which I thought were very pertinent. The question essentially is this: Why is it that an issue such as this has evolved over the last four weeks into an issue in which, effectively, there appears to have been, at least on the side of the government, essentially little or no compromise? Why is it that we wind up in the position we are in today, dealing with the motion that was introduced by the Leader of the Government in the Senate yesterday, and the debate on which started today? It seems to me that one has to look back over the last four weeks to try to understand what led us to our current situation. If we go back—

Senator Flynn: You must go back further than four weeks. You can go back to the election.

Senator Kirby: I would go back four weeks, Senator Flynn, because it was four weeks ago tomorrow, as Senator Hicks so rightly pointed out, that the committee first met to deal with this issue. During every meeting of that committee, not one minute has been wasted in dealing with Part I of this bill, the part of this bill which could have been in effect four weeks ago tomorrow. From the very outset, at every committee meeting, it was stated unanimously by all of the senators that we would be perfectly prepared to pass that part of the bill immediately and, indeed, it could have had Royal Assent four weeks ago tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: That is not the case, because the bill would have to be returned to the House of Commons and the House, in fact, passed the whole bill.

Senator Kirby: The fact of the matter is, Senator Flynn, that the first part of this bill would have cleared this house four weeks ago. The fact is that, had the first part of that bill gone back to the House of Commons where, according to Senator Flynn a moment ago, it had received unanimous consent, it would have received Royal Assent long ago and all of the issues which the Leader of the Government in the Senate insisted upon raising today—and I will deal with them in a moment—would have been totally irrelevant.

There has been no willingness to understand that fact, and no acceptance publicly of the fact by the government, and certainly no acceptance by government spokesmen in this chamber that they could have had Part I a long time ago.

Therefore, if one looks at that sequence of events, one must look beyond them and ask: Why is it that the government members in this house have been unwilling to offer any element of compromise?

I think Senator Hicks gave a very good description of what he called the 180 degree turnaround—what Senator Haidasz earlier today called the flip-flop; what Senator Stewart so very carefully documented in terms of statements made in the past by a variety of current government ministers, all the way from the Deputy Prime Minister, to the current Minister of Finance, to the current Minister of Energy, to the current Minister of Employment and Immigration, and on and on. All of those people, who are now government ministers, argued a position based on a matter of principle. Their matter of principle was that there should be no passage of borrowing authority prior to the tabling of the estimates.

● (2130)

In fact, if one goes back to the quotation Senator Stewart gave earlier today, the current Minister of Finance argued that not only should there be estimates, but there should also be a budget. So, the fact of the matter is that if one looks back at the history of this issue and the position on it as taken by government spokesmen when they were in opposition, one finds a long history of their arguing the exact position that the current members of the opposition in the Senate have been arguing at the committee meeting and in this chamber today.

Senator Flynn: No!

Senator Kirby: I have been fascinated by the remarks Conservative senators have made when they alluded in a variety of ways to the fact that the expression by all of us of our views on this issue, and indeed the expression of the majority view, in some way threatens the existence of the Senate. I should like to echo what Senator Hicks has said in that regard, which was, that if this is such a fragile institution that this expression of views on a matter of a principle—as very clearly set out by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, by Senator Stewart, Senator Sinclair and others over a period of only four weeks—is a problem, then this is a very fragile institution indeed. Let me remind you that this has not been going on for six months or for a year; the delay has only been a four week one. We were first given the bill just four weeks ago. If this delay is sufficient to cause a number of senators to start talking about the ultimate demise of this institution, then I think we need to have a far more fundamental debate, and question whether this institution ought to be here at all.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Kirby: The fact of the matter is that even when the Conservative Party was in a minority position—not in a majority position—in the other place and made their arguments on the matter of principle I have just discussed, the government of the day accepted those arguments, accepted their position in principle, and modified its position so that in fact—

Senator Flynn: It did in the present case in the other place.

Senator Kirby: Senator Flynn, as usual you are making my point far better than I can.

Senator Flynn: That is not difficult.

Senator Kirby: The fact of the matter is that even when the Conservative Party was in a minority position in the other place, their will prevailed, and that became the ultimate view of Parliament.

Having said that, and having seen that view prevail from a minority party, I find it unbelievably strange that the same spokesmen should do the 180 degree turnaround that Senator Hicks has talked about, or the flip-flop that Senator Haidasz has talked about, and should suddenly argue that the majority view should not prevail here, and that the matter of principle should be abandoned.

Having thought about that, I suppose I really should not be all that surprised because over the past six months we have seen some remarkable flip-flops by the government on a whole variety of issues. I cannot help but mention in passing the notion that universality, which was a sacred trust last summer, suddenly became an issue for discussion by October, and ultimately in the face of strong public opposition, that position changed.

I cannot help but recall reading statements made by a number of government spokesmen when they were in opposition regarding open government, and now watching the incredible way in which the arguments for open government have turned into arguments for closed government and managed news since the government changed.

I suppose I should not be too surprised that on the issue we are dealing with today a flip-flop has occurred. It was to be expected. I suppose that that is simply the kind of government we will be faced with for the next four years.

Senator Flynn: Four years!

Senator Kirby: My surprise does come, however, in looking at the way in which the Leader of the Government in the Senate argued his position today. He made a series of arguments which I must say I found incredibly strange, one of which was—and I believe Senator MacEachen touched on it—that he seemed to claim that he had to introduce the motion we are debating now because the committee had adjourned to the call of the Chair and that he had no way of knowing whether or not the committee would ever meet.

I apologize for not having a copy of the leader's remarks, but I believe that that is the essence of the position taken by the Leader of the Government.

The fact of the matter is that since Monday evening a member of the Conservative Party has been the Acting Chairman of that committee. Senator Kelly has been the Acting Chairman of that committee since Monday evening. Therefore, if the committee is adjourned to the call of the Chair, one has to presume that Senator Kelly has discussions with his leader, although I sometimes wonder why he would do that. One has to assume that the government leader knew that it would have been easy to arrange a committee meeting. Therefore, the failure to have a meeting cannot be any pretext for having the debate we are having here today.

The second thing that intrigued me was the fact that the leader introduced a series of interesting, but, may I add, totally extraneous issues. One of the issues he introduced had to do with what was happening to the Canadian dollar. He tried to make the linkage that the falling of the Canadian dollar was, in some way, related to the failure of this chamber to deal with this bill.

I happen to believe that his argument is totally extraneous, but since he has raised that issue, I cannot resist giving one 60-second quotation from the then opposition member, Michael Wilson, now Minister of Finance Wilson, in Commons Debates of June 15, 1982. I simply read two sentences which seem to me to apply very much to the question of the falling dollar.

Mr. Wilson said, and I quote:

There have been many times in the past when the Canadian dollar and the U.S. dollar are strong against other currencies, but why is the Canadian dollar weak and the U.S. dollar strong today?

He then went on to answer his question as follows, and I quote:

The level of the dollar is the verdict of the marketplace; it is the barometer of the success or, as in this case, the failure of government policies.

I use that example to merely illustrate the fact that in the past the current Minister of Finance took the position that the falling of the dollar was a direct result of government policies. It is interesting that that position taken by the Minister of Finance was not mentioned today when the Leader of the Government in the Senate was speaking.

I now turn to the question of—getting back to the initial issue I raised at the beginning of my remarks—why is it that we have been unable to reach a compromise? Why is it that Senator Roblin, for example, has steadfastly and inflexibly hung on to the position that in no circumstances is any compromise possible? Indeed, he has gone to the extreme in the committee of referring to the matter of principle—which I think has been eloquently spoken to here today by a number of speakers, including Senators MacEachen, Stewart, Sinclair and Hicks—as a “mere technicality” at one committee meeting and a “nicety” at a subsequent meeting.

That issue has been debated in the other place ad nauseam on a variety of occasions, as historically pointed out so well by Senator Stewart, so I have great difficulty with a concept which says that an item is a matter of principle when one is in opposition but suddenly becomes a “mere technicality” or a “nicety” when one is in government, and when it happens to become extraordinarily expedient to change the principle.

My fundamental problem with this piece of legislation in the form that it is in now, and in the absence of the estimates, is that this chamber is essentially being asked to abandon all principles related to government expenditure procedures and borrowing authority bills and to sacrifice them on the altar of expediency.

So, faced with that problem, I keep coming back to the same question—and the committee had before it three different ministers, all of whom were asked the same question. We had before us the Deputy Minister of Finance who was asked the same question. Senator Roblin in this chamber was asked the same question. The question was simply this: What is the urgency of Part II? Since the last clause of this bill states:

This Part shall come into force on April 1, 1985.

Why is it that this part of the bill must inevitably and irrevocably be linked to Part I? That is the question we asked at every committee meeting. We have also asked it repeatedly in this chamber, and the only answer we have received was given to us this afternoon by Senator Murray, when he said that the fundamental problem, as he saw it, was that returning any portion of the borrowing authority bill to the other place would open up a debate that would consume time, and that was something the government did not want to do.

● (2140)

We have a very interesting problem. First, the government is saying that it is merely in the interests of the management of the time of government business in the other place that we are being asked, in this chamber, to break a principle we regard as fundamental.

Second, I happen to find Senator Murray's argument incredible in light of the fact that there is no government legislation. One could understand, if the order paper were absolutely chock-full, that he might then have a point. The fact of the matter is that there has been little or nothing introduced in the way of government legislation. Indeed, as you all know, this chamber had to adjourn for a week simply because there was no government business to keep it busy.

Finally, when one looks at the issues raised by many members of the Conservative Party, all of which have been alluded to as threats—I believe that word has been used several times today—they seem to be saying the following: If we in this chamber do not automatically, by definition, adopt every piece of legislation that the government tells us to, on the date and according to the timetable that the government specifies, then we are in danger of being abolished. I would like to echo the words which were used by Senator Hicks and others here today, which were: If we are in a position where that is all we can do, then we ought to have a very serious debate about whether we ought to be here at all, because that is a ridiculous position to be in.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Kirby: It seems to me, therefore, that the arguments made by Senators Roblin, Murray and others apply not only to this bill. That is what is bothering me. Their arguments vis-à-vis the future of the Senate and vis-à-vis the role of the Senate—remembering that we have had the bill for only four weeks—apply to any piece of legislation. If, in fact, they really believe those arguments, then they are taking a fundamental position with regard to the future of this chamber.

In light of that, let me point out one other thing to them. Senator Roblin, in the course of his comments today, quoted clearly a statement from the press that questioned the continued existence of the Senate as we know it.

It seems to me that the Senate itself, in a report tabled in this chamber less than a year ago, seriously questioned the existence of the Senate in its present form. I do not know why we should be suddenly upset because the media start asking that question. It seems to me it is a question we have all posed.

In any proposal for Senate reform that has been seriously discussed in this chamber, in Parliament or, indeed, in federal-provincial conferences in the last 10 years, one key element has always been that the Senate maintain a suspensive veto. I say to you today, honourable senators, that is all that has transpired in the course of discussion of this piece of legislation. There has been no attempt to amend the bill and there has been no attempt to defeat the bill.

Senator Flynn: Obstruction.

Senator Kirby: All that has happened is that we have suspended the passage of the bill and have kept the bill in committee for four weeks.

If the vote of a suspensive veto is no longer to be considered a vote for the Senate, then I suggest to you once again that we are essentially making the argument for our own demise.

Having looked at all the options, I finally came to the conclusion that the real reason for the inflexibility on the part of the government is contained in the statement read into the record by Senator Guay earlier today. In his reply, Senator Murray confirmed the statement, which is contained in the Gazette of today. It states:

“If they get away with this one,” said Senator Lowell Murray . . . “they’d be encouraged to repeat the performance on any bill that strikes their fancy.”

In spite of the offers Senator MacEachen made as recently as Monday to the Minister of Finance, when he said that, if uncertainty was the issue, we would guarantee passage of this bill within 72 hours of the estimates being tabled—and if he had wanted more than certainty, he could have had Part I last Monday or four weeks ago—we have seen absolutely no attempt at reaching a compromise solution on the part of the government. What we are really seeing is a very interesting phenomenon in which it appears that Senator Murray and some of his colleagues have taken the view that any element of compromise or any element to reach an accommodation with the other side in this chamber is going to be viewed as a sign of weakness, which will be regarded by the opposition side of this chamber as a sign of its strength; and, thereafter, to quote Senator Murray again, the run will be on and the opposition would be encouraged to repeat the performance “on any bill that strikes their fancy.”

Having had some modest experience, not in this chamber but in dealing with provincial legislatures and both sides of the federal Parliament, it seems to me that, if the government members of this chamber are going to take the view, which has been eloquently, clearly and truthfully put by Senator Murray, that any element of compromise in the future, any element of discussion in reaching an accommodation with the other side, will be treated as a sign of weakness, then we are in for a very fascinating, but very rough, four years.

I would suggest to Senator Murray that, while it is not in the interest of the bravado stand he wants to take—simply taking the position that he has to win every fight on every single issue, every step of the way, and that he is not prepared to be flexible on anything—to the extent that he and his colleagues continue to take that position, he will make the effective management of this chamber, the effective management of government business and the effective role that I genuinely believe this chamber can play for the Canadian people increasingly difficult, if not impossible.

Therefore, I would hope that once this measure is over, Senator Murray will reconsider his position.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Kirby: Finally, in closing, honourable senators, let me repeat what I said a number of times before the committee, and that is simply this: The issue before us is a matter of principle. It is an issue which the government itself could have solved four weeks ago. It is an issue which the Liberal members of the committee have indicated very clearly will be solved within 72 hours of the tabling of the main estimates.

We have been told today by Senator Roblin that that will be next Tuesday. We know now that, regardless of what happens between now and then, this issue will be dealt with and finished by the end of next week.

For the sake of the few days that are at stake in this issue, I, for one, think it would be extremely wrong of us to proceed to violate the principle that the Conservative Party has so strongly argued for over the years. I believe that it would be wrong, simply for the sake of expediting matters by three or four days, to compromise that principle in parliamentary tradition and precedent. Therefore, I do not intend to support the motion.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, it has been a long time since I rose in this chamber to speak at this late hour. However, I will start my speech this evening and possibly continue tomorrow.

Much has been said about—

Senator Flynn: You can talk all night if you want to.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, am I going to be obstructed from the word go in this debate?

Honourable senators, during my maiden speech in this Chamber, Senator Roblin attempted to stifle my freedom of speech, and I will certainly not take any of this from Senator Flynn. You have had your turn, honourable senators, and it is now our turn. If you are tired, you can leave, the door is open, and just go to bed.

Senator Flynn: I feel fine.

Senator Guay: He feels fine.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, a lot was said about a three party agreement allegedly in effect in the House of Commons while Bill C-11 was being considered. However, if we look at Hansard for the House of Commons, there was no mention anywhere of any actual or possible participation by the Senate or by honourable senators, either in drafting or discussing the compromise arrived at by the members. Therefore, what was said in the course of this debate by, for instance, Senator Phillips and others, both here and elsewhere, is pure fiction on the part of government members who are desperately trying to get out of the mess into which they got themselves in the first place. They are doing this to confuse public opinion and to make the public hostile to this institution by putting it in the worst possible light, and I regret to say that they have partially succeeded. However, we shall all have to bear the consequences.

This kind of manoeuvring is partisan and political, and shows no respect for our parliamentary traditions. Furthermore, the government and the press generally have failed to consider the circumstances in which a compromise was reached in the House of Commons.

What were those circumstances and do they apply to the present situation in the Senate today? I say they do not. The circumstances are entirely different. In fact, the situation has changed completely.

In the House of Commons it was just before Christmas. Honourable senators will recall that the opposition parties in the Commons had been after the government for days and weeks to define its policies on the universality of social programs, an issue that was causing considerable concern among all Canadian taxpayers and especially among the elderly. It was therefore on the last sitting day before Christmas. The Liberal opposition and the New Democratic Party had been unable to obtain any concessions from the government on a day of debate on the principle of universality. In its supreme arrogance, the government refused to give in until the opposition made a minor concession on Bill C-11. However, the opposition parties did not compromise on the principle of Bill C-11. They did reach a compromise on the scheduling of the debate in the House of Commons.

Senator Flynn: It was adopted unanimously.

• (2150)

[English]

Senator Corbin: They got their pound of flesh. The bill was adopted without a recorded vote. But, let me tell you, reread the speeches of the Honourable Donald Johnston and Mr. Riis and you will find that in line after line they affirm the ancient principle that there will be no borrowing authority granted until the government tables its estimates.

I will not review those arguments. They were presented in very brilliant fashion today by a number of speakers, in terms that a child could understand, in terms that journalists should understand, if only they would put their minds to work once in a while instead of running after gossip and hearsay.

[Translation]

The government, therefore, would not allow a debate on universality, which was the main concern of the Canadian people at the time. Without jeopardizing this principle, the House went along with what the government was asking. That is what happened and the vote was never recorded. God knows what would have been the result of that vote. We can guess, judging from the vote on the NDP amendment. The governing party crushed the joint opposition in the House of Commons. Should these parties have kept up their fight? That was their decision, and I respect it.

[English]

But here, in the Senate, it is a new ball game as far as I am concerned, and I will not buy the argument that I am not a representative member of Parliament.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Corbin: I do not buy that. As far as I am concerned, my service to my constituents and to my country, as a new member of the Senate, continues—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Corbin: —and it will be as unflinching as it was when I was a member of the other house.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Corbin: And I will respect my oath.

Senator Flynn: Compliment yourself.

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: So the basic principle of denying the government borrowing authority so long as its estimates have not been tabled has been maintained.

[English]

That principle may have gone through the meat grinder, but it survives, and it will survive session after session, Parliament after Parliament, as it has survived in the past, because that is fundamental to Parliament. It has been like that for centuries, and it will continue. Whether or not this house continues to exist is not for me to say.

In my book, the fact that a partisan majority in the House of Commons, of whatever stripe it is—blue, red, green, call it what you want—is able to crush a combined opposition and an amendment based on principle and on established parliamentary practice, does not give that party or the Crown the right to ride roughshod over the rest of Parliament, over the Senate. The amendment may be crushed, but the practice and the principle live on.

[Translation]

Of all the comments I have heard in this debate, and my intention was to refer to that even if many of the senators who spoke before me raised the question, I must say that Senator Murray's comments especially troubled me. While he probably intended to give his words the effect of cannon fire, they rather had the smell of a firecracker.

Under the circumstances, while recognizing his democratic right to speak, I must conclude that it would have been better if he had remained silent, because by brandishing the threat of Senate reform in the terms he used, he lowered himself along with this institution.

Certainly I did not feel personally concerned, because as a great democrat I am all for Senate reform. I favour a representative Senate. I said so during my first weeks in the House of Commons 16 years ago. I have not wavered on that. God knows if we have made efforts and attempts to correct that problem.

It is my feeling that the current government, if it wants to address in turn the task of reforming the Senate in cooperation with the provinces, in a spirit either of vengeance or creativity, will realize it is no easy matter.

In any case I have not come to the Senate as a repentant. My position has not changed. I must say that Senator Murray's comments are simply one form of blackmail. He got stuck in his reasoning. I do not know how he will get out of it. However, his words are fraught with consequences. They show a strange resemblance to the comments made by Lise Bissonnette, editorial writer for Le Devoir as quoted by Senator Flynn. This is an editorial I have difficulty holding in my hands for all its partisanship, its oneness, its ignorance.

What is funnier still is that the title, "Senate Games", appears below the newspaper's slogan: "Fais ce que dois". The sad thing in the circumstances is that Le Devoir is doing only half its work. It should set the options before the public. It has failed to do so. It did not even attempt to do so. Le Devoir is already sold to the concept of Senate abolition. So is Mrs. Bissonnette, so is Jean-Louis Roy.

However, I would like to quote the words of that newspaper's founder, Henri Bourassa when he spoke during the naval debate under Borden.

Honourable senators will recall that at that time, Borden was speaking to a public which had been handed out small

[Senator Corbin.]

Union Jacks, but this is unimportant. Borden was reviewing his naval policy, stressing the seriousness of the situation in England and threatening to reform the Senate if it refused to approve the measure. History is repeating itself.

The purpose of the then legislation clearly is different from that of the bill now before us. But the principle is the same. He threatened to reform the Senate if it refused to approve the measure. Senator Murray could not have said it better.

But Bourassa, founder of Le Devoir, the paper who is now asking that the institution be abolished had this to write:

That threat has not been issued by the statesmen or the gentlemen, but by the leader or rather the instrument of an arrogant faction led by ingoism and gold from the armaments trust. The Senate would be unworthy of its role, it would deserve public scorn were it to bow before that gross blackmail.

● (2200)

[English]

Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Flynn: I do not understand. Does it mean that there is a refusal to vote on the motion? Is the filibuster to be continued?

Senator Argue: One day's debate is not a filibuster.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I indicated earlier that we would like to continue the debate tomorrow and, accordingly, my colleague moved the adjournment of the debate. I thought the Leader of the Government and I established earlier the understanding that we would continue the debate tomorrow. It is within our right to move the adjournment of the debate, and we do not intend to be intimidated by the honourable senator who has made a practice tonight of disrupting the proceedings.

Senator Roblin: Speaking on the point of order, it is perfectly true that my honourable friend said that he intended to speak tomorrow, but there was no agreement, as far as I am concerned, about adjourning the debate. That was his statement and it certainly was not accepted by me in any way whatsoever. I think this house ought to continue its discussions tonight for some considerable time yet. It is only a little after 10 o'clock.

Senator MacEachen: The motion, please.

Senator Roblin: I have to admit that the motion is not debatable, but I warn you that I shall call for a standing vote on it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Corbin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Gigantès, that the debate on this motion be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

The motion now before the house is to the effect: That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to report on Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, later this day.

This is my point of order: if the Senate votes for the adjournment, it will become impossible for the committee to report on this bill later this day.

Consequently, the motion would become meaningless. In other words, the vote is on the substance of the motion as much as on the motion to adjourn.

I would really like some clarification on this point.

● (2220)

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I would like to hear from other senators on the point of order that has been raised by Senator Flynn.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the motion before the house is a motion to adjourn the debate, and that motion is not debatable. It is, I think, fully in order.

The motion moved by the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not before the Senate at the present time. The motion for which honourable senators have been called is the motion to adjourn the debate on the motion moved by the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Roblin: I think, however, the point of order is of some interest because the information sought by my colleague relates to the fate of the resolution and the adjournment that accompanies it. He wants to know whether the phrase "later this day" will be interpreted tomorrow as being later this day, meaning the date on which the vote on the main motion is taken. If that is the case, that would certainly suit me. However, the point is one on which, perhaps, there may be some difference of opinion and for which we might require a ruling. Therefore, I think it in order for us to ask His Honour to tell us whether, in his opinion, the term "later this day" means effective the day the resolution is decided by the Senate, rather than the day on which it is introduced.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I fully agree with the interpretation that the Leader of the Government has put forward: that the motion, if dealt with tomorrow, in his phraseology, would be fully relevant tomorrow. It is frequently the custom in legislative assemblies to say "later this day" in relation to a matter being dealt with, and the custom is, further, that it takes its place on the order paper and does not lose its relevancy as a result of "later this day" itself becoming outdated. If one were to accept the notion that "later this day" meant the day upon which the motion was moved, then the motion itself would have a self-imposed time limit and, therefore, that would not be my interpretation, and I support the interpretation which the Leader of the Government in the Senate wishes to give. I apologize if I misunderstood the point of order made by Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: I maintain that, in my view, the intention of the motion is certainly that the vote should be taken on the day of presentation. Otherwise, it would be too easy to do as has been done today; in other words, pursue the debate indefinitely. When you want the committee to report today, and you have the Senate saying, "No, it can be any day in the future," then the motion entirely loses its object or its purpose. It is obvious to me that the intention is quite clear in the motion itself. If we adjourn tonight, the motion is dead. You are voting against the substance of that motion at the same time as you are voting for the adjournment.

Senator MacEachen: That is not my view, honourable senators. I would think that if one were to accept the interpretation that is being suggested by Senator Flynn, then there would be a self-imposed time limit on a particular motion, and one could not impose the time limit until the motion was accepted. That seems to me to be a highly irregular situation.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, on the point of order raised by Senator Flynn, if the motion were made to adjourn this debate until March 15, it would be in order. However, I think Senator Flynn has a very pertinent point when he says that the original motion stated "later this day." As I recall the remarks of Senator Hicks, he used the word "forthwith." I hope the Chair will take that into consideration when making a decision.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, this is a difficult matter to resolve in view of the wording of Senator Roblin's motion. If the motion clearly stated that the vote must be held later today, or on a specific day, I would probably have no difficulty with the point of order raised by Senator Flynn.

However, there is no date mentioned in the motion. Therefore, my interpretation of the motion is that it will be decided upon when the vote is taken. I think that the intention of the Leader of the Government was that this motion be put to the vote one day or another.

This is a difficult task in view of the seriousness of the point of order which was raised. However, under the circumstances I think that the motion will have to appear on the order paper for tomorrow's sitting. This is how I interpret the motion before me.

[English]

Senator Roblin: For the sake of clarity, may I paraphrase Your Honour's ruling that the operational part of this motion will come into effect on the day on which it is passed; not on the day on which it is moved. Therefore it is alive tomorrow. I have to admit that that does not suit me one little bit. I want it to be settled today but, as I have said before, 70 beats 25 any day of the week, and I recognize that fact.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Corbin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Gigantès that the debate on this motion be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

Motion of Senator Corbin resolved in the affirmative on the following division:

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR OCEAN DEVELOPMENT BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Heath Macquarrie moved the second reading of Bill C-22, to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, two speeches from me in one night is a violation of the prohibition against double jeopardy for honourable senators. Also, honourable senators, I have been sitting here listening to points of order, enduring standing votes, sitting in the evening, and thinking that I should have stayed in the House of Commons. I thought I had left this sort of thing behind.

Hon. Charles McElman: You don't really mean that.

Senator Macquarrie: No, and you know that.

Honourable senators, although I do not like the hour of the day, I am pleased to have the honour to bring this bill to the baptismal font. It means a great deal and adds a dimension to our internationalism. The bill deals with a most important food area, primarily the culture of the sea.

I noticed that in the other place there was a discussion involving members of all parties, and that the measure passed all stages within a couple of hours. I think that that is an indication of support for this measure to establish ICOD. I am overwhelmed by these alphabetic conglomerations, and I am not quite sure which is the more favourable. I was ready to have a little play on words about the importance of the word "cod." I was going to wax eloquent about the importance of the cod fishery to Atlantic Canada. I sent to the Library for the old Nova Scotia coat of arms which Senator MacDonald of Halifax, so young, did not even remember, but Senator Hicks did. Then I happened to read what was there and I noticed that my wonderful codfish turned out to be a salmon. Why Nova Scotia is so famous for salmon while New Brunswick is not, I am not sure, but it is a noble fish. It is a fine coat of arms although it has been replaced by one even more authentically Scottish.

● (2240)

Down in Massachusetts, of course, in the very Assembly of the Lower House, a golden cod recalls the importance of that particular fish to that old state, "commonwealth" as they call it.

The background of this institution is splendidly bi-partisan. We read in the brochure from ICOD that the then Prime Minister Trudeau presented the Commonwealth heads of state in Melbourne in 1981 with a commitment from the Canadian government to establish this very important centre. The then Prime Minister said that, with an operational budget of approximately $20 million Canadian over five years, the International Centre for Ocean Development, ICOD, would seek to help developing countries get optimum return from the recently-expanded marine resources, with a major focus being on the oceans as a source of food. He said that the centre would provide information, research, training and advisory services and would be a vehicle to ensure that developing countries would receive a tangible return on the jurisdictional gains which they made at the UN conference on the Law of the Sea. Of course, that indicates, honourable senators, the timeliness of this development as following from the very important International Law of the Sea conference.

This came to fruition when the centre was opened in Halifax in November 1983. In the Speech from the Throne, read by His Excellency on December 7, 1983, reference was made to this important new establishment. The fascinating thing is that this organization, like IDRC, draws from experts, concerned people, from countries other than our own. The board is composed of Canadians plus others. I believe IDRC has set a splendid standard in that very field, as well as in its accomplishments. There is much of the IDRC pattern in ICOD.

Honourable senators, because it is late, I will synopsise. I believe all honourable senators have a copy of the attractive brochure which lists some very interesting aspects. It makes mention of the living resources, food for direct human consumption, thin fish, shell fish, marine plants, fishmeal oil and other by-products of mariculture. I mention the word "mariculture" because I think it might impress Senator Hicks. In Prince Edward Island, we talk about "aquaculture." Now the "in" word which embraces the briny, saltwater fish is "mariculture." For us in Prince Edward Island, where we have freshwater trout and saltwater trout, "aquaculture" is the proper term to use.

Honourable senators, I like the eclectic aspect of ICOD. It plans to draw upon the indigenous expertise, which I believe is a wise project. In a way, they will be shepherding research that is based in various parts of the country. We are very proud that there is under way in Charlottetown an Atlantic veterinary college and that our great Premier, James Lee, a splendid diplomat, worked well, long and successfully with the former Minister of Agriculture, Eugene Whelan, to put that in place.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): A former diplomat.

Senator Macquarrie: Yes, indeed. They put in place an aquacultural component which will add an important dimension because in that part of the country agriculture and fisheries are still very important industries.

I hope that someone from the University of Prince Edward Island, which is the parent of the Atlantic Veterinary Institute, will be placed on that board. I might even be so obliging as to give to anyone who wants it the exact name of the right person for the job. That person would be highly qualified, an adornment and a most important functionary on such a body.

One tremendous challenge—although it may seem like a simple matter, it is profound—is to halt the daily wasting of products of the sea. When I go out fishing mackerel on the north shore of Prince Edward Island, I am made aware of the fact that the seagulls get more of the product than the fishery.

Our farmers in Prince Edward Island have to purchase this rather unpleasant-smelling product called fishmeal which is important in the production of poultry. It costs a fortune. We import all sorts of that product from Peru; yet, we throw away our own herring, mackerel, cod heads, and God knows what because we have not achieved sufficient expertise to know what to do with it at the right time.

I have a friend, a businessman in Charlottetown, who was very helpful to the Cubans in establishing in their mother ships the processing equipment which cut into all that waste. They found valuable by-products. Nothing should be thrown away, not even the bones.

Honourable senators, one cannot refer to the debates in the other place, but one can summarize. I was impressed by a member from Newfoundland who was discussing some of the problems there. Not only do we have that kind of wastage because we do not utilize the product, but quite often our market creates the same situation. A friend of mine in Prince Edward Island told me that he and his sons had to throw away two tons of mackerel in the fall of the year. Mackerel is one of the truly great fish.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: It is not found very often in this part of the country because it does not stay fresh long or freeze well. It is a magnificent, tasteful delight. Yet, we cannot seem to accommodate that. The Russians come in off the north shore at the time of the year when the mackerel are not to be found there. I am aware, honourable senators, that the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is in our presence, and I am sure he knows of this problem.

Senator MacEachen: Perhaps not.

Senator Macquarrie: He does not disagree with me. He would not be in favour of wasting fish. I was sure he is a conserver. I know the Leader of the Opposition must be very familiar with this measure because a few months ago I read that the institute might be set up in Vancouver or Halifax. It was set up in Halifax. I don't know whether the former minister wants to take any bows for that or not.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): There are no Grits in Vancouver.

Senator Macquarrie: I thought at the time that Halifax would be a good place for it, and I guess someone else did too.

Honourable senators, I would love to talk fish with you all evening, but I have some regard for your comfort and, perhaps, for my own.

I ask you to look favourably upon this bill. It strikes me as a well-written piece of legislation. I was always taught the difference between good English and legal English. It is an interesting bill. It sets out its aims and its purposes which are to be highly commended. It is a well-structured bill. It has had support in the past from people of different parties and, I believe, from the country as a whole. I was a little sad that so little attention was paid to this when the idea was structured and institutionalized. I could find only one newspaper article about it, and that was carried in the Charlottetown Guardian. It was from Mr. John Harbron of Thomson Newspapers. He is the farm policy man. No one else seemed to notice the article. The Senate can take a good look at it, and perhaps make it an approving one.

On motion of Senator Hicks, debate adjourned.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Martha P. Bielish moved the second reading of Bill C-29, to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

She said: Honourable senators, I have often hauled grain at this hour of the day during harvest, but I never thought that I would have to speak on the Western Grain Stabilization Act at this time of night in the Senate. I welcome the opportunity to speak in favour of the legislation to amend the act. Bill C-29 is one of great importance to western Canada, not just to grain and oilseed producers, but also to the residents of towns and cities across the west, and, in fact, to the economy of the nation as a whole.

I should like to mention two things: Although only 4 per cent of Canada's population are primary producers, one job in ten is generated by the agribusiness sector. Agriculture is important to Canada's balance of trade, consistently making up 10 per cent of export earnings.

The purpose of the Western Grain Stabilization Plan is to stabilize incomes of western grain farmers by protecting them against sharp declines in net cash flow. It was developed during the mid-1970s at a time when the prairie economy was in a recession. The intention of the program was to put money into the hands of farmers at that critical time. Initially the program worked well, and, in theory, it should still work well. However, in practice it has failed to fulfil adequately its mandate, and that can be attributed to some weaknesses in the legislation.

Since the Western Grain Stabilization Plan was introduced in 1976, there have been payouts of $115 million for 1977, $253 million for 1978, and $223 million for the 1983-84 crop year. Yet grain producers have experienced financial difficulty in years in which there was no payout. Even when the program has triggered a payout, the money has always been paid after the year ended.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

Two years ago, some members of the present government asked for amendments to improve the legislation. They wanted to correct a number of problems, including the payout formula, producers' inability to withdraw after three years, and the exclusion of spouses from multiple participation in the program. Furthermore, they wanted to explore the possibility of calculating payments on a regional basis. But in particular they wanted the legislation amended to provide for interim payments. At present the act does not allow for payment until after the end of the crop year.

After much delay, the amending legislation was finally introduced last spring. The government of the day included in the bill some suggestions from across the floor, but ignored others; and because the legislation was brought forward at the last minute, the house committee did not have sufficient time to further improve the act.

It is extremely important that producers receive their payments as early as possible. The greatest need for cash is in the spring when they are planting their crops, and in the summer prior to harvest. An interim payment is a welcome payment indeed. For that reason, it is difficult to understand why the last government brought in legislation permitting an interim payment for only last year.

The legislation before us is intended mainly to amend the act so that interim payments can be made during the crop year and before spring seeding if necessary. Such payments would be authorized so long as they do not involve the risk of overpayment.

The producers' need for cash flow this spring is serious. This amendment would allow for a substantial payment for the 1984-85 crop year to be made before seeding time this spring.

The second amendment contained in the bill is a housekeeping matter. It would retroactively deem all previous orders in council raising the maximum level of grain sale proceeds eligible for levy payments under the act to have been passed, registered and published in the Canada Gazette in accordance with the Statutory Instruments Act. This matter is outstanding from 1984 when the act was amended by the previous government. Support was given to the amended legislation last June so that producers would receive a partial payment before harvest.

Honourable senators, we can assume that the reason that many grain producers are still operating is because small local businesses are carrying their accounts. At the same time, we know that a significant percentage of prairie farmers are currently in arrears on their farm mortgages.

The problem of farm financing has been identified as the number one problem facing Canadian agriculture today. Bad weather can take some of the blame for crop producers' problems, but part of the blame must be placed on an inadequate agricultural policy over the past few years.

This government, however, is correcting certain policies and programs and introducing new measures to ease that situation. In November the government announced a rebate on farm fuel. That action will result in a saving of some $100 million per year for Canadian farmers.

Shortly after, the Minister of Agriculture announced a number of measures to assist farmers with loans from the Farm Credit Corporation, including a temporary moratorium on foreclosures by the FCC. Then, on January 15, the minister announced that some 5,600 Farm Credit Corporation borrowers could be eligible to have the high interest rates on their long-term loans converted to 12.75 per cent—a move representing benefits of up to $16 million per year for five years for those farmers. Most recently, on January 21, the Farm Credit Corporation's interest rate on five-year loans was also reduced to 12.75 per cent.

Obviously the government is serious about assisting Canadian farmers. Action has already been taken or is being planned in a number of areas. Improving the Western Grain Stabilization Act is a high priority.

Farming is a multibillion dollar industry that goes on every year irrespective of whether the weather is favourable or not. If farmers do not have the money, they borrow it at significant cost. There must be special consideration shown for people who invest their lives in the production of food.

● (2300)

The bill before us today would amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act so that a payment could be made to producers in the spring of any year that the formula triggers a payout. By making cash available in the spring, we can help producers save interest costs. Besides, the money in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund rightfully belongs to farmers. If they need it before the end of the crop year and it is coming to them eventually, then it should be paid to them when they need it most.

Canadian farmers generate close to $20 billion in sales annually. About half of that is generated in the three prairie provinces. We have a responsibility to do all that we can to support our important agricultural industry and the grain producers of western Canada. That is why the Western Grain Stabilization Act must be amended as soon as possible. The proposed amendments are long overdue. As the Minister of Agriculture pointed out last week, what this legislation is really doing is taking care of unfinished business because the legislation amending the act last summer was inadequate. This bill was introduced to make the act more responsive to the financial needs of western grain farmers and it finishes what was left undone last June.

Bill C-29 would amend the act so that when a stabilization payment is warranted in the future it can be paid either before or after the end of the crop year at the minister's discretion. Of course, the payments would be made at a level that would present no risk of overpayment.

Honourable senators, spring is approaching. Farmers are already preparing for seeding time. For a lot of them it will not be easy to finance this year's crop. They will need all the help they can get. By supporting the proposed amendments we will be assisting them this year and in the future. I would also like to point out that the bill was passed through all three stages in the other place on Friday last with the agreement of all parties.

On motion of Senator Argue, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 26th February, 1985, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am in a peculiar position, in that I should have spoken to my colleague before.

I think it would be advantageous to postpone the presentation of this motion until after we have had the vote on the principal matter before us with respect to Bill C-11. Therefore, I believe the question should be put later this day.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-85, (No. 2)

MOTION TO INSTRUCT NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO REPORT NEGATIVE

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to report Bill C-11, intituled: "An Act to provide borrowing authority", later this day.— (Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, before moving adjournment of the debate yesterday evening, I briefly referred to several comments made in articles that appeared in the newspaper Le Devoir which were full of mistaken notions about our parliamentary tradition. I shall not comment further on the sages of St. Sacrement. I had reached the conclusion that this chamber, as a matter of principle and for very fundamental reasons arising from the historical development of the Canadian parliamentary system—representation and responsibility—should not grant the government borrowing authority until the government complies with established parliamentary practice.

What we are seeing here is an unprecedented parliamentary strategy being used by the government, as Senator Stewart explained so admirably yesterday. That is the whole point, no more and no less.

We on the Liberal side, despite threats and a form of blackmail, have remained firm. Our position is that we must protect the government against its own excesses and insist, across the board, on the government's obligation to be accountable to Parliament.

Our actions have a constitutional background. They are based on the concept that both houses of Parliament have a right to examine requests made by the Crown.

[English]

It goes back to the Magna Carta. It is as simple as that. Just for the heck of it, I thought I should take a peek into past debates of the Senate to find out what some of the government members of today said when they were in opposition. I must admit that it was a pretty depressing exercise to have to go through some of those speeches, but nevertheless I survived. I could not believe my eyes at what I read. For example, at page 4377 in the debate on the Borrowing Authority Bill, 1982-83, which at that time was Bill C-111 and the bill was in the second reading stage, Senator Doody said:

If the Parliament of Canada—

He did not say "the Senate." I repeat:

If the Parliament of Canada is not to have control of the public purse, then dismiss it, send it home, and forget this farce completely, because control of the public purse is by far the most important function of the parliamentary system, as is avowed.

He said "the parliamentary system". He did not distinguish between the House of Commons and the Senate.

We are part of the whole process, the total system, are we not, honourable senators; and where is Senator Doody now that we need him?

Honourable senators, I found another relevant morsel of parliamentary wisdom and respect for the system of parliamentary control in Senate Debates of July 29, 1982, at page 4735, which is Appendix "A", a report of the National Finance Committee to the Senate on the subject matter of, at that time, Bill C-125 to provide supplementary borrowing authority. One may well wonder why the current government, if it was in such dire need of borrowing authority last fall, did not refer that subject matter to the National Finance Committee at the time. All members of this house would have had ample opportunity to find an acceptable, an honourable, compromise in the best of parliamentary traditions. But, no, the bill was dragged on in the other place until the very eve of adjournment for Christmas. We were all sent home for some three or four weeks, and when we returned we were expected to jump at the sound of the first gun.

Management of the parliamentary program is not my problem. It is the problem of the government house leader in the Senate. I do not know if he is capable of standing up to the Minister of Finance, but he should have accepted the honourable compromise that was put forth by my leader in the Senate, and we should have seen some action on it, instead of multheadedness.

In any event, I quote from the report to which I have just alluded, and for all practical purposes let me call it the Everett report, from the name of its chairman. The following is a direct quote:

The Committee made it clear that parliamentary approval of borrowing was a necessary part of the control of the executive by the legislature. It was not sufficient to claim that Parliament already exercised control through the approval of expenditure estimates. Parliament also traditionally considered the government's proposals for raising revenue including the authority to borrow.

—"including the authority to borrow."

Can government members today continue their partisan propaganda that this house, indeed this party, has no business entering into the government's plans and dicta? The quotation I just read was not the work of a partisan faction. It expressed the collective view of the members of the Finance Committee of the day, the majority of which, I suspect, were Liberals. I did not have a chance to check, but I think my assumption is a fair one, and Liberals have not changed one iota in their reasoning. I will suggest that the debate of the last few days and weeks addressed itself to the Everett report and particularly to the paragraph I just quoted. I, for one, am glad that there are women and men who will stand up to protect fundamental parliamentary privilege and tradition.

● (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Leader of the Government speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this motion.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I must express my prejudice right at the start by saying, in the conventional phrase, that this debate of the past few days has generated little light but a great deal more heat. I am happy that Senator Murray, Senator Flynn, Senator Phillips and others of my colleagues so ably defended the position the government has taken. I think, to take a phrase from Senator Hicks, they have demolished the arguments of the Grits, and I am not sure that I can do very much to improve on that score. But perhaps there is a comment or two that I should make.

Some of these speeches have been rather predictable, perhaps even repetitive. I shall not embarrass any senators by referring to names. But it is only fair to say that there were one or two speeches to which I listened in the past few days and about which I wish to take some particular notice. One was the speech of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. I want to clear away one small point. It is of not much significance but perhaps for the sake of the record I had better do it. It has to do with Senator MacEachen's allegation that if we had got our act together last Thursday we might have made better progress than we did. Of course, last Thursday we held a meeting of the Finance Committee. I shall not refer to it in specific terms, but I can say that it started out in camera and after a very lengthy protest by those of us on this side of the house, it was decided to open the doors. For that I am thankful, because there was before the committee, presented in the name of the Leader of the Opposition, although not by him personally because he was not there, a resolution that seemed to some of us to be without merit and, perhaps, would actually impede the course of events. It became clear in that meeting, however, that there were some who wished to pursue it to a conclusion then and there. In order to prevent that from happening, I thought it well to tell the committee that the Minister of Finance would be willing to deal with that resolution and to indicate to them where it was defective. As he was in Regina at the First Ministers' Conference, the very first opportunity on which he could appear was Monday, which he did, and his evidence was sufficiently convincing that the Leader of the Opposition himself withdrew that resolution.

That I think indicates some reason why it was wise to have the Minister of Finance in attendance and why his appearance prevented the committee from doing something that would have been non-productive and, indeed, ill advised—a fact which is recognized by the Leader of the Opposition himself as evidenced by the fact that he withdrew the motion.

I wanted to clear the record on what is really a rather insignificant part of our proceedings. But it does deal with this question of "getting your act together," and I intend to return to that subject before I resume my seat, because the government has been accused of failure to conduct its affairs in proper style.

It is also necessary, I think, that I should at this time deal with the charges of another member of this house, the honourable Senator Kirby, who expressed at some length last night an opinion held by others of his party, namely that on this question of the provision of financial information the Progressive Conservative Party has done a flip-flop. Senator Kirby and his friends, as I see it, are well on the way to trying to establish a completely false myth of the actual situation—

Senator Hicks: No, no.

Senator Flynn: Yes, yes.

Senator Roblin: I am prepared, Senator Hicks, for your edification—because obviously, from your comment, you need it—to say why I take that view. I want to deal with some aspects of what has been called the "Stevens' principle," because Mr. Stevens is the member of the House of Commons who is prominently associated with the activities of my colleagues in that place several years ago with respect to the constitutional propriety of certain of the then Liberal government's initiatives. Some have contended that the present government has violated its own traditional principle on borrowing authority, a principle that has come to be known as the "Stevens' principle."

The "Stevens' principle" is quite simple: any borrowing authority sought by the government should be based on a forecast of financial requirements. Let me give you the historical context in which this developed.

In October, 1978, the government sought authority to borrow $10 billion in the fiscal year 1978-79 for 1979-80, a year in which there were no published fiscal forecasts. Sinclair Stevens, then the opposition financial critic, stated in the other place in October of 1978:

Where are the facts and figures? Why does the minister need this blanket borrowing authority of $10 billion for fiscal 1980, which is the period from April 1 of next year to March 31, 1980?

At the end of his speech, Mr. Stevens moved that:

—this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for massive borrowing in a future fiscal year, in advance of any budget presentation for that year, is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-7.

Note that he used the words "any budget presentation." If honourable senators will read the debate that occurred at that time, or any other debate in which our party participated, they will find that it becomes clear that the key issue was the absence of a forecast of revenues, expenditures, and financial requirements.

That was not the first time they were confronted with that situation. Less than a year later, Parliament was again asked to provide borrowing authority in the absence of fiscal projections, this time for fiscal 1983-84.

The "Stevens' principle" is quite simple: Parliament should not be asked to approve borrowing authority in the absence of published evidence that the authority is needed. The authority should be based on the financial or cash requirements of the government. The financial requirements, very simply, are the deficit less non-budgetary sources of revenue.

● (1420)

In the case in which we are now engaged, there was an economic statement delivered on November 8, 1984. On page 17 of that economic statement, this government published a projection of its expenditures, revenues, deficits, non-budgetary sources of funds and cash requirements. In short, a budgetary projection has been published. In other words, everything is available that would have been available if the government had tabled a budget.

This statement is not a party statement by me alone, because in the evidence before the committee—and I will make reference to this—the Deputy Minister of Finance said the same thing. He told the committee that they had the facts; that they were receiving all of the facts that they would have received in a budgetary presentation. I wonder—

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Corbin: And then he disappeared.

Senator Roblin: And then he what?

Senator Corbin: And then he disappeared.

Senator Roblin: Who disappeared? The deputy minister? The deputy minister came back with the minister on Monday. He was there.

Senator Guay: No he was not.

Senator Roblin: So what?

Senator Guay: And then the minister disappeared before the end of the meeting.

Senator Haidasz: He walked off in a huff.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friends cannot get around the point that they were told by the Deputy Minister of Finance, who is not a politician, what they could find in that statement. I do not think they took the trouble to read it. I do not think they took the trouble to examine the information that was given to them. If they look at page 16 and page 17 of the Economic and Fiscal Statement, what will they find? They will find the position as set out in the Budget of February 1984 as a starting point. Not a bad place to start.

In addition to that, they will find outlined in this statement the economic changes that had taken place. So I say to my honourable friends on the other side that they had the up-to-date figures, the latest figures on November 8 of last year. Let me read them to the Senate, because the Senate is saying that it cannot approve a borrowing bill because it does not know the facts. It says that unless they get the estimates, they will not know the facts. That is a patent hypocrisy that should be blown out of the water.

Budgetary transactions:

Revenue for the period 1985-86: $70.050 billion

Expenditures: $104.968 billion

Deficit: $34.918 billion

Plus all of the supporting information that is necessary to take you from the Budget of February 1984 to the position in 1986. And honourable senators say that they do not know the facts and cannot vote for this bill!

I ask honourable senators to look at the timing: This statement was delivered to the country and, surprisingly enough, to the desk of every person in this house—although one would never know it—on November 8, 1984. When did the finance bill come down in the house? It came down on November 23, 1984. When did the second reading commence? It commenced on November 28, 1984. That is not stale-dated information. That is the latest information available in this country, and the official statement of the Government of Canada.

We are told by the fiscal experts on the other side, and the constitutional authorities that are looking at me now, that that is not good enough; that that does not represent an adequate basis for judgment in this matter. Honourable senators, I leave that to the public of Canada to decide. I think if we were interested in sound business practices—and we have heard enough about that—I dare say that the senators who were interested in that would have taken the trouble to look at the latest statement of November 8, which was followed by a bill about 20 days later, in order to acquaint themselves with the information—information that they will never find in the estimates they are waiting for, and which they say is the principle upon which their present policy of obstruction and of negation is based.

An Hon. Senator: False.

Senator Roblin: I think that argument bears little examination. If my honourable friend wishes to express himself, let him do so in parliamentary language, and let him do so on his own time. He is not going to do it on mine.

There has been no flip-flop, Senator Kelly—no, I apologize, it is Senator Kirby. If Senator Kelly were here, I would apologize to him. There is no flip-flop, Senator Kirby. We were consistent in asking for the financial information relating to income, expenditures, debt and borrowing when we were engaged in debate on this matter in the other place, and in this case and in this chamber we have given them—and we have given them in a timely manner so that they could be used by those legislators who were concerned about the application of business principles to government. There has been no flip-flop. That has been the consistent position of the Government of Canada.

I now wish to deal with another issue. I wish to deal with the concept expressed by the last speaker, which was dealt with at some length by Senator Kirby last evening, and which was a recurring theme in the speeches made by the Leader of the Opposition, and mentioned perhaps by every other person who has objected to the manner in which the government has handled this bill. It has something to do with, I suppose, “get your act together”, because the suggestion has been made that if we are in a pickle today, if the Canadian dollar is being influenced by what we are doing in this house, we have only the government to blame—and particularly the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I suppose.

Senator MacEachen: Not really.

Senator Roblin: The recurring theme has been not only is the leader to blame, he had the solution in his hand. All he had to do was, somewhere along the line, agree to the reasonable proposal made by honourable senators opposite that the bill be amended. They recommended that the bill be amended by cutting out Part II, which has to do with the next fiscal year. They asked that we restrict it only to the money required for this fiscal year, and lo and behold, not only would the bill be passed by the Senate, but according to Senator Kirby, Royal Assent would be secured.

When Senator Kirby spoke last evening he used a phrase that I think was a kind of throw-away line that came to his mind as he spoke, but that throw-away line certainly put me on my guard. Quite gratuitously, and having nothing to do with this bill whatsoever, he accused the administration of being interested in “managed news”.

Well, I found that a singular expression to come from a gentleman like that, because when listening to Senator Kirby,

I remembered that he is an expert at “managed news.” I think he is even better than Senator Davey at “managed news,” and that says something. There are some of us who have been around here long enough to remember the struggle that took place in this country over our Constitution and its patriation.

One of the most striking events of that whole discussion was a revelation to the general public that a memorandum had been written, which for lack of a better term I will call the “Kirby scenario.” That “Kirby scenario” was a recommendation, written by a civil servant who, of course, had no political ties or inclinations, to the government of the day, and I imagine a copy went to my honourable friend sitting opposite—

Senator MacEachen: Absolutely.

Senator Roblin: —which advised a course of action as to how the government could get its way on the matter of patriation of the Constitution.

I am not going to read that report because it consists of 64 pages, but I have in my hand a number of news comments of the day, perhaps half a dozen of them. There is one that I intend to read, and that is the comment that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of September 11, 1980 regarding this document and the government responsible for it. That comment states:

The arrogance, the sneakiness and, yes, the naiveté of some of the language of the 64-page document is bad enough—

It's sneaky in outlining options for setting one province against the other, for confounding the opposition in Parliament, for ducking through loopholes in the law and for brainwashing the people in order to achieve this end.

That is what I call management of the news; not only management of the news—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: —but management of the opposition, management of the government in Parliament and management of the people. A more cynical and unsavoury proposal for the manipulation of the public by a government has seldom surfaced, and yet this gentleman gave me advice.

Senator Thériault: Until now.

Senator Roblin: Well, he will not give me any more. I am glad of that, but he was giving me advice. So, when I get advice from a source such as that, I tell you that that puts me on my guard. He said that if I had only done what he told me to do and split the bill, I would be home free. That is not the worst of it because another gentleman with acknowledged parliamentary skills, not to say accomplishments, the Leader of the Opposition, is the man who first gave me that idea.

• (1430)

If I consider the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and couple it with the advice of Senator Kirby and reflect upon the capacities of these gentlemen to conceive of interesting notions, then I realize I had better be very careful about what I do with the advice I get.

Supposing I had accepted what they had told me at its face value. What do you think, honourable senators, would have happened? I would have walked over to the House of Commons and said to the leaders of the house, "I have an offer you can't refuse. You will be able to get half of your bill now and half later; the Liberals in the Senate said so. The Liberals in the Senate say that, if you will just amend this little bill, so it can be returned and debated all over again, plus a second bill to cover the second half of Bill C-11, they think this will go through the House of Commons in pretty quick time. You will get Royal Assent, and there will be no problems."

If I had advanced that proposition, I suppose one would have said to me, "Well, now, what makes you think it will get through the House of Commons this way so that Royal Assent can be given without loss of time?" I would respond, "Well, the Liberal senators told me so." It would then be pointed out to me that there are some Liberal members of the House of Commons and I might have been asked, "What do you suppose they are going to do? Have the Liberal senators offered you any assurance or any guarantee or any undertaking that their colleagues in the House of Commons will take their advice and pass this bill with reasonable despatch so we can have Royal Assent?"

Senator Phillips: They are from different parties.

Senator Roblin: I would have to respond, "No, I don't think they went that far." No doubt, they would then say, "Are they urging the principle that a deal made in the Senate is a deal that is binding on the House of Commons?" I would have to say that I did not think they are making that proposition because they did not agree to the reverse situation—they did not agree that the House of Commons binds the Senate. They would then say, "Well, it is interesting to have that assurance from the senators of the Liberal persuasion."

Then, of course, they would ask me another question which would be, "What do the NDP senators think about this proposal?" I am afraid I would have to say, "There aren't any NDP senators to be found, not so far as I know."

Senator Phillips: What about Senator Argue?

Senator Roblin: He turned his coat so long ago, we forgive him.

They would say to me, "There may be no NDP senators, but there are NDP members in the House of Commons. Do you suppose this offer by Senators MacEachen, Kirby, Corbin and others holds good for them?" Honourable senators, that would give me some pause. "Don't you know," they would say to me, "that the Liberals and the NDP in the House of Commons are fighting to see who is top dog? Are you not aware of the fact that the NDP in the House of Commons does not like the Senate? Do you really think it would fly that the NDP in the House of Commons would agree to the passage of this bill which had received the unanimous support of the House of Commons but was turned down by the Senate and sent back with another recommendation?"

[Senator Roblin.]

Does anyone in this chamber think that a likely scenario, particularly as we know that, in the current Gallup polls, the NDP are points ahead of the Liberal Party in terms of public popularity? What an opportunity this would give them to establish their credentials with the Canadian people as the real opposition in the House of Commons.

If I went to them with a proposition like that, following the advice of Senator MacEachen and following the advice of Senator Kirby, they would say to me, "Roblin, you are being sold a pup." They would say, "Roblin, you have been conned, and you have been conned by two who are experts in the task; two con artists." I add to them the other members in this chamber who want me to do the same thing. Any politician who takes the trouble to use his brain will understand that the possibility of getting a quick return of this legislation from the House of Commons is nil. If you believe that, you will believe anything.

Senator Marshall: There may be NDP appointments to the Senate before we are through.

Senator Roblin: Maybe we will get them.

Senator Guay: This is the first time I have seen the Leader of the Government safeguarding the interests of the NDP.

Senator Phillips: They do not have a potential prime minister in that crowd.

Senator Flynn: Try to understand.

Senator Roblin: This short pause has given me an opportunity to collect myself after my emphatic remarks about the good advice I have been getting about how to get my act together in order to serve the public interest. Now that we have dealt with the realities of life and not the airy-fairy ideas that are propagated by some politicians in this chamber, who ought to know better; now that we have disposed of that erroneous and fallacious idea which never had a chance of flying in the House of Commons, let us get on to something else.

I want to come back to this question of getting my act together because that was one of the main themes that came across to me from what the Leader of the Opposition had to say. If he were talking about me alone, I think I have sufficiently defended my own activities to dispose of the matter; at least, it seems to me there is some merit in the defence I have offered.

However, he did not do that. He included in his strictures the Minister of Finance as one who "couldn't get his act together." When a former Minister of Finance charges the present Minister of Finance with such a grave dereliction of duty, it is difficult to ignore.

I think, in the life of any politician, there are painful moments. I can confess to that. I would not willingly expose myself to reproaches on some of those issues. I am surprised, indeed, that the Leader of the Opposition should have used that dangerous expression, "Get your act together," because he—we are all human—must have scars and wounds that are perhaps still painful resulting from his own activities of recent years as Minister of Finance. I would be surprised if he did not. That is why it puzzles me that he saw fit to take on the present Minister of Finance in those terms.

Senator MacEachen: Give me some balm.

Senator Roblin: I have heard some people talk about him as "Wrong-way Al."

Senator MacEachen: No one ever called me "Al."

Senator Roblin: It has happened for the first time now, and I think it suits my honourable friend.

Senator MacEachen: "Allan J."

Senator Roblin: He understands his $10 billion budgetary error. He understands that it was the biggest error in budget calculations up to that time, at any rate. He understands his budget was regarded by all and sundry, in his own party and elsewhere, as something less than a success. If I were to call it an unmitigated disaster, I do not think I would be exaggerating.

Senator Flynn: It wouldn't be the first time.

Senator Roblin: As minister, he had to retreat as fast as he could, either changing his policies altogether, dropping them or otherwise accommodating himself to the expression of public opinion. This is the gentleman who is critical of the present minister.

I do not think the present minister is perfect. I think the present minister makes mistakes. I will include myself, quite willingly, in that category. I make mistakes.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Roblin: I say to my honourable friend that, in this particular instance—if Senator Haidasz would just be quiet for a moment—the obvious response is: Physician, heal thyself before you take after someone else.

Senator MacEachen: That is a "no-phrase."

Senator Roblin: It is an applicable and very apt phrase. If the cap fits, my friend can wear it.

Honourable senators, you will be relieved to know that I am coming to the end of what I have to say today.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I expected a little more applause than that. Can't you do any better than that over there?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear. Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: I wanted more pain.

Senator Roblin: The response indicates to me that honourable senators are not particularly interested in what I am going to say, but I am going to say it anyway.

I want to tell my honourable friends, as one of my parting observations, that we must come back to the essentials of this matter. That is, that the cost of our obduracy, the cost of our failure to act on this now, the cost of our dragging our feet is real; and I don't care what Senator Sinclair says, or any of the moguls of finance around here, these costs are real and they are continuing. Every day the pressures mount. There is a problem, and we are part of the problem. Let me quote as follows:

● (1440)

The Senate's refusal to raise the federal Government's borrowing authority added to the market's woes, traders said. Bond and treasury bill prices tumbled and interest rates leaped—

And we are part of the problem. Yet we sit here doing nothing about it.

Senator Haidasz: Let us hear what Governor Bouey has to say about it.

Senator Argue: What paper are you reading from?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can read it at his leisure.

Senator Argue: I don't know if anyone wrote it. What is the Leader of the Government quoting from?

Senator Roblin: This is from today's Globe and Mail. I am going to quote some more from it. I believe my honourable friend can read all right. He can read it for himself.

Senator Argue: We would like to know where you got it from. We can't read your mind.

Senator Roblin: There is something else that I want to advert to before I get through.

Senator Argue: We will be shattered.

Senator Roblin: You will be shattered by the Star too, because you will be hearing from that publication. They did not mention you in the Globe and Mail. Never mind, they might get around to it. They didn't mention me either. So we are all right on that.

Senator Flynn: They are trying to be on both sides of the fence.

Senator MacEachen: Let us have order, please.

Senator Roblin: The fact that I am speaking the truth when I talk about the urgency of the present situation, the fact that I am reflecting the facts of life when I tell the Senate that the delay is costing the taxpayers and the people of this country money, is borne out by the impression that is now being circulated about the position of the Senate and its place in our political life. I am talking about public opinion. There may be some honourable senators who are confident of their position, who feel that because they have been appointed until they reach the age of 75 years, or for life, whichever comes first, they can be satisfied that as appointed people no one can get at them; who are satisfied that this institution is so well regarded by Canadians that their position in this chamber and the status and function of this chamber is safe. I want to tell them that if they ignore public opinion in this matter, as they seem determined to do, I believe they will have cause to regret it.

Senator Haidasz: That is crass intimidation.

Senator Argue: That's Mulroney blackmail.

Senator Roblin: I will give you some blackmail.

Senator Haidasz: You are drunk with power.

Senator Argue: They have the majority in the Commons and they think they are going to dictate to the Senate.

Senator Roblin: I am so happy that I have a reactive audience. It would be terrible if I made this speech and all they did was sit and look at me, as some do. Isn't it pleasant that they decided that they want to get in on the act too and put in their two cent's worth. I like that. There's nothing like a little life and vivacity on the part of the opposition.

Senator Argue: Particularly in the Senate. Even senators are lively.

Senator Roblin: Senator Haidasz is a fine example of the thoughtful function of sober second thought on which we pride ourselves in this chamber, and I hope that he will give us the benefit of his advice on many more occasions in the future.

I am not going to talk about blackmail from Brian Mulroney. I am not even going to say anything about what the government intends to do, because I do not know what the government intends to do. But I am going to tell you what the public thinks the government ought to do. I will give honourable senators three references. One of them I do not have with me to quote, but it is familiar to all honourable senators. I'll bet that every honourable senator has it in his file. It is the opinion of the Toronto Star with respect to Senator Frith's suggestion that the Senate would use its constitutional veto power to frustrate the will of the House of Commons—and he mentioned the FIRA legislation.

The Star, which is not exactly a supporter of the present government, made its position abundantly clear. It said to Frith "Come off it", that he should recognize that this is not the Senate of 1867 but the Senate of 1985, and if he did not wake up to that fact of life, then the consequences—this is according to the Star, not me—have to be taken into account.

Let me give honourable senators an expression from French Canada—not from any Conservative politician. It is an editorial which was read in part yesterday by my colleague, Senator Flynn. He spared the Senate some of the more cutting and caustic comments, and I feel duty bound to repair that deficiency.

Senator Haidasz: Dispense.

Senator Roblin: The honourable senator has every reason in the world to say "Dispense". He should keep his mouth shut and his ears open and listen to this. I shall quote from Le Devoir of February 20.

Senator Flynn: It's in French.

Senator Roblin: The honourable senator can speak in French if he wishes. It reads as follows:

Of Senate and Games.

If any honourable senator wishes to check my translation, he is free to do so.

In order to manifest its deterioration publicly, the Liberal Party of Canada need only count on its own resources... Liberal senators have been doing that for the past few days with remarkably suicidal zeal by amusing themselves blocking a bill unanimously adopted by the House of Commons.

Mr. Mulroney's government will be the only winner, while Mr. Turner's authority goes on losing weight in the public opinion as Mr. Allan MacEachen quite openly makes a mockery of that authority.

It goes on in part:

In defence of their actions, the Liberal senators offer nothing more than a plea for the respect of a parliamentary "tradition" made sacred by those, namely, Mr. MacEachen and Mr. De Bané—

I am glad he is present to hear this:

—who were filled with blind admiration for their former leader, Mr. Trudeau, when he wanted to break with tradition during the constitutional patriation period.

Becoming even more ridiculous, Mr. MacEachen plays the virtuous man who does not want to sign a blank cheque, as if he was really asking himself whether the government will need these billions of dollars in 1985, he who presided as a Minister of Finance over the large deficits that these borrowings are now required to expunge.

Admittedly, in theory, these non-elected people have the power to oppose the elected ones, but in practice, and because of the way they have been appointed, they have lost the credibility and the legitimacy to do so.

Liberal obstruction has a cost. This delay in borrowing, in a period of rising interest rates, leads the Canadian government into unnecessary expenses. They are forcing the government to throw money out of the window.

That recently appointed Liberal senators, with not enough to do, lonesome for petty politics, entertain themselves trying to settle old political scores, surprises no one, and this will allow the public to question even more seriously the usefulness of this institution.

In fact, I believe the Leader of the Opposition yesterday was trying to erect tit for tat into a parliamentary and statesman-like position. That they are "trying to settle old political scores surprises no one, and this will allow the public to question even more seriously the usefulness of this institution". I will say to Senator Haidasz, this is not me, not Senator Murray, and not the government. This is public opinion. I will continue:

But their golden pensions are already enough of a scandal—

Senator Thériault: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator Roblin: I will not answer any questions until I am finished, and if it is a question of the honourable senator, I will have no difficulty whatsoever with it. I know that.

Senator Thériault: Does the Leader of the Government know how many readers of Le Devoir there are in Montreal and in Quebec?

Senator Roblin: I know how many readers Le Devoir has in the Province of Quebec, and I know that its influence extends into every nook and cranny of the intellectual community in that province. If the honourable senator finds the figure a comfort, he is welcome to it. This settling of:

—old political scores, surprises no one, and this will allow the public to question even more seriously the usefulness of this institution. But their golden pensions are already enough of a scandal—

Get that point.

—without their forcing the public to pay for their silly little games. Eventually it might perhaps be good to create another form of Senate. But the one that manifests itself today could not plead with greater eloquence the case for its abolition.

● (1450)

Senator Haidasz: How could you lower yourself to read such an article?

Senator Roblin: I have no trouble and I intend to read another one that is just as good. What the honourable senator seems to be saying is that he feels he can ignore public opinion. He says, "Pay no attention to what you read in the newspapers and, for God's sake, don't read it here because we might learn something." He is telling me that he does not care about public opinion. I say that one of the most tragic aspects of this debate is that our enthusiasm—

Senator Haidasz: We know all about the articles because we have read them.

Senator Roblin: —has carried us away to the point where this institution is being, in my opinion, defamed in the public press but, nevertheless, with some shadow of justice.

Senator MacEachen: Come on now.

Senator Roblin: I want to read another one. I know that Senator Haidasz will not like it, but I want him to listen so I am going to give it to him just the same.

Senator Nurgitz: Is it from a Toronto paper?

Senator Roblin: I want Senator Davey to take note that it comes from the Globe and Mail.

Senator Davey: Then it is gospel.

Senator Roblin: I play no favourites. I quote the Star, the Globe and Mail and Le Devoir, which provides a pretty good cross-section of an important body of public opinion. Here we go:

It is a testament to the absurdity of the Canadian Senate that the message of Sept. 4 doesn't seem to have registered in the red chamber.

That message—worth repeating for Liberal senators—was an overwhelming rejection of the Liberal Party.

Yet, for a month, Liberal senators have been defying the will not just of the House of Commons but of their own Liberal MPs.

I have to admit that this next bit is a bit strong.

Seldom has the intellectual corruption and arrogance of patronage been more dreadfully apparent.

That is strong meat.

Clearly, Liberal Leader John Turner has no control over this bunch, and his lack of control bodes ill for his image as party leader. His Commons troops agreed to a compromise on a Government borrowing bill on the last day before Christmas, in exchange for a debate on universality—

The Liberal senators, however, insist that the bill should be split so that next year's borrowing authority would be granted only after publication of spending estimates.

This is well and good, except that nobody else now sees things this way, including the elected representatives. But then arrogance always was a trademark of Trudeau Liberals.

Senator Murray: That is true enough.

Senator Roblin:

And who, pray—

I am sorry for the Leader of the Opposition because I am being bit hard on him today, but this sentiment is not mine, this is public opinion speaking. The article goes on:

And who, pray tell, is leading the Liberal charge in the Senate? Allan MacEachen—

It does not say Allan J.; perhaps we had better tell the author about that.

Senator MacEachen: Who is that, Jeffrey Simpson?

Senator Roblin:

—Allan MacEachen (Pierre Trudeau's deputy prime minister), Joyce Fairbairn (Mr. Trudeau's legislative assistant),—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: Save your applause, there is more to come.

—Michael Kirby (Mr. Trudeau's adviser),—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin:

—John Stewart (Trudeau appointee)—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: He gets a double encomium.

—(Trudeau appointee and MacEachen friend),—

Give him another round of applause for that.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin:

Royce Frith (Trudeau appointee and Ontario campaign chairman). Even Senator Ian Sinclair, who chaired Mr. Turner's Toronto fundraising dinner last fall, has got in on the Liberal act.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin:

(Mr. Sinclair did the impossible Tuesday night on The Journal—he got licked by Finance Minister Michael Wilson.)

Senator Sinclair: There will be another time. I can wait.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that Mr. Wilson would like that. I think he would object. I maintain that Senator Sinclair is a far more formidable opponent than this particular reference would lead anyone to believe. I know what I am talking about.

Senator Murray: It was Barbara Frum who beat him.

Senator Sinclair: There will be another time.

Senator Roblin:

Accustomed to wielding power,—

An Hon. Senator: That is enough.

Senator Roblin: I want you to hear this because it indicates what they think of us in the Senate.

Senator Corbin: We don't want to hear it; we have read it.

Senator Roblin: It will do you good to hear it again.

Accustomed to wielding power, this gang apparently cannot bear the pain of opposition. So it is trying to make mischief: a Senate committee has never spent more than one sitting on a borrowing bill since 1977-78—

Certainly the Tories in opposition used to scream—

I am being fair here because I am giving you both sides of it.

Certainly the Tories in opposition used to scream about the Liberals asking for borrowing authority without sufficient spending details. But the Conservatives did indicate the broad lines of spending in the November economic statement.

Lest anyone think the Liberal senators are riding the white charger of principle, consider this. They now say that upon seeing the estimates, they will quickly pass the 1985 borrowing requirement.

In other words, the senators are not really interested in examining the estimates and forming an intelligent judgment on borrowing needs. They are just playing classroom politics, making themselves feel good and their party look bad—

Any Tory Government will be confronted with Liberal patronage holders capable of delaying or blocking legislation. If the Liberal senators get frisky on something as routine as a borrowing bill, one shudders at the prospect of their conceit if the Liberals ever get a bit of wind in their sails.

Mr. Turner must quickly lay down the law to this bunch, or see his own leadership held up to continuing and justified ridicule.

Senator Haidasz: Trash!

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, on a point of order, the honourable senator has been doing some selective reading.

[Senator Roblin.]

He implied that he was reading the article in its entirety, but he has left out three paragraphs, which I would be happy to read into the record, if the honourable senator would like.

Senator Roblin: I would be glad to do it myself.

Senator Davey: Let's have the part that you did not read. One talks about managing the news—the leader reads an article but does not give us the whole thing.

Senator Roblin: All right, you will get the rest of it.

The gang's argument runs—

That is you he is talking about.

Senator Davey: There are three separate parts that you have missed. I have marked them.

Senator Roblin: I think I had better start at the beginning and read it all over again.

Senator Argue: Why don't you just table it?

Senator Roblin:

It is a testament to the absurdity of the Canadian Senate—

Senator MacEachen: Let's close, for God's sake.

Senator Roblin:

—that the message of—

Senator MacEachen: We have all read it.

Senator Roblin: Do you mean to say that I can dispense?

Senator MacEachen: Definitely.

Senator Roblin: Do you think Senator Davey would like me to dispense?

Senator Davey: Would the honourable senator like me to read the three sections that he did not read?

Senator Roblin: No, I will be glad to read them myself. Which ones?

Senator Davey: One paragraph begins with "The gang's argument".

Senator Roblin: Which one?

Senator Davey: The one you started to read.

Senator Roblin: All right.

The gang's argument runs this way. We'll pass the $7-billion for this fiscal year if the Government will return with another borrowing bill after publication of the estimates, now slated for next week.

Everybody knows that that is what you fellows stand for.

Senator Davey: Now the third last paragraph.

Senator Roblin: I have already read the third last paragraph, but I shall read it again.

In other words, the senators are not really interested in examining the estimates—

Senator Davey: That is not the third last paragraph.

Senator Roblin: Which one do you want?

Senator Davey: The one you are reading is the fourth last paragraph and the one you did not read is the third last.

Senator Roblin: Then let me read it.

The details of this scuffle are less important than the implications. Thanks to years of Liberal patronage, the Liberals will control the Senate into the twenty-first century even if, as expected, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney appoints his own cronies and supporters to fill vacancies.

There you have it. I want to make sure that Senator Davey is satisfied. Is there anything else that he would like me to read?

Senator Davey: That is almost the entire article. The honourable senator did miss three or four lines but they are not relevant. That is fine and I thank him.

Senator Roblin: As long as my honourable friend is satisfied. I regret that there is no mention of him in this article.

Senator Murray: There is by implication.

Senator Roblin: There you are.

That is public opinion. I know that honourable senators on the other side will find it hard to accept that I mean what I say, but I do. I get no pleasure from quoting those references from the Star, Le Devoir or the Globe and Mail, because I am a member of this institution. I am proud to be a member of this institution. I remember with pride what this institution can do—the ability that we have shown by the use of discrete and circumspect measures in recommending changes that governments will accept without confrontation. I remember what this chamber does in the work of its committees, in the Agriculture Committee, the Defence Committee, and the other committees which operate under our auspices.

If I did not believe that this was a worthwhile body that could do something good for the people of Canada, then I would not be here. I get no pleasure from recording the public opinion expressed in the newspapers of this country about what we are, what we do, how we act, how we behave and the contribution we make in the public interest.

That is the tragedy of this. That is what is wrong with this debate. That is why we should have abstained from forcing the issue as far as we have.

● (1500)

Had we followed our traditional role—and here I appeal to men like Senators Hicks, McElman, and Barrow, who have been committee chairmen—had we followed our traditional role of expressing what we thought was wrong with a bill—as vigorously as we like, and we have been quite vigorous in the past—we would have done our duty. Had we done that and pointed out what we viewed as the defects, we would have done our duty. Had we restricted ourselves to the prudent course followed by this chamber in the years that I have been here, we would have done our duty.

The prudent course that has been followed by this chamber recognizes that this is not 1867. In 1867, this chamber was given the same powers as those of the House of Lords, and they are enormous powers. In theory, we can do anything the House of Commons can do, with the exception of introducing money bills. But we would be prudent to exercise that power, not in terms of the House of Lords in 1867, but in terms of the Senate of Canada in 1985.

That is the tragedy.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I read these quotations to this house with no pleasure, because they reflect just as much on me as they do on anybody else. We may be talking about the Liberal Party today, but it might be our turn next. It reflects on all of us as senators. That is why I grieve, and that is why I think it is my duty to tell this Senate what the public is saying about us and to say to the members of this house that the principle of sober second thought is no idle tag; it has real substance and meaning. If we are ever going to exercise sober second thought, I suggest it has to be on issues such as the one before us now and on others, should they arise in the future.

That concludes what I have to say. The general impression is abroad that the Senate is fiddling while the people pay for the tune. That is a sad conclusion to have to come to; it is a sad emotion to be loose in the field of public opinion. It does the Constitution little good. It does not reflect well on what we try to do. And it affects not the opposition alone but every one of us.

I plead for sober second thought on the motion that is before the house, and I ask honourable senators to support it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P. C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be instructed to report Bill C-11, intituled: "An Act to provide borrowing authority", later this day.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Guay: On a point of order, may I ask if the acting chairman of the National Finance Committee is present today? I should like to know whether he is available in the event that the committee does sit.

Senator Roblin: The acting chairman of the committee is Senator Kelly, and I have to report to the house that neither the chairman nor the acting chairman is in attendance today. I can say, however, without breaking any confidence, that after this vote is concluded we will be able to have a short discussion about future sittings of the committee.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate why it is that the government has not called the House of Commons into session this week so that the President of the Treasury Board could table the main estimates for 1985-86, in which event the National Finance Committee could meet on Bill C-11 and deal with the bill forthwith.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, this is the question that my honourable friend raised yesterday. The estimates will be tabled on Tuesday, February 26 next.

Senator Hicks: Surely, honourable senators, this is all out of order. We are in the midst of taking a vote.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Please call in the senators.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order to deal with the query raised by Senator Guay a short time ago regarding a future meeting of the Senate Committee on National Finance.

I think that the view of the government is well known, or should be by now, and that is that it wants the committee to meet as soon as possible. I have been informed, I think correctly, by the steering committee that they proposed that the committee should meet next Tuesday at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, on the assumption that the main estimates will then have been tabled in this chamber.

I need not say that I will continue to push with all my force for an earlier date than that for the reasons I have stated, but we just had the vote, the outcome was decisive, and I understand that the majority will have its way. So, I suppose I am reconciled to the fact that we have done what we can and we must deal with the situation in which we find ourselves. If I had an indication that my information about the committee is correct—that it intends to meet at 4 o'clock next Tuesday, on the assumption that the estimates will be before the chamber—I would then have a chance to consider the question of adjournment.

● (1530)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is my information that the steering committee of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance did meet today and recommended that the next meeting of the committee as a whole be on Tuesday next, sometime following the presentation of the main estimates.

I know the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been pushing for an earlier meeting, and I have been pushing for an earlier presentation of the estimates. We are both disappointed because neither push has succeeded. I think the recommendation of the steering committee is a sound one. I do not see any reasonable basis upon which to hold a meeting earlier.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I thank my friend for his statement. I am afraid that he is right—there is nothing further the government minority can do in this matter, because we are a minority in the steering committee and in this chamber as a whole, so we accept that situation.

If that is the case and the committee does not meet until Tuesday afternoon, there is, of course, no business which ought to detain the Senate between now and then. Therefore, I have no alternative but to ask my honourable friend, the Whip, to propose a motion that we adjourn until that time.

Hon. Charles McElman: Perhaps, before that is done, I may be permitted to state that at the steering committee meeting this morning there was unanimity. There was no vote of any kind. There was a unanimous view of the subcommittee which encompasses both parties in this chamber.

Senator Roblin: I suppose that is so because our representative on the committee can count as well as I can. He knows when he is in a minority.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 26th February, 1985, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 26, 1985, at 2 p.m.

THE HONOURABLE IAN SINCLAIR

NOMINATION TO BUSINESS HALL OF FAME

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, to begin our proceedings on a friendly and happy note, in the expectation that it will persist during the afternoon, I draw the attention of honourable senators to the gratifying news report concerning one of our number, Senator Ian David Sinclair. I note that he has been named to the Business Hall of Fame by Junior Achievement of Canada.

The honour has been bestowed upon him for his achievements as former chairman of Canadian Pacific Enterprises Limited of Calgary. It forgot to add that for many years he was chairman of Canadian Pacific Limited, which is the parent of CPE, and that he is now a member of the Canadian Senate. Under his leadership Canadian Pacific became a multinational conglomerate. So the young people in the business world have, I believe, chosen wisely in deciding to honour him in their Business Hall of Fame. I know that all honourable senators would wish to join me in congratulating Senator Sinclair.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Thank you, honourable senators. I look forward to receiving this honour, to dealing with young people and encouraging them. It shows what can happen to one when he is put on a hit team. I was put on a hit team last week and it is already starting to pay off.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker *pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

26 February 1985

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 26th day of February, 1985, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be

Sir,

Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a number of questions for the Leader of the Government. My first concerns a matter that has been making the headlines recently, namely, the decline in the level of the Canadian dollar. As honourable senators know, the discount, the devaluation, the relationship of the Canadian dollar to the American dollar is now 40-plus per cent.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): How much?

Senator Sinclair: Forty-odd per cent. At this time it is still over 70 cents. My question is this: In light of the worldwide push on the flight of the American dollar, aside from smoothing, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to pressure—that word is too strong—to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister, for discussion at the Shamrock summit, due shortly, a plea to the President of the United States to take some action that will prevent further flights in that dollar and reverse it so that pressures that flow from its value will not adversely affect the Canadian economy?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is a very reasonable approach to a very difficult problem. I appreciate the tenor of my friend's remarks. It is a fact that the Canadian dollar, as compared to the American dollar, started at $1.03. While there has not been a completely steady decline in the value of the Canadian dollar, there has indeed been a decline from $1.03 to something over 71 cents at present.

I gather from what my honourable friend says that he thinks that events in the United States have quite a bearing on this problem. I would not be surprised if he were right. Probably the main influences have to be the state of the American budget and its deficit which have an effect on interest rates and the inflows of money, all of which are basic to our problem. I suspect that my honourable friend has that in mind and, if he has, I am inclined to agree with him.

I am not altogether sure how far I can go in pledging that the Prime Minister will undertake to raise this particular matter with the President of the United States. I am sure that it can and should be referred to as an outstanding problem in both our countries, because the high value of the American dollar is equally disturbing to large members of the industrial community and farming community of that country. In a sense it is a problem we both share—their dollar is too high and ours is too low. I shall certainly see that the Prime Minister receives the benefit of my honourable friend's suggestion.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: And his regards.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. While the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was in Washington recently, the British press, at least, indicated that she had raised this issue with the President of the United States. As I understand those reports, she did not get very far. However, we in Canada are more closely aligned economically with the United States than the United Kingdom and we see right in Ottawa what is happening today, for instance, in the forest products area, where Americans are saying that the low Canadian dollar is putting pressure on United States producers, who are suggesting various means to limit imports of lumber. For these various reasons, even though the head of the central bank in the United States has said that Americans should get down on their knees and thank the good Lord for a high American dollar and considering that the Prime Minister will likely attend the Shamrock summit on—what he terms in his use of “sacred” epitomes from time to time—a sacred instrument of travel, perhaps he can get a little further. I would ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate to urge the Prime Minister, when he is talking to President Reagan, not to be dissuaded because Mrs. Thatcher did not get anywhere, since we, in Canada, are in a little different position.

● (1410)

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend would like me to tell him that the Government of Canada is very concerned about access to the American market and the implications of the price of the U.S. and Canadian dollar with respect to that. That seems to me to be one of the main problems that our economy is facing in the next little while, to withstand the protectionist sentiment in the United States and to maintain our access to the American market.

Fortunately, in President Reagan we have a man who has been battling, quite stoutly, I think, against the forces of protectionism in the United States, although not always entirely successfully. Therefore, I have hopes that when the Prime Minister raises the question of access to the American market, which I am sure he will do, that will be a subject which the President will listen to receptively.

Senator Sinclair: My next question arises from a statement by the Prime Minister in which he raised a question that I think should be answered. The question that he raised was: “What the hell makes us so special?” Honourable senators, I think the answer to that question is easy and the very asking of it must bother the descendants of the Selkirk settlers, United Empire Loyalists and others. The answer is that we are Canadians, and I would hope that the Leader of the Government in the Senate would assist the Prime Minister in arriving at that answer at an appropriate time.

UNITED NATIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In the February 17, 1985 edition of the New York Times, an article on the subject of UNESCO appeared. This article reported that a meeting had taken place in Paris at which Canadian officials were reported to be threatening to withdraw from UNESCO.

My question is this: Is there a change in the government's policy with respect to the United Nations and some of its constituent bodies, such as UNESCO?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do know that the question of membership in UNESCO has been occupying the attention of a number of countries which have been or still are members. If there is an announcement to make as to any change in policy from Canada, I will be glad to inform my honourable friend.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Some of us were rather shocked to hear yesterday that the present government is backing out of a commitment by the previous government to help the Domtar Company in modernizing its establishment in Windsor, Quebec, in the hope of taking advantage of current North American markets as well as protecting jobs in that high unemployment area. I am sure my honourable colleagues from the Province of Quebec will want to deal with the specifics of that announcement.

However, the matter does raise some grave concern in the minds of honourable senators from the Atlantic provinces, in view of the response yesterday in the House of Commons from the minister responsible that there were four or five more companies waiting in line for government assistance of the same type. I will not ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate who those four or five companies are or where they are located in Canada, or what type of paper they are engaged in producing, but I will ask him this: A new company by the name of Repap did obtain a firm commitment from the previous government for financial aid to the tune of some $44 million to establish a mill on the Miramichi in New Brunswick. Is the current government going to go back on that deal, and if that is a sign of things to come in the months and years ahead, how does the Leader of the Government in the Senate think the Atlantic provinces are going to fare in the short and long term in face of this newly announced policy by the government that, henceforth, moneys will be refused because others may need help and the government wants to be in a position to tell all of them that there are no moneys available?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can only repeat the information that was given in the other place with respect to Domtar. The minister stated that he regarded that as a commercially viable project and that financing should be secured from non-governmental sources. He also stated that, in the meantime, there was no prospect of job losses. That was the information that was given in the other place.

I must say, however, that I have no information about the company to which my honourable friend referred. I will have to take that part of the question as notice.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I draw to your attention that many people have been led to the conclusion that investment policy in Canada insofar as it involves government help will now be set out in Washington. The underlying pattern in this whole decision seems to be that we are not going to do anything that is going to create little waves in the American economy, that we are going to be good boys and girls and we are going to keep quiet and will not come to the assistance of Canadian companies that wish to maintain or create new jobs.

That is a matter for deep concern and deep thought. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate can, in fact, confirm that American authorities have asked the Canadian minister not to proceed at this time with assistance to that company, or whether they have used words to that effect.

Senator Roblin: I am not able to confirm any such information, but I merely point out, as Senator Sinclair has pointed out, that insofar as the lumber industry and the wood industry, and our export market in the United States are concerned, Canadian exports are under considerable pressure, and our main policy objective at the present time is to try to retain our access to those markets.

AGRICULTURE

DISCUSSION PAPER "TAX ISSUES IN AGRICULTURE"— SUGGESTED REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding a report that was either initiated or, in fact, prepared by the Department of Finance concerning the income of farmers in Canada.

Inasmuch as this report indicates that farmers' income is much higher than that of the average Canadian, and inasmuch as this contradicts or, at least, is in disagreement with recent reports that have come from the Farm Credit Corporation and a number of other organizations, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could tell us whether or not that report will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry so that the committee can get at the people who prepared the report in order to find out what kind of bias they worked from.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to admit that I, too, raised my eyebrows when I read that report. I am told—and I am not sure if this is correct or not—that difference among the mathematicians, the economists, has to do with the treatment of increases in capital value. Whether that is true or not, I do now know, but it might offer some glimmer of light on the problem. Nevertheless, I will take my honourable friend's question under advisement and let him know.

● (1420)

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY—UNITED STATES INTERVENTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to follow up on the question raised by Senator Corbin with respect to the funding for the paper mill at Windsor, Quebec. The Minister of Tourism in giving reasons for the refusal to continue with the commitment of the former government to provide $100 million to this industry stated that part of the reason was representations from the United States. I want to ask the honourable leader; who made the representations to the Government of Canada and when they were made? I know that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Honourable Sinclair Stevens, had met with Mr. Baldrige several days before he made his decision. I would like to know if, indeed, Mr. Baldrige had leaned on Mr. Sinclair, or whether the American ambassador in Ottawa had visited ministers to sound the alarm bells. Can the honourable gentleman throw some light on this?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can throw no light on it at the present time. I will have to ask the minister who made the statement what he had in mind.

Senator MacEachen: While I thank the Leader of the Government for undertaking to make some inquiries, in his letter to the Domtar principals Mr. Stevens said that he had been in touch with the Canadian ambassador in Washington who told him that this grant might be regarded as unfair competition and provide ammunition in their case against Canadian softwood producers. I ask whether the Government of Canada now believes that such a grant would constitute unfair competition by Canada, and why, in his letter, does Mr. Stevens give legitimacy to an argument which has been invoked repeatedly by the United States and which has been resisted by Canada. I want to know whether the Government of Canada has now concluded that grants of this kind constitute unfair competition by Canada against the United States producers.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is no doubt aware that that argument has been advanced by American timber interests on more occasions than one. In fact, quite recently the whole of our timber exports from British Columbia and western Canada were under the threat of an embargo from the United States because the timber industry in that country had advanced the notion that our system of calculating stumpages constituted a subsidy. It was after considerable effort and representations by Canada that the American authorities involved in the matter decided that this was not a subsidy. We are all thankful for that because it would have been a catastrophic decision for western Canada had it been otherwise.

As to whether or not this particular subject constitutes a subsidy in the eyes of the Americans I cannot say, but I am willing to ask the minister in order to ascertain how he would like me to elucidate the question raised by my honourable friend. There is no question at all that access to the American market is threatened by their views on subsidies. That is not necessarily our view on subsidy but the issue is on the table and that must be admitted. I do not know the answer to my friend's question but I will try to find out.

Senator MacEachen: I agree with the honourable leader as to the importance of the lumber case to which he has referred. I was deeply involved in that particular case.

Senator Roblin: You did a good job.

Senator MacEachen: It is true that the United States alleges unfair competition. They had no case in the matter cited, quite rightly, by the Leader of the Government, but they have alleged in other cases against fisheries products from the Atlantic provinces that there is unfair competition. Producers of many commodities in the United States make that allegation and Canadian producers and the Canadian government must go through tedious and time-consuming procedures in order to controvert the allegations made by the United States. We object to it but we do it. What I find objectionable is that the minister in the letter to Domtar should give legitimacy to that claim by citing it as a reason for not giving the grant.

I should like the government to consider that point and to make clear that, in this particular case and in other cases, we do not regard grants to industries—this was a grant for the modernization of the pulp and paper industry—as necessarily constituting unfair competition. If we accept that, what do we do about our regional development programs?

I hope the Leader of the Government will reflect upon this and give us a clear assurance that the Government of Canada does not lend legitimacy to these arguments by the United States.

Senator Roblin: I will certainly reflect upon it because it is an important issue. We know what the Americans think about subsidies of steel imports from across the world. They have placed quotas and restrictions on the importation of steel from the European Economic Community, Brazil and other countries.

We were caught up in that same net although we, on our side, felt that in no way did the charge of subsidy apply to us. It was only after invoking some of the articles of GATT—I may be talking to the man who did it, for all I know, because I appreciate and acknowledge what the former minister has done in respect of international trade—and it was only after the most vigorous efforts that we secured some relief from that.

The Americans take this question of subsidies very seriously. With the protectionist sentiment that is now loose in that country, this represents a real problem.

I also concur with my honourable friend in thinking that we must defend as best we can our view of what constitutes a subsidy and what does not. I repeat my answer that I will try to get an answer on this subject for him.

Hon. Lowell Murray: As a supplementary question, when the minister is obtaining that information from his colleague, would he also ask whether representations with respect to the proposed grant were made to the government by other Canadian plants and companies of that industry; if so, to what effect; and how heavily those representations weighed in the eventual decision of the minister?

Senator Roblin: I shall add those items to my inquiries.

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate remind the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that, in the province of Manitoba, the project of Manfor would never have been established and would never have undertaken modernization and upgrading if there had been no government assistance?

Would he also remind the minister that the GATT and all other international trade agreements specifically exclude any grants which are made for regional development or are aimed at reducing disparities; that the American view of the world cannot be applied in Canada; and that those kinds of programs have to exist in slow-growth areas?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend raises an excellent point on which I am sure there is no disagreement. We believe we have a duty to take into account regional disparities in this country, and that may mean government assistance to help reduce those disparities. That is a settled part of our policy, and I hope it will remain so.

ROYAL ASSENT

ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, the fact that we are having Royal Assent later this afternoon reminded me that several years ago there was a movement afoot in the Senate—I remember having some research done by the Library of Parliament—towards considering alternative forms of Royal Assent, which could be very convenient. As we all know, in this regard we are about 80 years behind Australia, and I forget how many years behind the United Kingdom.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: What has happened to the suggestion that we might reform our form of Royal Assent and bring ourselves into the twentieth century? If the honourable gentleman cannot give me an answer, would he look into the matter and consider some action?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my problem in this instance is that the matter in question was introduced prior to the accession to office of the present administration. It is, therefore, not within my power to tell my honourable friend what happened to the matter during that time. In this matter, we had a staunch advocate in Senator Flynn, and it may be that the subject should be re-opened. However, at the present time I have no information in this regard.

Senator Godfrey: If I persuade Senator Frith to provide the Leader of the Government with all the information I passed to him in this regard, would he consider the matter?

Senator Roblin: Anything that Senator Frith was willing to read, I will read.

AGRICULTURE

DISCUSSION PAPER "TAX ISSUES IN AGRICULTURE"— GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the subject raised by Senator Olson. I refer to the white paper issued recently by the Honourable Michael Wilson, Minister of Finance, entitled Tax Issues in Agriculture. I would characterize that document as a vicious, false, unscrupulous attack on Canadian agricultural producers. In my mind, there is no doubt about that. I would ask the Leader of the Government to see if the Minister of Finance and the government will disassociate themselves from the kind of statements contained in this document, to which Canadian agricultural producers are taking exception.

● (1430)

I would ask the Leader of the Government to look at the statement which compares average farm income of $16,900 to the average Canadian income of $12,960. However, it does not compare the farm income portion, since 45 per cent of that figure of $16,900 is non-farm income.

I would also ask the Leader of the Government to look into what I consider to be a most misleading table, which claims to show that farmland has appreciated dramatically from 1960 to 1983, which no doubt it has. But a table should have been included showing the depreciation of farmland since the peak of about 1981. In my area, Regina has heavy clayland which, I would say, has depreciated 40 per cent during that period of time.

[Senator Godfrey.]

I would like the Leader of the Government to ask the minister to disassociate both himself and the government from the statement contained in this document that farmers, in fact, have received an average rate of return on capital in farming, over a seven-year period, from 1975 to 1981, of 17.3 per cent. I say that is false and misleading, because farmers did not have that income. It was something on paper. Land values have now fallen. Yet this statement says that farmers received a return of 17.3 per cent on their investment as compared to yields on government bonds of 10.6 per cent. It is a vicious attack all the way through.

Another fact that should have been pointed out in this document is that farmers basically have no pensions, as have government employees and many employees in private industry. They do not have a pension system of their own. Anything they have is tied up in the value of their farmland, and it is not at all fair to compare a paper gain on farmland as part of their income.

I have asked this series of questions because I consider this to be a most mischievous document, and the sooner it is debunked the better; and I agree with Senator Olson that the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry should have a hand in that debunking.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will give the honourable senator the same answer I gave Senator Olson, namely, that I will see whether this document can be scrutinized by a Senate committee, or Parliament—but preferably the Senate. We can then examine its makeup, the principles on which it is founded, and consider alternative ways of looking at the same problem. I agree with my honourable friend most heartily that there are alternative ways of looking at the same problem.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that these matters create unrest and uncertainty, perhaps the Leader of the Government can arrange to have the Minister of Finance point out that unrealized capital gains were a major factor in the study. That statement, I believe, would have some effect.

Senator Roblin: I believe my honourable friend has put his finger on one of the main problems that should be discussed. I agree that the question is very important.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRANS-BORDER POLLUTION PROBLEMS

Hon. Allan MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, given the early meeting between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada, referred to by Senator Sinclair, and given the fact that more than one-half of the sulphur emissions descending upon Canada originate in the United States, can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the government will be presenting a plan of action to the President of the United States to deal with this urgent question of acid rain, and whether the government will be reminding the United States of the obligations, which it has already undertaken with Canada, to reduce these emissions which are affecting so adversely the Canadian environment?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe that my honourable friend is well aware that the subject of acid rain will be an important item on the agenda. However, it would be discourteous of us to attempt to debate this matter prior to the Prime Minister's discussion with the President of the United States. I have no knowledge as to what form the discussion will take, but I am quite sure that the Prime Minister will put forward the strongest case for some action.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether I understand correctly the present Canadian policy. Is it Canadian policy now that Canada must do more domestically before it can ask the United States to do anything to control its emissions of sulphur dioxide over the Canadian environment?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend that it is clearly the policy of the Canadian government to do more in the control of acid rain, because, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, not long ago a conference was held between the federal and provincial governments on that subject, and although the conference was not conclusive it clearly established the thrust which the federal government wishes to pursue in reducing acid rain. I believe that is something that we are going to do, regardless of what our attitude toward the United States might be.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer. Can I take it that the Canadian government does not support any catch-up practice on the part of Canada with respect to acid rain; that we have to catch up and then, some years down the road, when we have caught up, we can expect the United States to do more? I hope the Leader of the Government will agree with me that the United States has already given undertakings to Canada which should prompt it immediately to join with Canada in a control program. Would the Leader of the Government agree with that statement?

Senator Roblin: Yes, I would agree with it the last statement.

THE ENVIRONMENT

NEWFOUNDLAND—INTEGRATION OF WEATHER SERVICES

Question No. 4 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

With reference to Environment Canada news release PR-HQ-084-13, what is the list of the operations of Weather Services which will be integrated in the Province of Newfoundland?

Reply by the Minister of the Environment:

1. Goose Bay Aerological Station.
2. Goose Bay Weather Office.

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR OCEAN DEVELOPMENT BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for the second reading of the Bill C-22, intituled: "An Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto".—(Honourable Senator Hicks.)

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, my good friend, Senator Macquarrie, can always be counted upon to introduce some interesting aspects to the remarks that he makes in any debate in this chamber, and he certainly did so when he moved second reading of this bill to incorporate ICOD, the International Centre for Ocean Development.

He commenced his remarks by referring to the arms of Nova Scotia and expressed his disappointment that the arms granted to Nova Scotia at the time of Confederation did not have a codfish on them but a salmon. I must confess that I myself felt that it was a codfish. But when he went on to tell me—I do not believe he mentioned this in the chamber—that he did not see why Nova Scotia would have a salmon on its arms because we had no salmon fishery in Nova Scotia, I had to object to that. Indeed, in the good old days we had a very good salmon fishery in Nova Scotia. If the honourable senator went to the Nova Scotia Archives he would find documents relating to the employment of woodworkers and others which contained a clause to the effect that they must not be fed salmon more than three times per week. I must confess that the salmon are not that plentiful in Nova Scotia today, nor are they in New Brunswick, Newfoundland or Quebec, and certainly not in Prince Edward Island.

• (1440)

In any event, those arms that were granted to Nova Scotia by, I would think, some accident in 1868 are no longer the arms of Nova Scotia. The arms of Nova Scotia were granted about 1625, certainly prior to 1632, by King James VI of Scotland to Sir William Alexander who undertook to arrange some settlements in Nova Scotia and who created the baronets of Nova Scotia. They, of course, are the reverse of the shield of the arms of Scotland with the royal lion in the centre and the accompanying supporting devices. I must acknowledge to my honourable friend Senator Macquarrie that it was not until 1928 that the then Government of Nova Scotia, a Conservative government, the Rhodes-Hearington Government, secured the restoration of the ancient Scottish-originated arms of Nova Scotia to the province, so the question as to whether we have a codfish or salmon on the arms of Nova Scotia is no longer relevant.

There is an interesting little footnote to all this. The Nova Scotia Technical College, which recently changed its name to the inelegant one of TUNS, Technical University of Nova Scotia, incorporated in its coat of arms the confederation arms of Nova Scotia. So the salmon is still perpetuated in the armorial bearings of the Technical University of Nova Scotia. Honourable senators, perhaps I have taken too much time about a matter which is really not relevant to the motion before us, but I was intrigued by Senator Macquarrie's scholarship, erudition and his reference to this matter.

The International Centre for Ocean Development has already been put together and is actually functioning in Nova Scotia, even though the act of incorporation has not yet been passed and received Royal Assent. The centre is presided over by a very bright young man who came to it from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in Ottawa, named Gary Vernon. He tells me that they plan to operate in three basic areas. They are providing information, largely but not exclusively, to developing and third world countries concerning the management of ocean resources; they plan to provide training and they plan to give development assistance, largely by the creation and support of institutions in the various third world countries of the world.

Already, and they have only been in operation for a few months, they have 49 proposals before them for assistance and for the support of projects in the Caribbean, in the South Pacific, in South Asia, in East and West Africa, and in South America. This bill will legitimize the enterprise and provide financial support for it, which is very important.

The financial support undertaken by the previous government in 1981 dollars was $20 million over a five-year period. As of now that would amount to $27 million. This bill provides support to the extent of $800,000 to the end of the current fiscal year, which is the end of March. Of course, we must pass this bill so that it can receive Royal Assent in order for them to get the $800,000 for this fiscal year. Then it undertakes to provide, according to clause 18(b), $2.5 million in the next fiscal year and such sums as Parliament may provide in the ensuing years. I am not criticizing the amounts, though they, perhaps, are not as satisfactory as a firm commitment of $4 million a year for five years. However, I suspect that as the institution shows it requires and deserves support, the Government of Canada, which has stood behind it, will provide that support.

It goes without saying that the establishment of this institution in Halifax will be a major boost not only to the Halifax area, but to the maritime provinces in general. I should point out that in the Halifax area there are already very significant institutions for ocean study and ocean development. The federal government's Bedford Institute of Oceanography is a world-ranking institution, ranking with the Scripps Institute in California and the Woods Hole Institute of Oceanography in New England. My own former university includes the Dalhousie Institute of Oceanography which also has a world-ranked reputation. The Technical University of Nova Scotia, to which I already made reference—and which incorporates the salmon in its arms, Senator Macquarrie—is also doing very significant work, largely related to physical oceanography and characteristics of the sea. Saint Mary's University and even Mount Saint Vincent's University, which we normally think of as a ladies' or women's university, also have projects and programs which relate to ocean studies.

In any event, this new institution will support students from developing countries as well as Canadian students who will continue their studies on ocean development in the Atlantic provinces. Dalhousie University is presently occupied in its ocean study programs in developing a bibliography of ocean studies, which is to be sent to all developing countries at a cost they can afford. I am told by Gary Vernon that the new institute that we are incorporating today will make it possible for this bibliography to be made available to countries that otherwise might not be able to afford to buy it. I think this is a very imaginative program. I am delighted that it has been located in Halifax and that it is being supported by the Government of Canada.

I cannot help but take this opportunity to make one other reference, even though it relates primarily to something that is going on at Dalhousie University. The International Ocean Institute has its headquarters in the Island of Malta. That institute has a very interesting woman who has been very active in this program, Elizabeth Mann-Borghese, who is the daughter of the celebrated German novelist, Thomas Mann. She has arranged, under the auspices of the International Ocean Institute at Malta, to give two courses each year of ten weeks' duration to students of developing countries to study ocean problems. For the past four or five years one of these courses has always been held at Dalhousie University, and the other one is held at various places throughout the world, the most recent one being in Trinidad. They take approximately 20 students from developing countries supported by UNESCO, CIDA and OPEC to study ocean problems. This new institution which we are incorporating will assist in this program and, according to Dr. Vernon, who has spoken to me about it, will try also to develop courses of two to three weeks' duration, because officials at the highest levels who ought to benefit by this program sometimes cannot afford to be absent from their countries for the 10 weeks required to go through the Dalhousie program. I think this is a splendid proposal. I think it will be important, not only to developing countries of the world, but to all those nations who are concerned with the management of the oceans which cover by far the largest proportion of this globe.

• (1450)

Last, but not least, it will be important to Canada itself. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and to ensure its rapid passage.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak at length on this item. However, after hearing Senator Macquarrie's speech the other night, I felt that perhaps I should make a few remarks.

One point that Senator Macquarrie made left the impression with me that somehow we were, in the past, perhaps not able fully to utilize the resources of the sea which were within our control. I might say, honourable senators, that Canada's history in fishery management, going back to the creation of this country, constitutes an extremely proud record. One has only to consult the list of those who have served in many other countries, under Commonwealth schemes, under United Nations schemes and under many multilateral co-operative schemes, to see that Canada's expertise is sought after and is appreciated. It is perhaps for this reason that I felt I should say a word about this international centre.

Recently, I had occasion to spend two and a half days in the archives, in the preparation of a paper I was doing, looking at the file on the Law of the Sea and the extension of its jurisdiction. I would point out to honourable senators that the record of Canada's role in the Law of the Sea Conference is completely out of proportion to its size and its influence in the world. This record goes back to the time of Jack Davis in the early 1970s and even before, to the time of Hedard Robichaud, both former Ministers of Fisheries, and including several Secretaries of State for External Affairs. In the past we have been, and we are now, leaders in that area. When one goes through the file, one sees the extraordinary efforts made by politicians and by officials of the half dozen or so departments involved.

However, we could not have achieved the extension of jurisdiction that we did without the active co-operation of many coastal countries; countries that did not even know the wealth of the resources that lay within their 200-mile limit. It is because of their sustained support for some of the difficult theses that we were recommending that we have been so successful. One only has to look at the survival and protection of salmon way beyond the 200-mile limit to understand what those concepts must have represented to nations that did not even know what a salmon was. Yet, it is a tribute to our negotiators and also to the sense of fairness and understanding among nations, some of whom are much poorer than we are, that we were able to achieve the goals that we set out to achieve.

Because this institute is intended to help less developed countries, it is a fair return that Canada is making to those countries who have undeveloped coastal zones and who wish to learn from our experience and even from our mistakes.

Honourable senators, I recommend the approval of this centre. I believe that Canadians will serve well in any forum of the world, and particularly where they are called upon to participate as workers in the centre and as hosts for others who come to visit us and to learn in our milieu. I congratulate the honourable senator who presented the bill, Senator Macquarrie, and I say to him that some day if he wants to eat good mackerel, perhaps he could drop in at my cottage at Cap de Cocagne.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that if the honourable Senator Macquarrie speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I must thank Senator Hicks and Senator LeBlanc for their helpful comments. I would like to say to Senator LeBlanc that, because I deplored the fact that we threw away too much of our fish, I was not denigrating any previous Ministers of Fisheries or other great Canadians who have done sterling work in reference to the Law of the Sea. He mentioned some of them. I would say that the Honourable George Drew made a significant contribution at a very important time. We also had a great deal of assistance from the Department of External Affairs and, during my lifetime, we have had some excellent people in the Department of Fisheries.

When I was first interested in the study of politics, the Minister of Fisheries task was a very easy one; it was a very simple task, as was that of the Postmaster General. In the olden days, the post of Solicitor General was considered unimportant and Arthur Meighen was not even in the cabinet. Think of what has happened in the complexities of our times to just those three portfolios. We do not now have a Postmaster General and perhaps that is something of a relief to those who might be in that difficult role today.

I do not like speaking in the evening, but if my speech elicited the kind of invitation that Senator LeBlanc has extended, I am delighted that I did. I assure him I will come over to see what the New Brunswick mackerel are like. Of course, if they are top notch, I am sure that they will have swum over from Prince Edward Island. In any event, I thank him for his invitation, and I thank Senator Hicks. If we had more time, perhaps we could have had a debate about how many cod or how many salmon could gule on the face of a coat of arms. However, I do appreciate his reference to the fact that, at one time, there were so many salmon in Nova Scotia it was forbidden to serve them too often.

Long ago in Prince Edward Island, there was an old Presbyterian joke about a certain lack of variety in the fare that was given to that now obsolete creature, the hired man. At this particular farm, the farmer always said a little grace before a meal and, as he was saying grace, the hired man was muttering something. After some time, it was discovered that he was muttering Hebrews 13:8. When you look that up, you will see it reads:

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and for ever.

He had become very tired of beans and prunes which, in those days, were cheap, although today they are not.

Senator Hicks mentioned Dr. Vernon, for whom I have the greatest respect, for giving great leadership to this project. However, there is also a very brilliant lady there, Evelyn Meltzer, whom I called when I wanted to find out something about these expressions used in reference to this centre. For instance, aquaculture and mariculture. She asked me to wait a second until she looked up her lecture notes, and then told me in about two minutes exactly what I wanted to know.

Senator Hicks seems to have some concern—and a rightful concern—about what would happen with respect to the financing. I must say that I, too, looked at the figures in clause 18 and, although I listened to all of the debates on Bill C-11 last week, I am still far from being a financial expert. I did add up all those figures and it looked to me as if this project could not be sustained on the original figure of $20 million. However, when I looked at the House of Commons Debates, I was gratified to see that the parliamentary secretary who was piloting the bill through the House of Commons, Mr. Stewart McInnes, indicated that the government's commitment was not only for $20 million; but that that would be rated in contemporary terms and it would come to $27 million.

I then had further conversations, and I cannot use the word "exponential" as that would indicate that we were thinking of something extravagant. However, here we are looking at something like an inverted pyramid.

● (1500)

Right now the institute does not have the capacity for the kind of full programming that it will have. I think they were very shrewd in getting these two specified items included, because, as Senator Hicks has pointed out, if this bill is passed we have achieved the same purpose as if the items were in the main estimates, and the second item will not require insertion by way of supplementary estimates.

All of the rest is to be planned as the program enlarges, as personnel are added, and as more projects in the international world are taken up. I think that Senator Hicks will agree that it will be well worth the $27 million. I am delighted with the commitment thereto and thank all honourable senators for their interest and those who spoke for their help.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

THE ESTIMATES, 1985-86

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e) I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine the expenditures proposed by the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1986, tabled in the Senate on 26th February, 1985.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

[Senator Macquarrie.]

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bielish, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, for the second reading of Bill C-29, intituled: "An Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act".—(Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.)

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-29, which was very ably introduced in the Senate by Senator Bielish. Senator Bielish, of course, has a real knowledge not only of this act, but of agriculture in general. As we all know, she played a very distinguished part in the agricultural life of Canada before being summoned to the Senate, and continues in the Senate to serve the agriculture industry very well indeed. So, I am pleased to follow Senator Bielish.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Argue: The bill before us provides for an amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act so that a payment will be made in time for seeding. It is likely to be, I think, a large payment, and I believe that that payment will be followed by a larger final payment totalling anywhere from half a billion to a billion dollars.

The Western Grain Stabilization Act came into effect in 1976. That act was based on the proposition that farmers themselves should help pay for part of the cost of some insurance against falling income, and that the government should also pay a substantial part towards that end. This legislation originally had a fairly rocky road in the House of Commons. It was promoted, moved and engineered by the Honourable Otto Lang. I think no matter which party one belongs to, one can say that today the Western Grain Stabilization Act, in spite of some shortcomings, in spite of some criticisms—sometimes major criticisms—is proving to be of valuable assistance to western grain farmers in their time of need.

Many people in western Canada, up until the last payments were made, felt that this was a bad deal, that people were not really going to get their money back. The facts show that for a farmer who put in the maximum amount of $6,825, he or she has received to date an amount of $10,750. So, even up to this point, it has been a good thing and a paying proposition.

It is quite possible that, unlike the near-maximum payments that were made last year—something in the neighbourhood of $3,000—payments for this current year could be $10,000 or $15,000 or more per permit holder who has paid in the maximum amount.

In my time in government I have, on at least two occasions, faced the following questions: Should I recommend an increase in the maximum amount farmers are required to pay? Should I increase their costs at a time when there were many complaints? I took the attitude on those occasions that the only way to protect the fund and help the farmers in the long run was to make certain that each paid into the fund higher amounts on higher sales so that in times of need each received higher payments. So, the maximum contributions are now based on sales of up to $60,000 at the rate of 1.5 per cent.

When the act first came into effect the farmer paid 2 per cent and the government paid 4 per cent. Because the fund built up massively over a period of years, and because of interest earned going back into the fund, a reduction from 2 per cent to 1.5 per cent for the farmer's contribution came about, together with a reduction in the government's contribution from 4 per cent to 3.5 per cent. If that kind of build up continues, there is the possibility—it may not happen because of these payouts—that the farmer's contribution will go down to 1 per cent and the government's contribution to 3 per cent.

According to the Minister of Agriculture, the fund contained $888 million at the end of the last crop year. Well, how much will be in the fund at the end of the current crop year? Assuming there is approximately $900 million in the fund from the end of the last crop year, that farmers will put in approximately $50 million, and that the government will put in approximately $100 million—and these are rough figures—and that interest earned will total $100 million, then the total will probably be in excess of $1100 million. One of the difficulties and one of the anomalies is that in triggering this payment, those areas in western Canada that have had a crop failure will get something less than those who did not. If you have a crop failure you cannot pay in on something that you did not produce and sell. Therefore, those that had big crops, big sales and large incomes will get even more as the act is constituted than those farmers who have had poor crops. As partial compensation a farmer with a poor crop is allowed to pay in 2 per cent of his crop insurance indemnity. That is an important compensating factor. I would think that when amendments which are more widespread are being taken into account, there should be some consideration given to allowing a farmer who is in a crop failure area and who has experienced a short crop to pay into the fund on the basis of the crop insurance, crop averages, yields and current prices in order that he may not be further penalized due to a crop failure.

● (1510)

An amendment was made to the act last year that provided one early payment and one later payment. The purpose of this amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act is to provide for an early payment. If there had not been—we may get a little giggle here—a change in the administration I am convinced that we would have had a bill before us today to provide for an early payment. When I listened to the discussions on this matter, the question really was not shall the Governor in Council have the right under legislation themselves to make an interim payment, but should the Governor in Council, when a payment is required, introduce a bill in Parliament? The advantage in introducing a bill is that you can have a debate with much discussion. What bothers me, and I hope I am wrong, is that when the Western Grain Stabilization Act is amended and receives Royal Assent, it may be years before we see the bill again, because it is easy for governments to put a particular measure far down on the list of priorities. I hope that is not correct and that the Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons will meet and discuss all of the far-reaching and enthusiastic ideas that Conservative members had when they were in opposition with regard to this measure. They felt that steps should be taken to improve the effectiveness of the act. A little later I shall mention some suggestions that I have in that regard.

Due to the area of crop failure in western Canada it is estimated that sales and the movement of grain will drop between 5 million and 7 million tonnes this year which means a loss of about $1 billion. That is bad news for Canada and certainly sad news for western Canada. Naturally, all of us hope that there will not be a drought in 1985 and that production can move ahead. The Canadian Wheat Board continues to do an outstanding job in selling the grain within its jurisdiction produced in western Canada. That board has a record for selling all of our production, selling it at premium prices and very often returning to the farmers more money than those farmers anticipated they might be getting under those circumstances. From time to time some suggestion has been made that in difficult times there should be a moratorium on contributions into the act. On the surface this would look somewhat attractive because you could say to a farmer who needs a payment that this year he would not have to pay into the fund. I believe that one should look at that very carefully because if you are not paying into the fund, the powers that be may decide that you should not be getting paid out of it either.

I believe that the Department of Finance is no more favourable to the current Western Grain Stabilization Act than one would expect from a department that would produce a white paper which was entirely against the farming community. Some officials in the Department of Finance say that it is a mistake to pay out $1 billion under the Western Grain Stabilization Act because when they pay that amount out, with the accounting system such as it is, that sum that is paid out to the prairie farmers will add to the federal debt. Therefore, the Department of Finance says to keep down the federal deficit and keep down the payments on the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The logical conclusion would be that they would not only likely cripple it in the given year they are talking about but they would also have designs to cut it back to save the government money and to make it a part of any drive to reduce the national deficit.

I think that this bill is a good one. It can stand on its own feet and should be supported.

At times our marketing system experiences great difficulty. Sometimes those difficulties are engineered at home and at other times outside our country. There is a small group of wheat producers in western Canada that somehow or other think that they have greater knowledge than all of the other producers and they are promoting dwarf wheat because dwarf wheat gives a high yield. Dwarf wheat is of poor quality, and introducing unnamed and illegal wheat into the system to be mixed with our high quality wheat would endanger Canada's reputation in the world market and would also destroy the premiums we get for our high quality wheat. I think that that would be a very great disservice to western agriculture. The fact is that the individual farmers who grow dwarf wheat should receive the true value and not some higher illegal value for their dwarf wheat since the lower price could leave them individually worse off.

I believe that we face difficult times as far as the United States is concerned. They are watching us very carefully. Today we heard that a particular grant for a particular lumber mill was perhaps cut off because of pressure from the United States government on the grounds that this is a subsidy. The United States government today is causing trouble for the potato producers of Canada. There is much pressure against accepting Canadian pork, and I believe a decision is to be made in the United States soon as to what will happen to our exports of Canadian pork and whether there will be a penalty. President Reagan is determined to reduce agricultural subsidies. His proposal is to remove the farm loan support provisions and bring in an alternate provision for providing support at 75 per cent of current market prices. If that should happen, that could bring about a major reduction, if not almost a semi-collapse, of international wheat prices with all the subsequent difficulties that would flow to Canadian farmers.

• (1520)

When in opposition, members of the Conservative Party advocated higher domestic prices for wheat in Canada. They suggested that the two major exporters, Canada and the U.S., should strike a deal in the export market in order to raise world prices.

I hope this government will be successful in influencing—if, indeed, they are trying—the American administration against taking a step that could cause such serious reductions in world wheat prices.

Honourable senators, I believe there is room for major improvements in this act in the future.

Producers of most agricultural commodities in Canada have the possibility of support under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. That is certainly the case for wheat producers in Ontario. However, only 77 per cent of wheat producers in Canada are covered by this act. The remaining 23 per cent voluntarily decided against being covered under this act. What has happened to the 23 per cent of farmers in western Canada, who are not covered by the act? They have no stabilization program in place at all. I think it is unfair to 23 per cent of the prairie grain producers, because they did not agree to pay money into the fund, that they will be deprived of the same kind of general price protection as is provided today for producers of similar commodities in other parts of Canada. That matter should be addressed.

I believe it is absolutely essential that major steps be taken so that income support legislation for grain producers in western Canada will, in fact, cover grain producers generally, not only a majority, leaving a substantial minority without adequate income protection.

As I have said, honourable senators, this is an important amendment which will result in much-needed payouts before spring.

I am pleased to support the bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator Argue.]

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I have to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Bielish speaks now, her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-29.

Senator Bielish: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Argue for his kind comments on my participation on behalf of agriculture in Canada, and in this case, the western grain producers. As Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in the previous administration, he had a full understanding of the problems encountered, and has had his turn at providing solutions. I appreciate the suggestions he has made and would make only one comment about the report, "Tax Issues in Agriculture" that he so severely criticized.

When read carefully, one will see that this report is, in fact, a discussion paper. As such, there will be adequate opportunity for discussion by all segments of the agricultural industry.

I thank Senator Argue for his support of this bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bielish, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.—(Honourable Senator Doody.)

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, this matter has been on the order paper for some time. I think I may be the only senator, other than Senator Godfrey, who has particular interest in this matter. I may conclude my remarks by asking that the motion go forward to the other place to be dealt with.

I would point out that the general comments I make with respect to this order, that is, Order No. 11, apply also to Order No. 12.

As all honourable senators know, the first of the two motions proposed by Senator Godfrey is to examine the subject matter of clauses of bills where these clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Senator Godfrey's second motion, that is Order No. 12, deals with a similar request but, in that case, it is to examine clauses which bestow power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms and otherwise breaches the generally accepted principles of delegated legislative authority.

After some considerable discussion, we on this side hold mixed views. No one, for the moment, would be suspect of the motives of Senator Godfrey. They are, in fact, worthwhile. There ought to be some method by which, if we have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms and if we have a concern about the wide-ranging legislative authority, we can build in some safeguard so that clauses of bills, which offend either the charter or the delegated authority, are not passed.

I should like to congratulate Senator Godfrey for bringing these matters forward. He is one of the few persons in both houses who takes a great interest in this terribly important work. While normally we would concentrate a little more on breaches of the Charter, breaches of delegated authority may perhaps be a greater sin on the part of government and bureaucracy. As honourable senators who attend meetings of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments will know, there are literally many hundreds of regulations that are challenged annually. I believe the success rate of that committee, although not as high as members would wish, is nevertheless reasonably high, and we endeavour to convince departments to withdraw or change the regulations made.

The question of building in a safeguard with regard to both of these matters is admirable, but how does one do it in the best possible way? Some would argue that this should not lie with any single committee, that every committee has staff and has access to the Library of Parliament Legal Research Department, or, in general, the Library of Parliament. Many of our committees have other research resources available. Each committee would examine any bill notwithstanding its concern about the subject matter, be it health, taxation or anything else. Each committee would have the added criteria to ensure that the bill did not breach the Charter or was not, in some way, couched language that would offend what is considered to be good practice in terms of delegated legislative authority.

For example, a taxation matter may come before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and bills dealing with other subject matter would come before other committees. Obviously there would be no duplication of work. Standing committees of either house could review the substantive matters, as well as look at the two serious matters raised by Senator Godfrey. That could be within the criteria for every committee.

Assuming that Senator Godfrey's motion passes both houses, presumably the committee, of which I am a joint chairman, would have this responsibility. One can foresee substantive matters coming before the standing committees of either house and there could be an ongoing fight dealing with substantive matters before the Senate Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. To that end, one might argue that there could be some duplication. Some might argue that every committee could be instructed to be mindful of the concerns of the Charter and of delegated legislative authority.

We should not lose sight of the fact that as bills are argued in both houses of Parliament, surely there would be a sufficient number of members of both chambers who would be mindful of their duty, who would be concerned with Charter rights and delegated authority matters and who would raise them on the floor of both chambers as the bills were being debated.

I do not wish to oppose Senator Godfrey's motion, although I have expressed my views on it. I believe that his motives and ideas are commendable, and I believe that this matter should not be left lying around here much longer. I am not certain whether Senator Godfrey and other honourable senators will be familiar with Bill C-27 which was introduced in the other place on January 31. No doubt it will reach us shortly. Clause 106 of that bill amends the Department of Justice Act. Without quoting the clause, it imposes an obligation on the Minister of Justice to the effect that legislation should conform to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I am not certain how that will be done, but, when the opportunity arises, I am quite sure that we shall be asking the minister how he will carry out that function. There is an added safeguard in that there will be some built-in mechanism that, as legislation comes through, there will be a statutory requirement on the part of the minister to ensure that it does not offend the Charter.

In the interests of getting on with other business before us, we should perhaps proceed with this and the next Order of the Day, to enable both houses to deal with them.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Godfrey speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this motion.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, Senator Nurgitz has raised the question that the matter should not be decided by one committee. I entirely agree with him. The Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments only alerts the committee that is dealing with the bill of the possibility, and it is that committee that will make the decision, not the Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. The point is that the Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has two full-time counsel, and no member of Parliament really has the time personally to go through a bill and ferret these things out. There is the advantage of having that technical assistance.

With regard to the last point raised by Senator Nurgitz concerning the Department of Justice Act, there was a similar provision with respect to the Bill of Rights. It has always been the department's responsibility with respect to the Bill of Rights, and, I believe, now with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to take on that job. Their attitude is, "We are doing it. So why should the legislators do it?" But my view is that we should not rely on the bureaucrats, that the legislators should satisfy themselves. That is why I believe my motion will increase efficiency in the operation of Parliament and that these matters will be left less in the hands of the bureaucrats.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE
SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms and contains the powers set forth in Paragraph 2 of Part 9 of the Cabinet directive on the preparation of legislation approved on 16th April, 1981, the said Part 9 reading in part as follows:

"9. REGULATIONS

In the preparation of proposals for legislation, departments and agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:

- (1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.
- (2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. These powers include the following:
  - (a) power to make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties;
  - (b) power to make regulations involving important matters of policy or principle;

[Senator Godfrey.]

(c) power to amend or add to the enabling Act or other Acts by way of regulation;

(d) power to make regulations excluding the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts;

(e) power to make specific regulations having a retrospective effect;

(f) power to subdelegate regulation-making authority;

(g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services;

(h) power to fix by regulation, rather than by the statute itself, the penalties for breach of a regulation"; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.—(Honourable Senator Doody.)

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, for all of the reasons, both good and bad, that I gave in connection with the previous motion, and—as the Deputy Leader of the Government reminds me—so long as we do not tell Senator Frith that we are doing this, I would ask that this motion be agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that Her Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under her Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, her Deputy, to do in Her Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during Her Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk of the Senate.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act (Bill C-13, Chapter No. 1)

An Act to amend the Currency Act (Bill C-21, Chapter No. 2)

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act (Bill C-17, Chapter No. 3)

An Act to amend the Pension Act (Bill C-28, Chapter No. 4)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

_____

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1984-1985 (No. 2)

COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

Wednesday, February 27, 1985

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which was referred Bill C-11, intituled: "An Act to provide borrowing authority", has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Wednesday, January 23, 1985, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment but with the following recommendation.

In its report of July 29, 1982 on an earlier borrowing bill, Bill C-125, of the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance asserted the principle "that parliamentary approval of borrowing was a necessary part of the control of the executive by the legislature". The Committee recommends that the Senate remain reluctant to approve any request for borrowing authority if such a request is not supported by a budget or by main estimates for the period for which the borrowing authority is being requested.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY
DISCUSSION PAPER ENTITLED "TAX ISSUES IN AGRICULTURE"

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine and report upon the Discussion Paper entitled: "Tax Issues in Agriculture", issued by the Department of Finance, tabled in the Senate on 5th February, 1985; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such professional, clerical and technical personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR OCEAN DEVELOPMENT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Heath Macquarrie moved third reading of Bill C-22, to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Martha P. Bielish moved third reading of Bill C-29, to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

27 February 1985

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 27th day of February, 1985, at 4.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be

Sir,

Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière

Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we adjourn during pleasure to await Royal Assent, I think it would be appropriate for me to discuss with honourable senators our program for the near future.

I have made careful inquiries of my colleagues in the House of Commons about the progress of legislation before that body. The House of Commons has a great deal of business before it; there are 15 or 20 bills on the Order Paper, some of which are of considerable importance. If it were thought likely that those bills would be passed in time for us to deal with them in the very near future, I think it would be our duty to attend to them. One can never tell how quickly bills can be moved through the House of Commons—

Senator Lewis: Or the Senate!

Senator Flynn: The same applies to the Senate.

Senator Roblin: At least the members of the House of Commons were elected to consider bills, whereas we were not.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friends will have a great deal more to "oh, oh" about before I am through.

Getting back to the point I was at before I received such an interesting expression of opinion, I cannot guarantee the pace at which legislation is moved through the House of Commons. Indeed, I cannot guarantee the pace at which legislation moves through the Senate. We have just found that out! Neither can the government guarantee the pace at which legislation moves through the House of Commons, even though it has a majority, because it is the government's firm policy to make sure that adequate debate does take place.

So, honourable senators, the best information I can obtain at the present time is that there are not likely to be any bills coming before the Senate from the House of Commons in the immediate future. I reflect also on the fact that last week we met longer than we usually would have, and on the fact that the House of Commons was on its winter recess. We gave up our winter recess last week to attend to the important business of this chamber, and I am glad we did. Now, however, we could consider the possibility of reinstating that winter recess for next week, which might be reasonable in view of the fact that the legislative program before us is likely to be nonexistent, or, at the best, skimpy.

So, unless there is a reason an honourable senator would like to advance as to why this course of action should not be followed, I would expect that, after Royal Assent has been given and we move the adjournment of the house, it will be adjourned until March 12.

There are a couple of things that should be said about next week. The first is that committees of the Senate will be meeting. We intend to provide authority for that, if we have not already done so. Those meetings should be held because a number of our committees are considering important subjects and we wish those committees to continue their work.

The other point I wish to make is that on Thursday next, March 7, the Secretary General of the United Nations will be making a joint address to the House of Commons and to the Senate. It so happens that the House of Commons will also not be sitting on that particular day, but I suspect there will be a good turnout of those senators who live close to Ottawa in order to make sure that the proper courtesies are extended to our distinguished visitor, the Secretary General of the United Nations.

• (1410)

I ask honourable senators who are within easy reach of this building to make a note that at 3 o'clock in the afternoon the Secretary General will be speaking to a joint meeting of the Senate and the House of Commons in the House of Commons, and I would ask honourable senators to attend on that occasion. Naturally, invitations will be extended, but I wanted to give this advance notice because, as I said, we may be adjourning for a period of time at the end of this sitting today. If there are any comments that honourable senators want to make with respect to that program, I would appreciate their speaking now.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, March 12, 1985, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Murray has just reminded me that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be meeting as soon as the Senate rises, which will be at any moment now. He might want the committee to meet while the Senate is sitting and after Royal Assent. I would therefore like to ensure that I have the unanimous consent of honourable senators to enable the committee to hear the out-of-town witnesses even though the Senate may still be sitting.

Accordingly, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to make a plea on behalf of Senator Hastings who has an extensive calendar lined up for the coming week for the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. He has five meetings scheduled, plus a field trip to Sarnia. I urge members of that committee who can possibly attend to do so in order to alleviate the strain he is under today. He asked me to do everything I could to avoid the adjournment for next week but, obviously, those efforts were unsuccessful. I ask the committee members to make every effort to attend those meetings.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, before the deputy leader moves the adjournment, I should like to remind the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs that in anticipation of our not sitting next week we endeavoured to adjourn the hearing next Tuesday of a witness who was coming from Washington. He was unable to give us an alternative date before the end of April; therefore, we will be sitting on Tuesday, as usual, at 11 o'clock in the morning.

THIRTEENTH BALTIC EVENING

ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few remarks on behalf of the sponsoring committee of parliamentarians of the Baltic Evening on Parliament Hill. As you probably recall, today our committee is hosting the Thirteenth Baltic Evening on Parliament Hill, along with the

[Senator Doody.]

Baltic Federation of Canada. On your behalf I should like to welcome the representatives of the Baltic Federation of Canada, and I remind honourable senators who have accepted our invitation to attend the event this evening that it begins at 6 o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while we are making comments about the prospective business, I should like to say how pleased I am that the Secretary General of the United Nations is to address a joint session of the House of Commons and the Senate next week, because he has attempted since his accession to that post to provide fresh impetus to the work of the United Nations in order to improve its operations. I believe that, in present circumstances, he requires the full support of all Canadians and, certainly, the Parliament of Canada.

It has been the attitude of successive Governments of Canada to support the Secretary General in his work, and I am very pleased that the Leader of the Government has informed us of the presence of the Secretary General in Ottawa next week.

At the same time, there will be evidence of activity next week because, even though the Senate itself will not be sitting, there will be committee meetings, as the Leader of the Government has pointed out. I particularly welcome the opportunity that will be afforded to us next week to give intensive consideration to the draft report that is now before the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I am sure we all appreciate that opportunity.

Finally, I should like to express my understanding of the remarks by the Leader of the Government that there is little indication that bills will be coming from the House of Commons next week. In this regard, I made my own inquiries yesterday and received the same response, that is, the likelihood of receiving bills is not great.

However, when bills are to be dealt with, we on this side will deal with them expeditiously, as we have dealt with legislation from the government in this chamber.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I should mention that, during the recess next week, the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry will meet to hear witnesses from the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation—Mr. Tansley and Mr. Dunn. I hope that as many members as possible will attend that meeting.

Honourable senators, this will be the first meeting to be held by the committee this session and, unless I hear to the contrary after we adjourn today, the meeting will take place as arranged.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it would appear that, although the Senate may not be sitting next week, we will have a pretty full schedule of committee meetings.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to provide Borrowing Authority (Bill C-11, Chapter 5)

An Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto (Bill C-22, Chapter 6)

An Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act (Bill C-29, Chapter 7)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The Sitting of the Senate was resumed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS

THE ESTIMATES, 1985-86—PRIVY COUNCIL VOTE 15 REFERRED TO STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

HOUSE OF COMMONS CANADA

Tuesday, February 26, 1985

Ordered—That Privy Council Vote 15 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986, be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

ATTEST

Michael B. Kirby

For The Clerk of the House of Commons

THE ESTIMATES, 1985-86—PRIVY COUNCIL VOTE 15 REFERRED TO STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs be authorized to examine the expenditures set out in Privy Council Vote 15 of the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1986; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 12, 1985 at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 12, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE ESTIMATES

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. On February 20, 1985, I said in this honourable chamber, as appears at page 572 of the English version of Senate Debates, that I was puzzled by the crisis over the estimates, and asked why the government was making a crisis when there was evidence that the estimates had already been printed.

At page 575 of Senate Debates of the same date, the Honourable Senator Roblin said:

To put it very bluntly, I am afraid Senator Gigantès does not know what he is talking about.

On February 27, 1985, at page 2544 of Commons Debates, bottom right hand corner, the Honourable Warren Allmand asked the Honourable Flora MacDonald, Minister of Employment and Immigration, why certain figures, and in particular those for Challenge '85, did not appear in the estimates.

The press release issued by the Honourable Flora MacDonald on Challenge '85 was circulated on February 6, and the minister said the following, in answer to Mr. Allmand:

As the Hon. Member very well knows, those Estimates were in print before the $205 million was announced for Challenge '85.

I do not ask for an apology nor do I expect one, but I simply wanted to put that on the record. I am prepared to accept that the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate does not occupy himself with such mundane details as to the printing of the estimates and, therefore, might not have known that they were in print when I said they were.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not aware of the question of privilege, unless it is that the honourable senator is objecting to my describing him in the way I did.

I regret I cannot retract my statement, because the minister's quotation about the estimates being in print in no way invalidates what I have said. It is a long way from her estimates being in print to the ultimate approval of the estimates for distribution to Parliament. I do not really rise to enter into a discussion on that point, because I think we have other things to do.

THE LATE KONSTANTIN CHERNENKO

CONDOLENCES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think it appropriate for this chamber to take note of the fact that there have been significant developments in the wide world in which we live, none being more significant than the death of the President of the U.S.S.R., Mr. Konstantin Chernenko. This is certainly an occasion on which people across the world, regardless of their political views, may offer their condolences to the government and the people of the Soviet Union on the loss of their leader.

I think, perhaps, it would be appropriate to say something more because a new leader has been chosen, Mr. Mikhail Gorbachev. I pronounced his name in the Canadian fashion, as members of this chamber will recognize. This is a significant development for us, if only for the fact that the new head of the Soviet Union represents a new generation of leaders in that country. While I think it would be optimistic to expect to see changes of a substantial nature in their attitude toward their own problems and toward their neighbours of the world, I think, perhaps, to do so would be premature. Nevertheless, I think we can be hopeful that some new and more relevant views may be brought by that great nation to the problems which concern us all.

While it is inappropriate for me to offer any advice to the new leader of the Soviet Union, it is not inappropriate to express the hope that there may be more flexibility which will be reciprocated by other states in this great world of ours, particularly in respect of the question of disarmament and relations with the United States. I wanted to make that remark on the passing of the head of the Soviet Union and the assumption by a new leader of that post.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, I want to join with the Leader of the Government in expressing our regrets and condolences at the passing of Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko. We extend our condolences to the Government of the Soviet Union, to the people of the Soviet Union and to the family of Mr. Chernenko.

As the Leader of the Government has said, Mr. Mikhail Gorbachev has succeeded as leader of the Soviet Union. I had the honour and distinction of being host for part of the visit of Mr. Gorbachev to Canada approximately two years ago. I found him very friendly, very intelligent and, I believe, a man of rather moderate views. At least, that is how I found him in our discussions. I believe he is a friend of Canada. We made it clear to him and, through him, to the Soviet Union that we were prepared as a nation to exchange agricultural technology with the Soviet Union for the benefit of agricultural production in that country. Mr. Gorbachev, who was in charge of food production, has a real knowledge of agriculture and its people not only in his own country but also in Canada.

● (1410)

I think it significant that he has been something of a world traveller. I am impressed by the fact that he has a good knowledge of the English language, a facility which I think will make communication between the English-speaking world and the Soviet Union a little easier.

I believe there is real significance in the fact that the arms negotiations in Geneva are continuing. I express the hope, along with all Canadians, that they may lead to mutually satisfactory agreements.

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE JOHN ADAMS PRIME MINISTER OF BARBADOS

TRIBUTES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I should also like to tell honourable senators that yesterday the Right Honourable "Tom" Adams, Prime Minister of Barbados, unexpectedly and tragically passed away. As those who are interested in the Caribbean know, this gentleman has been a tower of strength in that part of the world. He has been giving leadership to the Commonwealth nations of the eastern Caribbean; he has been a force for good.

I am sure that you would like me to take this opportunity to express to the government and people of Barbados our sincere regret on this news of his unexpected death. I hope that his successor will be able to discharge his new responsibilities effectively for the welfare of the people of that island. We take note of the problem in a fellow Commonwealth nation and send them our warm good wishes.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I wish to join with the Leader of the Government in expressing regret at the passing of Prime Minister Adams of Barbados. The Caribbean has been and is of importance to Canada. We recognize the late Prime Minister's sterling qualities of leadership.

On behalf of the opposition, I join with the Leader of the Government in his expression of sympathy and in his remarks about our good association with Barbados.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

THE HONOURABLE JOSEPH A. SULLIVAN

TRIBUTES ON RESIGNATION FROM THE SENATE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, coming a little closer to home, I should like to mention another gentleman at this time. I announce to honourable senators, if they do not already know, that the Honourable Senator Sullivan, has tendered his resignation to Her Excellency the Governor General.

On the news of the departure of our friend from this chamber, it would be appropriate to say a word of thanks and appreciation for his services to the people of Canada.

In quite recent years, Senator Sullivan has not been as active a member of this chamber as he would have liked to be. In submitting his resignation, he explains the disabilities which have prevented him from discharging his function as he would have liked and these are the reasons that prompted his resignation.

However, in days gone by, as others here will testify, he was an active and enthusiastic participant in the affairs of this chamber and had a good deal of common sense and good judgment to offer on the issues that were debated among us. I believe it appropriate that we should remember his good work as a member of this chamber in those times.

He is, indeed, a remarkable man because, when he was young, he was a member of the champion Canadian Olympic hockey team, in 1928. He was the goaltender of the Varsity hockey team which won great renown for our nation. I think it has been a matter of some pride to Senator Sullivan—and I understand entirely why this should be so—that he can point to that extraordinary achievement as a landmark in his younger days.

He went from hockey to another world entirely—the world of medicine, as an eye, ear, nose and throat specialist. Over many long years as a practitioner in that field he won not only glowing opinions, but a succession of honours. He can point to a succession of achievements which very few other people in that important branch of medical science can claim. I believe he would like us to remember his contribution to the health of this nation and the welfare of individual human beings that he, as a doctor, was able to bring about as a result of his knowledge and talent in the field of medicine. Honourable senators, that is only one of the accomplishments of Senator Sullivan to which I particularly want to refer.

He is also an ardent member of the Roman Catholic Church. He professes his faith and he does his best to discharge his obligations as a churchman. He has been recognized by the church in a number of important, distinctive particulars. He was created a Knight of the Holy Sepulchre and a Knight Commander of St. Gregory with Distinction. His activities in that area have also brought much honour and credit to himself and much pleasure to his friends.

Senator Sullivan has retired because of his disabilities. For a man in his early eighties, he is a pretty active character, and I suspect that he will continue to make his presence felt for many years to come. I know that, in recognizing his service in this house and saying farewell to him as a member of the Senate, we can also offer him our warm good wishes for many happy years of productive activity in his chosen field.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on behalf of the Opposition in the Senate, I want to endorse the remarks of my colleague Senator Roblin.

The "new boys"—as Senator Walker would say—did not know Senator Sullivan very well. However, those of us who did get to know him better will recall that he was a kind man: every time a new senator was introduced in the Senate, Senator Sullivan would never fail to greet him personally. I had that experience, as did several other "new" senators.

In addition, he always gave me the impression that he was in good shape, although in fact his failing health prevented him from attending our sittings.

Senator Sullivan stood as an example and a symbol of Canadian life. He was outstanding in all sport, professional, religious and political endeavours, as Senator Roblin pointed out. We are confident that his resignation will not be the end of his career, and we extend to our colleague Senator Sullivan our best wishes for a long and happy life.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I wish the Leader of the Government would give us notice of an occasion such as this so that we can prepare something instead of having to speak off the cuff. We are not all first class at doing that. Sometimes, when we read the tributes, we wonder whether they meant anything at all. The tributes paid today are very good, but instead of keeping the occasion a secret between the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition, we too should be let in on it.

Senator Roblin: I wish to apologize to my honourable friend. He has an excellent point and I express my regret that he was not informed. It does appear on the Clerk's Scroll, which is available to the leadership of the house, but, of course, my honourable friend has no means of knowing what is on the Clerk's Scroll. So I will undertake, insofar as I can, that I will try not to trespass in this respect in future.

HIS EXCELLENCY JAVIER PEREZ DE CUELLAR SECRETARY-GENERAL, UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF BOTH HOUSES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the address of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Organization, His Excellency Javier Perez De Cuellar, to members of both houses of Parliament, delivered on March 7, 1985, together with the introductory speech by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of Canada and the speeches delivered by the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of address and introductory speeches, see Appendix, p. 640.)

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Ian Sinclair, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Tuesday, March 12, 1985

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill S-3, intituled: "An Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Zambia, Canada and the Kingdom of Thailand, Canada and the Republic of Cyprus and Canada and the Federative Republic of Brazil for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax", has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Wednesday, February 13, 1985, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

IAN SINCLAIR
Deputy Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. William M. Kelly, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE ESTIMATES 1984-85

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1985, tabled in the Senate today.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REFORM OF THE SENATE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in rising to his feet for the first time today, the Leader of the Government in the Senate referred to developments since last we met. I have a series of questions on a development closer to this institution than the other important developments that have been referred to in the statement of the honourable leader. In fact, today is the first opportunity we have had for some days to garner from the government its thinking on the future and the work of the Senate. I must say for myself that I welcome the increased and substantial attention that has been paid to this vital institution in Canadian federalism.

The media have told us that the government has been considering proposals for changes to the Canadian Senate. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether, indeed, proposals have been considered by the government; if so, whether he himself has been involved in the preparation of these proposals and whether any decisions have been reached by the government with respect to the future work and powers or function of the Senate.

● (1430)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I expected this topic to be raised this afternoon. I have been making note of the questions that have been asked of me in the hope that if I can encourage other honourable senators to pose their queries, I can deal with many of them in one final statement that would, perhaps, be more comprehensive than answering individually the direct questions put to me now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps we can make some of the questions more precise, in that case.

Specifically, the Leader of the Government in the Senate can take note, I imagine, of the interest of all honourable senators as to the extent of consultations with him about those proposals. We understand, of course, that the leader cannot disclose details of discussions which have taken place in cabinet. We are simply asking as to the direction of those proposals, to the extent that he knows that, and particularly his proposal. I think he should share with us his views on those proposals, whether or not he was consulted on them.

Again, even more specifically on that question, we should like to know whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate was asked by the Prime Minister for his views on the proposal to abolish the Senate, and if so, what the leader's advice was.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government would give us an interim count on the position of the provincial premiers, since, if there is to be abolition, I assume that that will take place under section 41, which requires the unanimous consent of the provincial premiers, or under section 38, which would require the consent of seven of the provinces comprising 50 per cent of the population. I am sure all honourable senators are interested in knowing what the first response of the provincial premiers has been, because we have been advised that, indeed, the government has been telephoning the provincial premiers to ask them for their views.

One other matter has disturbed some honourable senators, and because of that they would like to know the opinion of the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the comments made by the Honourable John Crosbie, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, regarding the general uselessness of the Senate. They would like to know whether the leader shares those views, and whether he finds it at all embarrassing to sit in cabinet or in government with someone who holds those views as to the uselessness of the Senate? I suppose an irresistible corollary to that would be the uselessness of the Leader of the Government in the Senate and all other senators, for that matter.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, there may be no truth to the press reports which I have read, but they troubled me, so I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate what inducement the Prime Minister has offered the premiers of the provinces to get them to agree to the suggestion that they support whatever action will be taken with respect to the Senate?

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would give some thought to supporting the establishment of a forum—and I realize that this could be done by means of putting a motion on the order paper—to solicit the views publicly of senators from both sides of this chamber as to the proposals being put forward to the provinces?

I ask that because I, for one—and I know that there are many other honourable senators who feel the same as I do, and have said so publicly—believe that a suspensive veto in the case of all legislation would be an important improvement insofar as the Senate is concerned and would enable us to do our job more effectively and in a more regular fashion. In other words, we are at the moment suffering from an overdose of power which we do not exercise.

I think it would be useful if an occasion were provided for such an expression of opinion so that, indeed, the government would know that it had the support of this chamber on some of the proposals it might well be putting to the provinces. We do not know what those proposals are, and I am not seeking to find out anything with respect to cabinet discussion in that connection, as the Honourable Senator Frith has just stated.

But the provinces, which may well be tempted to start bargaining on this request made by the federal government, might be less inclined to do so if they thought that Parliament, including the Senate, were agreed on a level of reform that could be brought about quickly at this time. I am leaving aside the question of abolition, or even a directly-elected Senate, because I think that those things are not practicably going to happen at this time.

So my question is: Apart from an honourable senator putting this request on the order paper, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate give some thought to how best an expression by the members of this chamber could be put forward at this time in order to assist the government and the provinces in their deliberations?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Considering the present feeling of apprehension which I think we all share, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us how the provincial premiers reacted to statements by the Prime Minister of Canada concerning his intentions with respect to the Senate?

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, perhaps when the Leader of the Government in the Senate is giving thought to the questions addressed to him he will contemplate the following specific question: As he knows, the Constitution makes provision that Parliament can extend its own life for an indefinite time. That can happen in what I will call "war-measure circumstances." That could be done by an act of Parliament. If there were no Senate, or if the Senate had only a suspensive veto, the House of Commons, with Royal Assent, could extend its life indefinitely. The one limitation would be that no more than one-third of the members of the House of Commons voted against the motions relating to the passing of that bill.

I ask if the Leader of the Government in the Senate has given consideration, or if the government has given consideration, to this very important constitutional point. It is so important that it appears in the Constitution of Canada.

I ask this particularly in view of the fact that under "war-measure circumstances" the legislative power of the Parliament of Canada—which in this case would really be the House of Commons—extends not only to section 91 matters, but to matters which ordinarily are under the legislative jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures. That is an important fundamental constitutional matter, one on which I am sure the Leader of the Government will enlighten us.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, in light of past practices by the Government of Canada when any serious amendment to the Constitution was being considered in which it, by white paper or otherwise, laid on the tables of both Houses of Parliament its propositions, does the Leader of the Government consider it appropriate that the Prime Minister, as leader of a political party, should at this point in time be dealing secretly with the premiers of the provinces endeavouring to make undisclosed deals to get their support for an amendment to the Canadian Constitution, which amendment would directly affect Parliament, which has not yet been advised of what the draft proposals might be?

• (1440)

Senator Guay: That is a good question.

Senator MacEachen: Answer!

Senator Flynn: We lost our veto on constitutional matters.

Senator McElman: That is another question that is not fully resolved.

Senator Flynn: It was resolved during the night.

Senator McElman: No.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I gather that I may change the subject—

Senator Frith: We want answers.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, before we deal with any other subject, I would like to suggest that if there are any other senators who want to deal with this question about the Senate which is before us I would appreciate hearing so now so I can give a comprehensive answer.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think the procedure which the Leader of the Government is adopting today is quite unusual. We do not approve of it at all although we will tolerate it on this occasion. When he has given his answers to the series of questions we will have supplementary questions on this subject.

Senator Roblin: I am pleased to co-operate with my honourable friend, and I thank those members of the chamber who have been kind enough to share their concerns with me. I will do my best to answer them. If, when I have concluded, there are supplementary questions, which is to be expected, I will do the best I can with them.

I should like to start off with Senator McElman's comment, because of the delicate nature of the point he raised. I think it is true to say that in days gone by there have been secret negotiations between governments and provinces in connection with amending the Constitution. With respect to the very formation of the Constitution itself, although it was partially exposed to public discussion in the legislatures and elsewhere, there were elements of it which were certainly not discussed publicly before they were ultimately agreed upon. I think that is a fact of our history and should be borne in mind.

There is also a new situation here, namely, that we are now operating under a new Constitution. In a sense we are feeling our way as to how that should be done. According to the literal reading of the Constitution itself, it appears that the Constitution could be amended by consent of the legislatures of the provinces and Parliament. Just what is involved in that process is an experience that we are now going through. I remember, for example, in my own province when a proposal was made to amend the Constitution of Manitoba in respect of certain particulars, the arrangements for that amendment were made in secret between the provincial government and the federal government, if my memory is correct. Other senators from Manitoba can correct me if I have misstated the fact, but I believe that negotiations were carried on in advance before there was any public announcement of what was intended.

Senator Frith: Or parliamentary?

Senator Roblin: Or parliamentary for that matter.

Senator Frith: Were senators consulted?

Senator Roblin: I am not sure whether senators were consulted. I was not, because I was sitting in the opposition. Perhaps some senators who were on the government side at that time were consulted but I do not know. All I know is that we have a new Constitution and a new situation and the question of how amendments should be arrived at is, perhaps, an open one. Frankly, I should tell my honourable friend that I am prepared to talk about what is the best way to do it. It seems to me that there is a reasonable ground for the course that the government is taking at the present time.

Coming to Senator Stewart who is interested in the provisions that govern the extension of the life of Parliament in situations of national emergency, I am not at all sure whether those provisions will be directly affected by any changes in the powers of the Senate, because at the present time we do not know what those changes might be. However, I think it is a point that should not be lost sight of and I, for one, will ensure that this particular matter is brought to the attention of those who are concerned if it seems appropriate to do so.

Senator Le Moyne asked me for a statement about the reaction of the premiers. Of course, that I cannot give. The premiers themselves will tell us what they think of any negotiations that are going on and I must respect their right to do so.

Senator Frith: When you say "I," do you mean the government?

Senator Roblin: Yes, the government. I mean to say it would be wrong of me as a member of a government to come into this chamber and announce the policy decision taken by the Premier of Manitoba. I might feel that I knew what it was, but until he makes that statement himself I do not think it is appropriate for me to second guess what he is going to say. The point I am trying to make is that the provinces will speak for themselves.

I like Senator van Roggen's idea that we should give some thought as to the type of amendments on which we might find a consensus in this chamber. It may be that there are issues of that kind. I want to assure my friends, as I will say when I get to a statement that I want to read to you, that there will be an opportunity provided for members of the Parliament of Canada on either side of the aisle in both the House of Commons and the Senate to consult on whatever is proposed in order to see if a large measure of agreement can be secured in that way after we have determined whether or not there is sufficient provincial consensus for us to proceed. It is a practical idea. It is in keeping with the collegial and consultative nature of this body, and I hope that we can do something about that.

Senator Croll asked whether there were any inducements on the table for the provinces to do what the feds want them to do. To the best of my knowledge, no. The issues that are being discussed are being discussed on their merits only as far as the federal government is concerned, and it certainly will stay that way.

I now come to some of the points raised by Senator Frith, and I think they were also raised by the Leader of the Opposition. He inquired as to what part I had to play in the events that have led up to these negotiations with the provinces of Canada. Insofar as decisions were made by the cabinet, I had my share in collaborating in arriving at those decisions. Further than that, of course, I cannot go. What those proposals are is now a matter for discussion between the federal government and the provincial governments, and I am sure in due course if there is a consensus as to what should be done, we will be laying that matter before Parliament.

As for my views on the matter, I cannot give private views. My friend knows that I am bound by the principle of cabinet solidarity and unless I resign from the cabinet I respect those rules. I am still in the cabinet so I am not able to give any opinion to my honourable friend on matters of that sort.

Senator Frith: What were those matters?

Senator Roblin: You asked me what my private views were. I am telling you that I am not giving any private views.

I am interested in the attention paid by my honourable friend to the Minister of Justice, Hon. John Crosbie, who certainly in his first comment was none too flattering of the activities of the Senate. I am glad to say that he was, as is sometimes the case with him, speaking for himself in his own inimitable way. He went on to say that he felt sure that the Senate could perform a useful function if it was more in tune with democratic times and he did not want to foreclose anything. I think I am going to have to forgive him if he was a little harsh on the Senate when he started out because he wound up by indicating that there was a place for this body and that he could find it in his heart, if he was confronted with a suitably reconstructed Senate, to support it.

These seem to be the points that I noted. Senator Frith asked me again what the provincial premiers have to say. I must answer that by saying that they will inform the country themselves when they have made up their minds as to what they think about it. The Leader of the Opposition asked me what my involvement is, and I told him that I am involved as a member of cabinet and that is as it should be.

● (1450)

In order to be more specific about the position I am taking, I should like to say something that is in the nature of a government announcement which deals with this whole matter. It repeats some of the points I have already made, but puts them in a little more authoritative manner than just hearing them from me in a verbal passage such as this. This is what I have to say:

As honourable senators will be aware, the question of Senate reform has taken on a new prominence in the past several weeks.

Senator Frith: Is the honourable senator speaking for the government now?

Senator Roblin: I am speaking for the government.

This was not originally a matter which ranked high on the government's agenda for legislative action. It has been said before, and I will repeat today, that the mandate given to the government on September 4 last, and the first priority for the government, is to ensure that Canada's economy is put back on track. It was only as a result of the actions of Liberal senators with respect to Bill C-11 that the government was prompted to consider certain aspects of Senate reform.

Needless to say, there has been a great number of studies and reports on this issue. The very existence of this plethora of studies gives substance to the proposition that the Senate, as presently constituted and functioning, has failed to meet public expectations in 1985 and therefore stands in need of reform. At the same time we must ensure that we do not act precipitately in this respect.

Our constitutional amendment formula grants the provinces a voice in any discussion of Senate reform. Alterations in the powers of the Senate would require the consent of seven provinces with at least half of the national population. The Constitution does not provide for the abolition of the Senate. If it were to be undertaken, it would undoubtedly require the unanimous consent of the 10 provinces. From that standpoint, it is not a viable option. Instead of abolition, most of the provinces want reform. They understand the role that a second chamber can and should play in a federal system of government. In any event, the government is not prepared to act in a unilateral fashion.

Recognizing that the provinces have a legitimate role to play in the process of Senate reform, the government has initiated a process of consultation with representatives of provincial governments. The government will decide on its final course of action only after provincial views on Senate reform are fully understood.

If our discussions with the provinces produce a consensus, we will, of course, meet with our colleagues from both sides of the House of Commons and the Senate to discuss the timetable for reform and the most appropriate means of bringing the matter before Parliament.

I hope that statement will provide some information to honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I want to make what might be described as a brief comment on the statement by the Leader of the Government. I want to make it clear that the persons whom the Leader of the Government described as Liberal senators still believe that they acted properly in their conduct with respect to Bill C-11.

[Senator Roblin.]

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: All the threats that were made prior to the action we took did not deter us from that course of action. I believe that, as time goes on, that course of action will be justified, as it is justified in our minds. Whatever justification there is for Senate change and, indeed, there is justification, to link it to this particular action taken with respect to Bill C-11 is an extraordinary over-reaction by the government itself.

I do not want to go beyond these preliminary remarks in reply to the comments made by the Leader of the Government.

Although the Leader of the Government may have implicitly provided the answers, I want to know explicitly whether the government has settled on a proposal or a series of proposals, or whether it has merely settled on a series of options. Is the conversation with the provinces based on a series of options or proposals agreed to by the Government of Canada, or is the conversation merely exploratory? I think it is important to know whether the government has settled on ideas, proposals or options which it has conveyed to the provinces, or whether it has opened up the question in a general way and said, "What is your reaction to changes to the Senate?"

Senator Roblin: I am glad my honourable friend is satisfied with his conduct; it would be strange if he were not. I am not altogether sure that he will meet with unanimous agreement with that in view of recent transactions in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: I am sure I will not.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is really asking me: What has the government put on the table in discussion with the provinces? Is it a proposal? Is it a number of alternatives? Or what is it?

Of course, the answer to that question will be made known to the public and to my honourable friend when those discussions are concluded. It would obviously be futile for me to try to negotiate those terms or outline the government's position on the floor of this chamber.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government is not under any great disability in answering this question. I want to know whether the government has put forward specific proposals to the provinces.

Senator Roblin: If the honourable gentleman is asking me whether the government has submitted specific proposals, but is not following that up by asking what they are, I can say, yes, the government has submitted specific proposals; there are several of them.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government. I will not ask his suggested question at this point.

Is it true to say the government has presented a series of options to the provinces rather than a series of proposals? Are they proposals or options? That is what I want to know.

Senator Roblin: I am sorry; I cannot make any further statement on that matter.

Senator MacEachen: Not revealing whether the government has made up its mind on specific proposals to the provinces, I think, is a most revealing answer. I would conclude that, at this point, it is exploratory and that there is a general conversation, but that is something we can determine later on.

What is clear now is that the Leader of the Government cannot tell us whether the government itself has decided on proposals with respect to changes to the Senate.

What I want to ask him is based upon a statement attributed in the press to Senator Murray, in which he said that Progressive Conservative senators had conversations with the Minister of Justice in which were disclosed the options the government had in mind. If it is possible for the Minister of Justice to tell his Tory colleagues in the Senate what he has in mind, surely the Leader of the Government can do us the courtesy of telling us what he has learned from the Minister of Justice.

Senator Roblin: I think Senator Murray will have to be responsible for his own statements. I was not aware of the statement. I know not what prompted it. Since I cannot speak for him, I think we will have to ask Senator Murray for his interpretation.

As a former member of the cabinet, my honourable friend knows that it is not possible for me to go further in discussing what the government proposals or options are in this respect.

Senator MacEachen: I have deliberately not asked the Leader of the Government for the content of whatever was transmitted to the provinces. I will not ask that.

However, I think it is not unfair to ask whether concrete, specific proposals agreed to by the government have been submitted to the provinces. I have not received an answer to that. That, as I said earlier, is quite revealing.

I want to ask the Leader of the Government another question related to the frequent references made by the media, presumably based upon sources within the government, that proposed changes to the Senate of Canada would be based upon the Parliament Act passed in the United Kingdom. I wonder whether that is in the mind of the government. In considering changes, have they—I am sure they have—reflected upon the idea that Britain is a unitary state and that the House of Lords is a body of peers, while Canada is a federal state and the Senate is intended to represent the regions, and that therefore what may be appropriate in the United Kingdom, may not be appropriate as a pure transplant to the Canadian scene? Therefore, I ask the Leader of the Government whether there is validity in the frequent references made in the media that the government is proceeding on a British model.

● (1500)

Senator Roblin: I wish to come back to the first point. It should be clear that if you go into a negotiating session with a very firm view as to what should be done, with no room to manoeuvre, it really is not negotiation. So whatever firm ideas the government may have with respect to this matter, I am sure that they are subject to influence by what the provinces think about them when they hear them. I believe that is a reasonable and natural situation to be facing.

I quite agree with my honourable friend that the Senate is not the House of Lords, that it is constituted for an entirely different reason. Its history is different, and there is no reason to think that what is good for the House of Lords will be good for the Senate. So I can give no credence to those speculations with respect to a comparison between the House of Lords and the Senate, except to say that there are certain superficial resemblances, but in terms of the constitutional necessities in Canada, the two situations are quite different.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer on that point. I wish to refer to a section of his statement in which he said that consultations would be undertaken with representatives in the House of Commons and the Senate. I noticed that yesterday the government house leader in the other place, the Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn, stated that when consultations and discussions had been completed with the provinces, then consultations would be held with party leaders—presumably the leader of the Liberal Party and the leader of the New Democratic Party in the House of Commons—and that the resolution that emerged as a result of those consultations would be discussed by the party leaders in the House of Commons. I am not drawing from his statement conclusions that are unwarranted, because he did refer to discussion of a resolution with the party leaders in the House of Commons.

I welcome the comment made by the Leader of the Government that he is prepared to have appropriate consultations with the members of the Senate, and I wonder what mechanism he has in mind for undertaking such a discussion of proposals, and whether indeed we will have a draft resolution to consider before any such resolution is introduced in either house.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my answer is more speculative than is usual in these matters, because I would envisage an opportunity for the general proposition, whatever it may be, to be discussed in the Senate in perhaps several ways. It could be discussed between the leaders of the parties, who could then discuss it with their caucuses. But what I am sure about is that ultimately the resolution will be discussed by the whole Senate and that every member of the Senate will have an opportunity to speak, if he or she wishes, and to make any contribution that he or she considers useful to the resolution of the matter. I may be an optimist, but I have heard some statements made by members of this chamber that would lead me to believe that the idea of reform is not repugnant to everyone, and in that observation I include members on the other side of the house. I believe that this house would be willing to consider some reforms in its method of operation or in its structure. I hope—and I hope I am not too optimistic—that if we have a consensus from the provinces—which I believe is a necessary first step, because we cannot get anywhere without that, and we know what the rules are for that—and if there is an agreement to that extent, then the agreement of Parliament itself comes into play. So far as the Senate is concerned, I would like to have the most open discussion and consultations possible on the matter. It need not be any hole-in-the-wall business at all, and I hope—hope springs eternal—that there will be a fair chance of finding, if not unanimity, then at least consensus in this house as to what should be done.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in the recent exchanges there would appear to be two threads that seem to have been left dangling. One is that the Leader of the Government described the need for certain strengths when one entered into negotiations; but, in answer to an earlier question he said that there were no inducements being offered to the provinces and that, so far as he was concerned, it would stay that way and there would be no inducements. I can see that it is possible for those two comments to be compatible, but I wish to be sure that I understood him. In other words, when he said that there would be no inducements, I would like to be sure that he was not changing that answer when he spoke about negotiations. The only way that the two would be consistent would be that there should be no inducements, but that the government would attempt to persuade the provinces that any changes made to the Senate's powers would be in the best interests of the provinces, as distinct from any inducements.

That is the first thread that was left dangling and it should be tied up. The other is that when asked about consultations by the government with Conservative senators, Senator Roblin, as part of his answer, again took refuge in cabinet secrecy. But I do not believe that any Privy Council oath binds or inhibits him from sharing with other honourable senators what the government discussed with Conservative senators.

Senator Roblin: I will not be coaxed on to this treacherous ground of—

Senator Frith: You will not what?

Senator Roblin: I will not allow my honourable friend to coax me on to what I believe to be the unstable ground of who said what to whom. I will not get into that, because it is something that is not within my realm of knowledge.

Senator Frith: Can you say whether there was such a meeting?

Senator Roblin: I will not allow any of those questions at all.

Senator Frith: They are too tough?

Senator Roblin: They are not too tough—

Senator Frith: Then why not tell us?

Senator Roblin: Because I do not believe it is to the advantage of my honourable friend to do so.

Senator Frith: It is like the objection to Bill C-11: it is because we won't just accept it.

Senator Roblin: You are reaping the fruit of that activity.

Senator Frith: There is a little punishment here.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has to recognize that in any move of this sort there is always a catalyst of some kind. You may not think much of the catalyst—

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: There is a little bit of megalomania seeping out.

Senator Roblin: I do not believe you can call that megalomania. You could call it decent respect for the proprieties. My honourable friend asked me whether we are offering any inducements to the provinces.

Senator Frith: You said you were not—

Senator Roblin: And I am saying it again; but that does not mean that you do not listen to what the other man has to say. You do not go into a negotiation if you are not prepared to listen.

Senator Frith: That is a nice distinction.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can laugh. My honourable friend's government was in the habit, in my opinion, of entering into certain activities that affected the provinces without proper consultation. It seems to me that that is a habit that we do not want to follow. If my honourable friend objects to our consulting with the provinces—

Senator Frith: No, no.

Senator Roblin: If he objects to our listening to their arguments, or our being influenced by their arguments, if they are good ones, then he is not on solid ground, and I hope that he would not lend himself to any of those propositions. That is what we are going to do: We are going to listen, and if the ideas are good, we will be influenced by them. It can hardly be any other way with proper federal-provincial relations. I tell him that is the situation. I tell him that the need to get a constitutional consensus on this is, of course, one of the essentials of any progress in this matter.

Senator Frith: We are given no answer. "Waltzing Matilda".

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, earlier I asked the Leader of the Government a specific question, but I am not quite sure what his answer was. We know that under the Constitution, in war-measures circumstances, the duration of the life of a Parliament can be extended with the agreement of 190 members of the House of Commons, even over the objection of one-third of the members of the House of Commons. We also know that the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that in war-measures circumstances the power of Parliament, whether it be in the absence of a Senate or with a Senate operating under a suspensive veto, can extend to matters normally under provincial jurisdiction. He says that the government is exploring to ascertain if there is sufficient provincial consensus to merit proceeding. I am trying to ascertain just how specific this exploration is. Does this particular point that I have raised come into his thinking at all? The answer he gave earlier suggests to me that cabinet has not even thought of this possibility. If that is the case, has it been raised by any of the provincial premiers? That is the question that I would like the leader to answer.

• (1510)

Senator Roblin: I repeat that I cannot tell my honourable friend what is transpiring between the provincial premiers and the federal representatives. I am not there. I do not know and, even if I did, I would not tell him. However, if my honourable friend is asking me whether this particular point has been lost sight of, my reply would be no.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I think the Leader said that he was speaking for the government in presenting the statement he just read. Would that statement be available to us today, rather than waiting for the Debates of the Senate to come out tomorrow?

Senator Roblin: As soon as the Senate rises, I would have no objection to running off copies of the statement for senators who might like to look at it. If my honourable friend will be so kind as to check with my office when he is ready to read it, I hope it will be ready for him.

ENERGY

NEW PRICING AGREEMENT—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a question respecting a matter that I have raised a number of times; that is, the progress of the energy pricing agreement between the federal government and the provincial governments. The reason I raise this matter now is that there is growing concern—indeed, it escalated rather significantly last week—that the two levels of government are not finding common ground on which to reach an agreement. Most of the discussion is centred around the federal government's treatment of, for example, the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax and other arrangements of taxation between the two levels of government. Will the Leader of the Government advise us as to whether or not there is a level of optimism, so that the industry will know what to expect, and whether or not agreement will be reached by the end of this month, which is the second deadline that has been set?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have to agree with my honourable friend that negotiations have been protracted. It was our hope that they would be concluded by now, but they have not been as there are still unresolved questions. However, it is still our hope and expectation that negotiations will be concluded by the deadline he referred to. If there is any change in that situation I shall let him know.

REFORM OF THE SENATE

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I would like to return to the question I raised earlier with the Honourable Senator Roblin. I must say immediately that his reply has increased my concern, rather than alleviated it. He has stated that negotiations are going on with the premiers. I suggest to him, again, that when serious matters affecting the Constitution, particularly proposals for amending the powers of Parliament, were discussed before, the several propositions then under consideration were made known to the Canadian public and it was informed as to what the options might be. Then, a good many of the premiers of the day publicly gave their reactions to the propositions. As a result, the public felt it was part of the discussions and the negotiations affecting the very basis of their organized society, their Parliament.

It seems that what we have in the present circumstances is a very dangerous departure from that procedure. I have to say, because it is a fact—and, believe me, I am trying not to be partisan—that we have in place—

Senator Flynn: Oh, oh.

Senator McElman: I would ask the honourable senator to take me seriously, if he would, and I will take him seriously as well.

Senator Sinclair: That is hard to believe.

Senator McElman: We have in place a Conservative Government with the largest majority in Canadian history, and it can do what it wishes, except for the Senate.

Senator Robichaud: Come on, now.

Senator Haidasz: No, it can't.

Senator McElman: Except for the Senate. Do you have a problem, my friend? If you do, solve it.

There are seven Conservative premiers. This federal government and those seven premiers meet the requirements of the Constitution, and since all those premiers have majority governments in their legislatures, in effect you have a minimum of eight Canadians deciding what their Parliament and its powers will be. I suggest to the leader, and I ask him to consider it seriously, that in this circumstance it is very important for the people of Canada that the basic negotiations, the subject matter of the proposals being considered and the reactions of those eight main players be understood by them, rather than placing before the Parliament of Canada and the provinces of Canada a resolution, agreed upon in advance in secret, behind the curtain, to be confirmed by Parliament and those seven legislatures—it could be more. I ask the leader in his capacity as a member of the government to consider very seriously raising what is in this circumstance a legitimate concern of the Canadian people.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not like to argue with my honourable friend on this point because I know where he is coming from and I respect it. However, I have to say to him in all frankness that the way in which he has described the present proceedings is not altogether dissimilar from, nor is it similar to, the process that took place when our own Constitution was agreed to.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): But that was about the amending formula itself.

Senator Roblin: It is perfectly true that there was a great deal of public discussion, and I want to assure my honourable friend that there will be a great deal of public discussion on this issue before we get through. We are too early in the process to say that the public is not going to be consulted and informed. They most certainly are. But I must say that the Premier of the Province of Quebec must feel very badly that ten men—nine premiers and the Prime Minister—imposed on him a constitution which he did not want. That is a reflection on this issue.

However, I would like to come back to what I think is a more serious point. I think at some stage—and I do not know where it will be—we will have to decide whether or not we have the best method of amending our Constitution as now provided. We are following now the course provided in the Constitution. We are not varying from it. We think we are following it as it is laid down and as it was intended to work. You can then raise the question as to whether matters of a constitutional character should be ventilated in a wider constituency than that laid down in our present Constitution. That is a debatable point, and I think there are arguments on both sides. All I am trying to say is that I am taking my honourable friend's point. We are following what we think is the correct constitutional propriety of the moment, but I want to assure him that, before anything happens, there will be a great deal of public input in the sense that the public will have an opportunity to make their views heard on these matters, in the way in which they usually do.

● (1520)

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he does not see a danger in the manner in which these negotiations are being conducted, namely behind the scenes? It is so important that the Canadian people be involved, and that they understand and accept what has happened. The Canadian people may feel that when the resolution hits the table in Parliament and in the respective legislatures, what they are dealing with is a fait accompli because the decision has already been taken by people who have the political strength and power to press that fait accompli into legislation, no matter what the debate and discussion may be.

I am asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate to consider the perception of the Canadian people in the circumstances, and to communicate it to his colleagues in the cabinet.

Senator Roblin: I will certainly express my honourable friend's concern, because I think he is entitled to that. However, what he has described is really the process by which the parliamentary system works. That is, that cabinets have their policies; they present them to the legislature and if the legislature does not accept them, then the cabinet goes down. That is the way the system works.

I have something for my honourable friend to consider, and perhaps he could answer at some future time. I would like him to tell me what he considers is the better method. For example, should there be a plebiscite put to the people of Canada, asking them what they think about the Senate? If we are looking for a complete democratic expression of opinion, a populist way of sampling public opinion, a plebiscite is the way to go. I myself have some trouble with that concept, but it is an alternative method.

Senator McElman: As honourable senators well know, my views on plebiscites are quite clear and have been for a number of years. I recall again the comment of a great, old West German parliamentarian, a politician statesman, right here in our Conference Centre a few years ago, speaking from his many years of experience with plebiscites. He referred to them as "carnivals for demagogues" and I think he was absolutely right. However, I will leave this item since I have pressed it as far as I should.

I would like to raise another question with the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and I would hope that Senator Flynn would listen very carefully, because it is an area in which he—

Senator Flynn: The honourable senator is making one long speech, instead of asking questions.

Senator McElman: I was asking for Senator Flynn's attention out of my respect for him and certain views that he and I have held in common in the past, across partisan lines.

Senator Flynn: Very well, I will.

Senator McElman: I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to draw the attention of his cabinet colleagues to this question. First of all, in one of his comments today, I noted that he said the government did not wish to act precipitately and make mistakes. With respect to abolition, he said that the constitutional requirement would be not just for the agreement of the Parliament of Canada and seven provinces, but the agreement of both houses of the Parliament of Canada and all provinces.

My question relates to section 47 of the Constitution Act, 1982, with which Senator Flynn and I have had grave concerns and which I still do not accept. In all of the constitutional conferences down through the years, it has been stated as fact that amendments of great moment, amendments that would materially change the character of our Parliament, amendments that would affect the basic powers of Parliament would require the agreement of all ten provinces before such amendments could come into effect. I can quote from the Molgat-MacGuigan report of a number of years ago on the Constitution. They, in their studies, found that to be the case and restated it. During the consideration of the Fulton-Favreau formula, that principle was also stated very carefully in the discussions.

I suggest to you that what we have now is political limbo with respect to that one aspect of the Constitution involving the Senate. I suggest to you that the Constitution that was assumedly approved in 1982 was badly flawed, in the sense that one of the four founding provinces, namely Quebec, which, together with New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, had demanded the establishment of a Senate, with specific powers and criteria for membership, as part of the contract of Confederation; that that important province, Quebec, did not sign that agreement and, therefore, section 47 of that Act, by constitutional practice in Canada, is invalid. Therefore the Senate of Canada today still holds its absolute veto with respect to constitutional matters. I am therefore suggesting to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that this question should indeed be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion.

Senator Roblin: If my memory serves me correctly, I am of the impression that similar questions have been dealt with by the Supreme Court of Canada as to the conventions of the Constitution. They have made it clear that unanimity was not one of them. This opinion was expressed by the Supreme Court of Canada before our Constitution was passed, so I presume that the situation still exists today that unanimity is not one of the conventions of the Constitution, except as specifically provided for.

The new Constitution, however, does specifically prescribe that unanimity is required in certain particulars. My honourable friend has introduced an interesting argument, but I think the matter has been settled.

Senator McElman: I have another point that I wish the Leader of the Government in the Senate to consider and also take up with his cabinet colleagues. The Supreme Court of Canada said that the Parliament of Canada could not, of itself, amend the Constitution with respect to the character and powers of the Senate. The Supreme Court said that such an amendment would require the agreement of the provinces. It did not specify all of the provinces; it said "the provinces".

As my honourable friend knows, the Supreme Court of Canada answers only questions that are put to it. The question was not put to the Supreme Court of Canada as to whether all provinces must agree. Therefore, the Supreme Court of Canada did not answer that question.

With respect to the convention and practice relating to amendments that affect the Parliament of Canada, its constitution and its powers, the consensus at all conferences has been that it did require all provinces to agree. Therefore, I repeat that although there have been opinions expressed by the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the Constitution, there has been none on this question. The question has never been put to the Supreme Court of Canada and I suggest to you that it should be.

● (1530)

I suggest that if the government does not wish to put that question to the Supreme Court of Canada, it might be interesting if the Senate, since it is so directly involved, asked the Supreme Court of Canada to decide that question.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that Canada's northern territories are integral parts of Canada, and that they have their own governments and legislatures, has the Government of Canada extended any opportunities or courtesies to date to the northern territorial governments so that they may be apprised of the proposals of Senate reform which the Leader of the Government has mentioned in his communiqué?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, the government is constitutionally bound by the provisions of the Constitution, and that is what it is carrying out.

Senator Haidasz: Does that mean that the territorial governments and legislatures will be ignored in this important matter, that the Government of Canada will not even extend to them the courtesies of asking them for their ideas on Senate reform?

Senator Roblin: I doubt that the government will ignore any informed opinion or uninformed opinion on this matter. With respect to its official attitude to the matter, it is bound by the Constitution.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, this is not a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate so much as an observation on his statement and the answers he has given to the many questions posed to him this afternoon.

Harking back to my earlier suggestion that some mechanism be found so that honourable senators can express their views at this time on this matter, I am concerned if I take as the general thrust of the answers from the leader that what is happening is not a simple proposal from the federal cabinet on an isolated thing being put to the provinces, such as a suspensive veto on money bills and the government seeking their support, but indeed a negotiation being opened up with the provinces on who knows how broad a range of reforms.

By the time the provinces come back with their own pet ideas, and if agreement is secured, which might be difficult, we would then have an agreement that is delicately balanced because the federal government has traded off one thing with one province or another thing with another province. That would then come before Parliament in the form of a bill, and all hell would break loose if somebody tried to tinker with it because it was so carefully constructed at the federal-provincial executive level of government. To bring that before Parliament so that we could all have our say would be meaningless, because it would be strenuously defended by the government with its majority in the House of Commons because it had been negotiated.

I am pleading for some input at an early stage so that the provinces themselves, quite apart from the federal government, can appreciate the fact that there is a large measure of agreement on reform. Conceivably, we could even arrive at a consensus on which they could work.

So, my plea is for discussion at this time, not simply a debate on legislation after a deal has been carefully struck with all the give and take required between the provinces and federal government.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is on interesting ground. The Senate undertook an intensive examination of itself and discussed reforms that ought to be brought in. That examination took place under the chairmanship of the late Senator Maurice Lamontagne, and occurred several years ago. There was also a special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, the report of which has been deposited in Parliament, but that report was not the subject of any consideration by the Senate. As I recall, neither was the Lamontagne report.

Senator Frith: The Lamontagne report was debated by way of Inquiry.

Senator Roblin: But were the reports themselves debated when they were presented? That is what I am talking about.

Senator Frith: By way of inquiry the report of the Lamontagne committee was debated, but the report itself was not debated.

Senator Roblin: My memory may be inaccurate, but perhaps Senator van Roggen will research Hansard to see what happened to those two reports. After he has conducted that research, if he wants to submit an inquiry that will highlight the points he has in mind, we could then discuss that. That of course, would be the traditional way in which we ventilate issues in the Senate. While I cannot, before knowing what is proposed, offer any encouragement or discouragement as to what my own views or the government's views might be, if there is the usual Senate debate, there will, in all likelihood, be a frank exchange of opinion, and I would not be surprised if there were different views expressed by senators from the same party.

So, that is a good idea and I encourage the Honourable Senator van Roggen to do something about it.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: On an historical footnote to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, perhaps I took his statement out of context today, but he seemed to isolate the Liberal senators for their actions taken in the committee. Before allowing the Government of Canada to rewrite history of the events and the catalyst that provoked Mr. Mulroney's calling this action "historic obstruction," did the Leader of the Government in the Senate bring to the cabinet's attention the fact that the report of the committee that was, in effect, the cause of this debate was a unanimous report? It was a report that was unanimously adopted, that is to say, not only by Liberal senators, but by Conservative senators.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government might read the last issue of Hansard which we have before us. At page 618 of Senate Debates the report of the committee is reproduced and it states, in part:

The Committee recommends that the Senate remain reluctant to approve any request for borrowing authority if such a request is not supported by a budget or by main estimates for the period for which the borrowing authority is being requested.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate might advise us whether or not he brought to the attention of the cabinet that Conservative senators joined in that recommendation unanimously.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I can assure my honourable friend that the appropriate authorities in the House of Commons scrutinize carefully the record of what transpires in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: That is new.

Senator Frith: A new breed, obviously.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, the Senate could no doubt benefit from reform, but even as currently constituted, it is considerable protection for the provinces against derogation by some House of Commons majority from equitable regional development. Part III of the Constitution Act, 1982 states that the federal Parliament, which includes the House of Commons and the Senate—the provincial legislatures, and Canada's 11 governments, "are committed to furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities." I have left some words out, but that is the gist of it.

There is nothing, however, in Part III to define how much regional disparity should be reduced. Some House of Commons majority might have a view different from that of provincial governments as to what is tolerable disparity. The Senate, in defence of the regions, could block House of Commons legislation, and perhaps should block House of Commons legislation, that affected adversely the principle that regional disparity should be reduced.

I ask the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he would be kind enough to bring this aspect—the implications of Part III—to the attention of his colleagues in the government and to the attention of the provincial premiers with whom discussions are now being held.

Senator Roblin: I am sure that the import of that particular section was carefully examined by the previous administration which sponsored it, and also by all of the various provinces who are concerned with it. I really think it is a bit impertinent for me, at this moment, to try to rewrite that record.

• (1540)

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I hope that when a decision is made by the government that they will not completely ignore the recommendations that were presented a few months ago by the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on the Reform of the Senate. There is an opportunity for considering now some of the matters that were studied very carefully and recommended by that committee which heard representations from across the country. There are some of us who still feel—I look at my colleague Senator van Roggen who does not feel that way—that there is room for an elected Senate with much stronger representation from western Canada and the Atlantic provinces.

Senator Sinclair: And Ontario.

Senator Buckwold: Not Ontario and not Quebec. I feel, in considering the fit of pique being displayed by the cabinet today, that the recommendations of that committee, and they are still new, should not be completely ignored.

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that this report to which he refers hardly ever leaves my hand. I study it carefully and am cognizant of some of the good points that it makes. I hope that he will find some of them reflected in the decisions that may be made in due course.

Senator Haidasz: Give us an opportunity.

EMPLOYMENT

REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate about a different matter, namely, the response to the royal commission report on equity in employment which was brought before members in the other place last Friday. As I am sure the honourable senator knows, Judge Abella's report made very clear recommendations about the need for certain kinds of information which are the basis for establishing some kind of employment equity among women, the handicapped, visible minorities and native people in Canada. I have searched in vain among the papers provided for some reference to what will be in the 1986 census which would allow the minister to proceed with her plans for creating employment equity. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us when the order in council will be tabled for the 1986 census plan?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to make inquiries about that.

Senator Marsden: I should like to ask a supplementary question. In the same package of material the Honourable Robert de Cotret pointed out that the Treasury Board, of which he is President, is immediately proceeding to conduct a survey to try to ascertain information on the employment of indigenous people and disabled people in the federal workplace. I would like to know how the government thinks that such a survey will help, since the Treasury Board, having discovered its own internal employment practices, will have no point of reference since it does not know how many people who are indigenous or handicapped there are in the labour force at the present time. Could the Leader of the Government get some clarification and amplification from the President of the Treasury Board about the purposes of such a survey?

Senator Roblin: The Treasury Board up to now has been operating under the same rules for the past 16 years, so my honourable friend need not be surprised if it takes a little time to put things right.

Senator Marsden: I have another question about this same series of announcements that were made last week. Many questions have been asked in the other place which have clarified issues. There is a great emphasis placed upon fairness in these announcements. I would like to point out, however, that crown corporations are required to report on their employment equity plan by September 1986 whereas other industries under federal jurisdiction of a certain size are not required to report for three years. For example, Air Canada will have to report in September 1986 about employment equity plans inside the corporation, but its competition in the marketplace—and the Air Canada Act requires that the airline be competitive and profit-making—CP Air and other airlines will have three years before they are required to report upon their internal plans for employment equity. Could the Leader of the Government clarify for us where the fairness lies in this proposal?

Senator Roblin: The fairness lies in history. History indicates that crown corporations such as Air Canada have been asked for some time now to take this question of balance, equity and fairness between various applicants for jobs into account and, indeed, they have been assuring the government for some time that they are doing so. In that case it is not such a difficult thing to ask them to produce the facts and figures in a short order of time. As far as I am aware, the same statement cannot be made generally of other organizations that are not crown corporations.

Senator Marsden: I am sure that Air Canada will have no difficulty whatsoever producing an employment equity plan because they have been asked by previous governments to produce those numbers and have done so. My question related not to their ability to produce it but to the fairness in the marketplace, that is, if one employer is put at a disadvantage by the government's program in comparison to another one, it seems to me that there is an aspect of unfairness involved here. I wonder if he would care to elaborate or clarify further on that.

Senator Roblin: I have to admit that my honourable friend is right, that there is no such thing as perfect fairness or perfect equity in this world. We strive for it but we do not always get it. We have to produce plans, however, that we think are practical and are within the capacity of the various people we ask to do something to do it in the normal course of their business with all convenient speed. That is what we are trying to do here. It does not mean that nothing happens for three years because a lot of things will happen in that time, but what it does mean is that the report as to what has been done and what is planned has to be available in three years.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators will be pleased to know that I have some delayed answers that pretty well bring us up to date. In view of the sensibilities of Senator Frith about the way in which I respond to these—I will have to stop making that reference because it is getting a little tiresome to my old friend and it certainly is to me—if any honourable senator wants the answer to his question read aloud, I will be glad to do so.

THE BUDGET

PREPARATION—USE OF CONSULTANTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The first delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on January 23, 1985, by the Honourable H.A. Olson, regarding the budget preparation and the use of consultants.

(The answer follows:)

Mr. William Mackness is a Special Policy Advisor to the Minister of Finance. His salary entitlement as a member of the Minister's exempt staff is in the range of $68,000 - $80,000. During the period of this assignment, the salary entitlement payable to Mr. Mackness by the Finance Department will be paid directly to the Bank of Nova Scotia. In turn, Mr. Mackness will continue to receive his normal salary and employee benefits from the Bank.

The Bank of Nova Scotia has agreed to make Mr. Mackness available on full loan to the Department of Finance, on an exclusive basis, for a one-year period beginning November 12, 1984. The Mackness appointment is patterned on procedures established for the "Executive Exchange" program. Mr. Mackness has no other corporate connections. Mr. Mackness has taken the Oath of Office and Secrecy and is subject to the Public Service Conflict of Interest Guidelines. Additionally, he has placed his assets and those of his wife under blind trust arrangements and has made related disclosures to the Registrar General.

DISARMAMENT

DEPLOYMENT OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on January 24, 1985, by the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, Leader of the Opposition, regarding government policy with respect to disarmament and deployment of nuclear weapons.

(The answer follows:)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has not "unthinkingly embraced the Strategic Defence Initiative". Mr. Clark stated quite explicitly that definitive conclusions cannot be drawn at this time from a research program. The research itself does not of itself contravene the provisions of the 1967 Outer Space Treaty or the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. In the light of Soviet advances in this type of research, it is only prudent that the West explore the feasibility of such projects. Further, we have reassurance from President Reagan that the USA would not proceed beyond the research stage without discussion and negotiation.

In the interim, Canada will keep an open mind on the issue and will offer the fullest support for USA-USSR efforts to reach agreement on equitable and mutual reductions in their respective nuclear forces.

On the question of nuclear weapons, Canada has no plans to allow nuclear weapons on Canadian soil without the prior consent of the Government of Canada.

With regard to Canada-USA consultations in the event of a crisis, the SSEA has instructed officials to initiate a process which will resolve the issues recently raised with regard to Canadian and USA contingency plans, with particular reference to nuclear weapons deployment. The result will reaffirm Canadian sovereignty in this crucial area.

[Senator Roblin.]

As the Honourable senator knows from his own lengthy experience as SSEA, there can be no open debate or discussion of the details of contingency plans or the consultations related thereto. Such matters are crucial both to national and NATO security due to their central role in deterrence, a role which would be compromised if details were available to Warsaw Pact military planners.

As the SSEA is already pursuing this matter, there are no plans to place it on the agenda for discussion by Prime Minister Mulroney and President Reagan in March.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

IRAN—PERSECUTION OF BAHÁ'IS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on February 5, 1985, by the Honourable Jeremiah Grafstein regarding foreign affairs—Iran—persecution of Baha'is.

Senator Grafstein cited a press report which quoted an official representative of Iran as saying that his government would not hesitate to violate the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Canadian Government would hope that, if such a statement were made, the Government of Iran would clarify it because it would be a denial of the obligations of Iran under the U.N. Charter, and a denial of the rights and dignity of people.

Our representatives in the United Nations have repeatedly expressed Canada's views about continuing violations of human rights in Iran, very much including the systematic persecution of members of the Baha'i faith which has caused us much concern. Most recently, on November 26, Canada raised the issue of the persecution of the Baha'is in our statement to the U.N. General Assembly Third Committee, one of very few countries to do so.

Last year, Canada co-sponsored a resolution in the U.N. Commission on Human Rights whereby the Commission appointed a Special Representative to report on the situation in Iran and we will continue to urge the Government of Iran to co-operate fully with that official. We have also continued to express regularly Canada's concerns to the Iranian Chargé d'Affaires in Ottawa. These efforts will continue.

UNITED NATIONS

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION—CANCELLATION OF APPOINTMENT OF HON. EUGENE WHELAN, P.C.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on February 5, 1985, by the Honourable Keith Davey, regarding the United Nations with specific reference to the Food and Agriculture Organization and the cancellation of the appointment of the Honourable Eugene Whelan, P.C.

The press reports are a misinterpretation of the material released under the Access to Information Act.

In February 1980 the Department recommended that the Government should upgrade the level of its full-time Representative to the FAO from the rank of Counsellor to Minister-Counsellor and also assign to the Canadian Ambassador to Italy the additional responsibilities of Canadian Permanent Representative to the FAO.

In fact, in 1982 when action was taken, a Permanent Representative was appointed with the diplomatic rank of Minister and a second officer was also assigned FAO responsibilities.

In 1984, the Department was again internally reviewing the question of representation to the FAO when this was overtaken by the July announcement by the former Government of the appointment of a separate Ambassador to the FAO.

In other words, no departmental recommendation had gone forward on this question before the appointment was made.

ENERGY

PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE OIL

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on February 6, 1985, by the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat, regarding the price of Canadian crude oil.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources recommended that, from February 1, 1985, any necessary reductions to accommodate increased exports and reduce potential shut-in be made in the tariff of charges for licensed exports. Revenue from this charge is shared 50-50 between Ottawa and the producing provinces.

In implementing this policy, the National Energy Board is to ensure that export prices of each crude oil type, netted back to the field, do not fall below the corresponding price at which a similar type of crude oil is made available to Canadian refineries. Similarly, oil product export prices should not be permitted to fall below comparable Canadian levels, excluding domestic taxes (Petroleum Compensation Charge $6.54/bbl, Canadian Ownership Special Charge $1.15/bbl) which are not applicable to oil exports.

In other words, the wellhead cost for crude is no different for Canadian than it is for American refiners. The current disparity is a result of our regulated oil price system. Canadian refiners pay about $30/bbl for western Canadian light crude at the field. When pipeline transportation costs, the PCC and the COSC, are included, the Canadian refinery acquisition cost averages over $39/bbl. Light Canadian crude, delivered to Chicago, is priced at Can. $33 to $34/bbl due to the reduction in the export charge, as described in the opening paragraph. This reduction affects the revenues of the federal government and the producing provinces only.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

RUMOURED DISSOLUTION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is a question raised in the Senate on February 6, 1985, by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding the rumoured dissolution of the Economic Council of Canada.

(The answer follows:)

In reply to the honourable senator's question regarding the Economic Council of Canada, I want to inform her that, at the present time, the government has no plans to dissolve the council. These rumours are just that; they are simply rumours.

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on February 7, 1985, by the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, Leader of the Opposition, regarding the date of presentation of the budget.

(The answer follows:)

With regard to the honourable senator's query about the prospective date for the budget, it is still the government's intention to bring down a budget in the spring. When the precise date for the budget is established, the minister will inform Parliament, as is the customary practice.

EMPLOYMENT

NOVA SCOTIA—DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Graham on February 12, 1985, regarding the decentralization program as it relates to Nova Scotia.

(The answer follows:)

In responding to Senator Graham's earlier question regarding the cancellation of the proposed relocation of the Halifax regional office of Income Securities Program to Sydney, the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that the move was cancelled for two reasons.

First, the move could not be justified on the grounds of either programming or improved service to ISP recipients in Nova Scotia. Second, because of this, and together with the government's current financial position, the $8 - $10M cost of the program was deemed unwarranted.

For these reasons, the government has no plans to reconsider the move.

ENERGY

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have another delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Hastings on February 13, 1985, relating to the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Development Agreement.

(The answer follows:)

Nova Scotia has not yet made a formal application for renegotiation of its existing agreement.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

AFRICA—FAMINE RELIEF

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a further delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Olson with regard to famine relief for Africa.

The focus of public attention in recent months has been on the famine in Africa and the Canadian response to it. The response of Canadians through private contributions and through Government funds has been substantial. On the Government side, in addition to the $65 million allocated through the Special Fund for Africa, $149 million has been spent on food aid primarily in those countries with the greatest need for famine relief. In Ethiopia, for example, over $32 million in food aid was provided in 1984/1985 through all channels.

But in addition to these responses to the short-term crisis, the Government provides funds through a number of other channels that are focussed on the longer-term problem of how to increase food production. In 1984/1985, Canadian Government funds to Africa through all channels totalled more than $800 million. Of this, nearly $300 million was through CIDA's bilateral program.

The focus of CIDA's bilateral programs is on three priority sectors - agriculture, human resource development, and energy. In 1984/1985 agriculture and agriculture-related activities accounted for roughly 35 per cent of all bilateral expenditures. As example of the type of projects being undertaken to restore productivity in countries most affected by the drought, CIDA is providing direct support for agricultural production and marketing (e.g. improvements in dryland farming in the Sudan and integrated rural development in Mali), reforestation projects (e.g. reforestation programs in Niger, Burkina Faso and the Sudan), and rural infrastructure (e.g. rural water supplies in southern Ethiopia).

In summary, while the headlines focus on the immediate crisis and our response to the situation, the Canadian Government is also making a considerable effort to find longer-term solutions to the fundamental problems of agricultural productivity in Africa. But it should be pointed out that we are not alone in this effort — other nations and international institutions such as the World Bank are involved in these efforts and our activities are closely coordinated and supportive of the goal of helping Africa to feed itself.

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING OF POTATOES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, finally, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Corbin on February 19, 1985, with regard to the marketing of potatoes.

(The answer follows:)

No one would be more anxious than the Minister of Agriculture to develop, in conjunction and co-operation with his provincial colleagues and the potato producers and processors in this country, an effective marketing system, whatever that marketing system is. It is not in the Minister of Agriculture's hands to dictate; but rather, it is in the hands of the industry to design and to recommend to him.

The Minister of Agriculture had an opportunity to discuss this matter with people in the industry prior to making the decision, and he checked with a number of his colleagues in potato-producing provinces of the country as well. As with some other segments of our economy, the Minister of Agriculture thinks they have a tendency to be studied to death.

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he has an answer to a question I asked on February 6, 1985, relating to a question asked by Senator Molgat. I asked whether it was true that we were selling oil in Chicago for 18 cents less than we were at that time selling it in Ontario; who paid for that 18-cent shortfall; was it the governments who lowered their taxes to accommodate that 18 cents; was it the oil companies that could still make a profit and sell oil for 18 cents less; and, if so, why isn't oil being sold for 18 cents less here?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if my honourable friend has already asked that question, and he has told me that he has, it is quite unnecessary for him to repeat it because the question will be answered as soon as the information is available.

If my honourable friend wants to know why it has not been answered so far, that is different. I would respond by saying it is because the information has not yet been assembled, but it will be.

Senator Gigantès: Thank you.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to request that the Leader of the Government read the answer to the question earlier referred to as being asked by me.

Senator Roblin: I am sorry, but I have handed all the delayed answers in.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, what is the point of the Leader of the Government saying that he is prepared to read them and not waiting to see if there is a request to have them read aloud?

Senator Roblin: The point is: If my honourable friend had asked at the time I had the answer in my hand, I would have been pleased to oblige, but he has left it a little late.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I took the first opportunity to rise. The honourable senator to my left rose before me, and I thought he should have been heard then. Perhaps the Leader of the Government should put on the brakes once in a while.

Senator Roblin: The next time I will read them.

HUMAN RIGHTS

MEETING OF EXPERTS—DESIRABILITY OF SENATE PARTICIPATION—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability of its participation in the preparations for and deliberations of the special meeting of experts on human rights, which is to be held in Ottawa, April 23rd to mid-June, 1985, as directed in the concluding document of the Madrid Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I adjourned this debate in my own name in the event that some other senators might wish to participate. Since no one has come forward and since no one wishes to debate the matter further, I believe this inquiry should be considered debated.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

NATIONAL FINANCE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY FEDERAL BUDGETARY DEFICITS WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel), seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the magnitude and the impact of federal budgetary deficits and the associated public debt and that it consider appropriate policies relating to these deficits;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such professional, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination; and

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, about that motion I tabled on December 19, 1984, I would like to avail myself of rule 23, which reads as follows:

A senator who has made a motion or presented an inquiry may withdraw or modify the same by leave of the Senate.

So, with leave of the Senate, I would like to withdraw that motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order withdrawn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

ADDRESS

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY JAVIER PEREZ DE CUELLAR
SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION

TO

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

IN THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA

ON

THURSDAY, MARCH 7, 1985

His Excellency the Secretary-General was welcomed by the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Hon. Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate, and the Hon. John W. Bosley, Speaker of the House of Commons.

[English]

Hon. John W. Bosley (Speaker of the House of Commons): Mr. Secretary-General, we are highly honoured to have you address this joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons. Before calling on the Prime Minister, we want to welcome you and Mrs. Perez de Cuellar warmly to our Parliament.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Your Excellency, Mr. Secretary-General and Mrs. Perez de Cuellar, Hon. Members of the Senate and the House of Commons, it is a special occasion in the life of the Canadian Parliament when we gather to hear a distinguished visitor address a joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons. Today, we have the honour of receiving the head of the world's pre-eminent international organization, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and we bid you a warm welcome.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In his presence let me reaffirm, on your behalf, Canada's commitment to the United Nations and to the values and aspirations it was created to serve.

Mr. Secretary-General, there has been no war on our soil in more than a century and a half. In that respect, Canadians are among the most fortunate people in the world. Yet three times in this century young Canadians have put on uniforms and, leaving all they love behind, have gone overseas to war. Six hundred and twenty thousand did so in the First World War;

550,000 in the Second World War; and 25,000 in Korea. More than 100,000 Canadians died in those wars. Most of them were younger by far than any of us in this Chamber today, and they lie in graves in Europe and Asia. Those who came back to Canada gladly turned to peaceful occupations and to the building of this country. Some of them sit in this parliament. Some have raised sons and daughters who sit in this parliament with us today.

[Translation]

Canada has not forgotten those days and the lessons of those days. So long as there remains etched in our national memory the sacrifice of our youth and the trauma of war, peace will be, Mr. Secretary-General, the paramount objective of this nation, of its Parliament and of its Government. I mean a lasting peace, a just peace, a universal peace.

[Applause]

Forty years ago the terrible memories were new and hopes were high that the United Nations could ensure international order and world peace.

On many occasions and in many parts of the world, the United Nations system has in fact helped prevent the worst from happening. Your predecessors, sir, have played an honourable and a memorable part in those events. Your own very tenacious efforts have contributed to the easing of tensions in such areas as the Falkland/Malvinas Islands, Cyprus, the Middle East and Africa.

[English]

Yet, as we meet today, the most tragic and brutal wars are laying waste to the lives and resources of human beings and nations in many parts of this world. These wars and their continuance mark the failure of our world organization to make peace prevail. This failure is a reproach, not to the United Nations, but to each and every member state.

As you know, Sir, Canada is a member of the North Atlantic Alliance. That Alliance has for more than 30 years helped prevent war in Europe. We believe in a strong defence as a deterrent to war. We believe further that a country such as ours can make its best contribution not only to defence but to peace and stability by participating in organizations such as these.

You will also be aware that the Canadian Armed Forces have taken part in almost every United Nations peace-keeping force that has been formed. We are particularly proud of the fact that we have never failed to respond as a nation to a call to serve the United Nations. We have heard that call in the past and it is with great pleasure that we meet with you today in the quest for peace.

[Translation]

The wars that are still raging in various parts of the globe do not seem ready today to respond to peacemaking or peacekeeping initiatives by the United Nations.

Is there a more effective way for the world community to anticipate and avert such wars?

That is a complex question. But I want you to know, Mr. Secretary-General, that Canada agrees that a good part of the answer lies in a stronger United Nations Organization.

In particular we support your personal efforts to play a more active role in the security council in dealing with critical world situations—and to pursue the task of peacekeeping and peace-making as the sine qua non for significant progress in the social and economic spheres.

[English]

We welcome the steps you are taking to ensure that the machinery of international co-operation is serviced by an efficient and solid secretariat. Your actions have restored a strong and central role for the Secretary General in the management of the international system and in the conduct of world affairs. For that and for many other things, Sir, we salute you as we welcome you to our Parliament today.

Canada strongly supports this pivotal role within a renewed and revitalized United Nations system.

No less than the waging of frequent war in every part of our world, the threat of nuclear war and the danger that life on this planet will be extinguished by nuclear war is a reproach to member states and a disgrace to the ideals of the United Nations.

In every forum that is open to us, Canada will pursue arms control and disarmament with vigour, commitment and patience.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

In this connection, Mr. Secretary-General, I want you to know that your remarkable intervention, at the last General Assembly, on the dangers of nuclear war, struck a responsive chord here in Canada.

Mr. Secretary-General, if the multilateral system is, at worst, under siege or, at best, in a weakened state, then we pledge to strengthen the system.

We know that continued prosperity in Canada cannot be realized except in a healthy and growing world economy.

That is the meaning of interdependence. The world community must address with renewed seriousness, the issues of trade and aid, of social and economic development, of raising living standards everywhere.

Up to now, those issues have been addressed intermittently. They must be addressed relentlessly or we shall constantly lose ground, all of us, especially the poorest.

[English]

Canadians have come to know you, Sir, for your determined and reasoned leadership of the United Nations. The leadership of the United Nations in co-ordinating the massive response of the international community to the emergency in Africa is a tribute to your personal commitment, a commitment which is shared by the Canadian people. At such times, we see vividly something of the immense possibilities for good when the nations of the world are mobilized to that end. We see manifested also, the solidarity of millions of individual human beings around the world, their sense of fraternity, their willingness to help. That, Sir, is a powerful force for the betterment of mankind.

Under your leadership, the international community must rededicate itself to the realization of these objectives and to the rule of law in international affairs. You can count upon the Canadian Government, the Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people in this formidable pursuit. Welcome, Sir.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

His Excellency Javier Perez de Cuellar (Secretary-General of the United Nations Organization):

Mr. Speaker of the Senate,
Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons,
Mr. Prime Minister,
Honourable Members of Parliament.

Thank you, Mr. Prime Minister, most sincerely for your warm, generous, and stimulating words of welcome.

It is a great honour for me to address this joint session of the Canadian Parliament. I regard your invitation and kind welcome as another expression of that deep concern for the success of the United Nations, which has motivated Canada's role in the world Organization.

It has been an exemplary role, based, of course, on your sincere dedication to the aims of our Charter. But I believe it has also derived much of its vitality from this great country's distinctions: the rich diversity of your culture, the wide range of your international contacts and the understanding of world affairs which you command.

It has been suggested to me—from your side—that I should speak to you about the possibilities relating to Canada's future role in the United Nations and not deliver an encomium on your contributions in the past. The suggestion reflects an appealing modesty and generosity, yet it would be inappropriate for me to omit a reference to all that Canada has done to help the United Nations meet the difficult challenges facing it.

The break-through in 1955 in the deadlock which had frozen the composition of the United Nations, the innovative response in 1956 to the situation created by the Suez Canal crisis, your participation in almost all peace-keeping operations launched by the United Nations, your positive contributions to the work of every committee or commission set up since 1945 to deal with the issue of disarmament—these are only the most outstanding instances. Long before the issue of achieving greater balance in the world economy assumed its present prominence, Canada was among the pioneers of the idea of technical assistance programs for developing countries being undertaken by the United Nations.

Let me, therefore, pay my heartfelt tribute to Canada's loyal and consistent support of the endeavours of the world organization. Solidly based as it is on a national consensus, sustained as it has been through your successive administrations, it provides a graphic illustration of the capabilities of countries, other than the permanent members of the Security Council, to advance the work of the United Nations. I might parenthetically mention here that it has become conventional to call countries such as yours the medium-sized ones. The phrase is hardly descriptive of a number among them. Canada, for one, is large not only in territory but also in spirit and intellect, in its resources of statesmanship and in its philosophy of practical co-operation in international life.

As I stand before you today, looking ahead in this year of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, I feel that the future appears to hold even better prospects for the decisive role of countries such as yours. A dynamic United Nations system provides you with a unique instrument for wielding a collective influence on the resolution of outstanding global issues. It is true that major decisions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security depend on the agreement of the permanent members of the Security Council. But in our age of interdependence, other countries have an equal stake in peace and cannot, therefore, be bystanders. A privileged position is conferred on a few, but responsibility rests with all.

[Translation]

Ladies and gentlemen, I am sure you are aware of the increased dissatisfaction being expressed in certain circles with the way the United Nations operates. It is said, and there is some truth in this argument, that the UN has been steadily losing credibility. I have said as much, if not more so, myself. However, can the world afford to sit back after making such a judgment? Credibility requires that we provide purpose and direction to the multilateral dialogue on issues that give rise to tension and threaten to cause conflicts between nations.

Since in the world forum that is the United Nations, the dialogue is an international one, it is incumbent on those who express dissatisfaction to bring to this forum the requisite practical and methodical approach and appreciation of urgency and consistency which together may be expected to produce concrete results. An organization like the UN cannot afford to maintain a purely rhetorical stance. It cannot afford to prevent the free expression of the aspirations, fears and grievances of the peoples of this world. It is important that each Member State consider the success or failure of the UN as the success or failure of a personal undertaking. Small and medium-sized powers have various avenues open to them for making good use of the capability of the UN to promote negotiations leading to lasting agreements. These countries can influence the climate of debate and play a moderating role in international conflict. They can formulate specific and realistic suggestions and put them on the agenda of the international community. Through discreet diplomacy they can help fend off threats to peace. The United Nations offers many opportunities for consultation and contacts between ministers of Foreign Affairs and heads of government, which can be used to seek a meeting of minds, to explore avenues that may lead to an agreement on major issues and to analyze the world situation.

I have mentioned earlier the idea of peace-keeping by the United Nations and the part that Canada has played in its conception and development. Peace-keeping operations have conclusively shown the resilience and responsiveness of the United Nations and its capacity for conflict control. The very idea of launching a peace-keeping mission with the help of member states that are not permanent members of the Security Council puts a focus on the responsibility of these states for the maintenance of international peace and security.

But the responsibility does not end with containing a conflict; it extends to resolving the underlying cause of the conflict. Peace-keeping without peace-making can be but a palliative. The cooling-off period which peace-keeping operations manage to secure is of little avail if it serves only as a prelude to a more violent eruption.

I do not have to cite any particular regional conflict: the proposition holds true of all that, without a credible movement toward a just and lasting settlement of an international dispute, pent-up passions accumulate and distrust mounts. Frequently, such a situation runs the risk of dangerous escalation on to a global plane, with immediate ramifications for the entire international community.

The Charter of the United Nations lists all conceivable means for the pacific settlement of disputes. At present, in situations where direct negotiations are difficult or impossible for one reason or another, states rarely feel encouraged to avail themselves of such means as mediation, the good offices of an impartial third party, or adjudication. This is one of the cardinal manifestations of disorganization in international affairs. However, the failure is by no means terminal. Member states of the United Nations can exert a collective and benevolent pressure for the rational settlement of international disputes.

In this regard, the bulk of these states, compared to the world powers, have the advantage of greater flexibility because they are less entangled historically in the causes of the conflict. Alone, none of them can expect success in mediating a dispute; together, their voice can be persuasive and may well prove irresistible.

I would urge influential states like Canada to use the opportunities afforded by the United Nations for giving a fresh impulse to encouraging the comprehensive and durable settlement of regional conflicts. I do not underrate the difficulties involved but, even with the small signs of realism and fluidity that can be discerned in certain situations, the climate may be more propitious now than it has been in recent years. In some situations, the United Nations or the Secretary-General remains essential to communication between the parties. I think, for example, of Cyprus, over which at the moment I am engaged in a new personal effort to find a solution, of Afghanistan, the Iran-Iraq war and South-East Asia.

Another very important area in which a country like Canada can play a most useful role is the promotion of the North-South dialogue. I do not believe that there is a primordial or inherent conflict between the interests of the developing countries and those of the industrialized ones: all will benefit from a more efficient, less unbalanced and less crisis-prone global economy. If the positions respectively formulated by the two sides seem irreconcilable, a more imaginative approach can help to bridge the gulf. What is important is that the dialogue should be free from the tone of confrontation.

Canada has been second to none among the industrialized countries in acknowledging the necessity of making the world economic system more responsive to poverty in large parts of the globe. Your statesmen have urged a less fractious approach to the process of giving a more balanced meaning to the idea of economic interdependence. The objectivity and breadth of vision that inspired their appeal can be most helpful in stimulating some progress in the North-South dialogue.

[Translation]

One of the main concerns of our society today is the existing situation with respect to human rights. Paradoxically, at a time when the United Nations, after tremendous efforts, has succeeded in giving the provisions guaranteeing the protection of human rights force of law internationally those very rights are still being violated on a wide scale. For the first time in history, the States that make up the international community and are signatories to the Charter of the United Nations are committed to work together to promote and foster respect for human rights and basic freedoms for all. Such instruments as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and related covenants prescribe those standards against which the international community may judge the behaviour of a State in that context. Various procedures have been established to make it easier for the States to adhere to those standards. Unfortunately, many regions of the world still violate them, and that is one of the most disturbing characteristics of mankind. This problem ought to be tackled with tact, and the method most likely to give positive results ought to be adopted. In my opinion, countries such as Canada can contribute to strengthen the means available to the United Nations to allay the great sufferings caused by the denial of human rights and dignity.

In conclusion, may I allude to the concern which, in the minds of people the world over, is by far more extant than any other: the apprehension stemming from the unrelenting expansion of the nuclear arsenal. Here again Canada has the advantage of being a country which, however advanced in the realm of nuclear technology, is not equipped with nuclear weapons.

In that capacity, you are in a position to give invaluable assistance to overcome the technical obstacles which stand in the way of the implementation of effective measures to limit and, ultimately, eliminate nuclear arms. Mankind's foremost objective must be to reverse the trend towards nuclear overarmament. This is not the proper forum for me to attempt to analyze the various reasons why no progress has been made to that end. However, it seems to me that the human mind has now become a prisoner of a new form of determinism, even more paralyzing than fatalism—a belief in predestination, to which the fall of the glorious civilizations of the past has been attributed. I am speaking of the subjection to the ruthless advance of military technology.

Technology should be at the service of mankind and not be the ruler of its destiny. If private corporations can maintain control over their industrial technology and use it sensibly in their own financial interests, there is no reason why States cannot maintain control over the technology of destruction in the interests of peace. However, such control requires reciprocal agreements to put an end to the arms race. Without these agreements, science can play the role of the sorcerer's apprentice as far as armaments are concerned; if we want the gnome to stop before all of us are swept away by the flood, we need an order from our political leaders.

As a matter of fact, the arms race among the major world powers was prompted by their serious concerns about their own security. However, the concept of security cannot be solely military; its other aspects, whether economic, social, cultural or philosophic, are infinitely more important today than in the past. Moreover, there is no reason to believe that our quest for security must always lead us to outbid each other as far as armaments are concerned rather than agreeing to a mutual reduction of arms levels. Without an armament limitation agreement there can never be a fixed point at which one of the parties can feel assured of equality or of an advantage in armaments. Viewed only in terms of armaments, total security is a goal which always gets further away and which is always just out of reach. Humanity cries out to escape from this vicious circle.

[English]

Distinguished Members of Parliament, I have touched on only some of the more important problems facing the international community today. I am convinced that if these and other difficulties are to be tackled squarely, we must all concentrate more on what unites us as human beings than on the often transitory factors that pit nations as adversaries one against the other. Few nations know better than Canada the need to recognize fully and accommodate differing voices in a representative forum.

Such recognition is the secret of your success as a people. Success for the community of nations cannot be complete while so many of our fellow human beings languish in deprivation. Ultimately, we must all advance together, and I am convinced that the United Nations is by far and away the best vehicle for doing so. I am gratified indeed to find here in Canada such frank and fair recognition of these truths and I look forward to continued close co-operation with you as we proceed to our common goal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. Secretary-General, being aware of your reputation, I knew you would be sharing with us today some profound thoughts on the current problems of a divided world. As we sit upon a huge powder keg, the detonator of which could be activated from the four corners of the world, we find solace in the assurance that the Secretary-General of the organization whose mission is to unite all the nations on earth is endowed with such a positive understanding. As a matter of fact, you carry out your duties with the realism of an experienced politician and the generosity of a confirmed humanist.

As we commemorate this year the 100th anniversary of Victor Hugo's death, allow me to quote one of the biting comments for which this great man was deservedly famous and which reflects on the nearly superhuman dimension of your quest: "Universal peace is an hyperbola and the human race is following its asymptote". In other words, we are trying to bring together two parallel lines which could never meet.

In spite of this age-old evidence, you fervently persevere in your efforts to foster appeasement throughout the world, efforts which we, as Canadians, both admire and support. In your achievements so far we find grounds for hope because, like us, you constantly proclaim the priority of right over force, of reason over blind passion, and of dialogue over violence.

Through your untiring and omnipresent action, you appear to us to have acquired a sense of ubiquity which is the distinct characteristic of a universal assembly. You must be everywhere at once because nations all over the world need a peacemaker.

[English]

When things go wrong, it is easy to join the chorus criticizing the United Nations. But we should never lose faith and throw our hands up in exasperation. You know as we in Canada know that the United Nations system can be no stronger than the collective will of its member states. We cannot treat the United Nations as a handy scapegoat.

It is not surprising that the United Nations is having more difficulty carrying out its responsibilities in the maintenance of peace and security. The drift toward political conflict and war between nations is never easy to reverse. You, Mr. Secretary-General, have continued to work assiduously in the centre of these conflicts in the highest traditions of your office. I need only note that where all others have failed to date, you have successfully chipped away at the inhuman edges of the war between Iran and Iraq. In Cyprus, you are bringing the leaders of the two Cypriot communities together to promote a settlement. You must not lose hope. You should draw your encouragement from quiet successes and the support of nations like Canada for the long road ahead.

We are honoured by your presence among us. Canadians support you in your vital work. We are proud of the contribution we shall continue to make in strengthening the United Nations so that it can rise to the new challenges. Thank you, Mr. Secretary-General.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John W. Bosley (Speaker of the House of Commons): Mr. Secretary-General, on behalf of the Hon. Members of this House of Commons and the people of Canada, I wish to thank you for sharing your thoughts with us so eloquently.

Twenty-one years ago, U Thant spoke in this Chamber and brought to Canadians a message that still rings with relevance and importance. He said to us that "for all its moral authority and good intentions, the United Nations, like any peaceful agent of order and justice, cannot be effective without some co-operation, some give and take, some effort to move forward, on the part of the peoples primarily concerned". Today, you gave us a message that will stay with Canadians for at least another 21 years.

[Translation]

We are compelled by your masterly review of the current global situation to seriously ponder over the problems faced by the international community and over the impact on each of us of the "multilateralism crisis."

You have explained why it is of the utmost importance that the United Nations Assembly should remain strong.

If there is a lesson to be drawn from recent history, it is the global interdependence of nations.

Without such a dynamic mechanism for international co-operation, the conflicting interests of nations would lead to chaos. In a world of increasing complexity, the United Nations is an essential body.

[English]

Canadians know this, and as you have heard in the Prime Minister's introduction, Canada remains committed to the United Nations, its principles and its objectives, in both word and deed. As you have indicated, what is needed is a revitalization of the U.N. system. What better or more effective way could there be to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations?

[Translation]

During the thirties, certain countries turned their backs on the League of Nations, and the consequences were disastrous. If in a nuclear era a new cataclysm were required to have us realize the importance of our existing heritage, we might very well find nothing to rebuild the world upon.

This is the reason why your message to us today is of unparalleled urgency and import.

[English]

For Canadians, peace is an urgent matter, as it is for you. We too hope that leaders around the world will find the way to make peace last forever throughout our planet. For Canadians, the blue beret that has been worn with pride by thousands of Canadian peace-keepers is a constant and positive reminder of Canada's partnership with the United Nations. You, Sir, by your presence and your words here today have reinforced this partnership. For this we are truly grateful. Again, Mr. Secretary General, thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This meeting is now adjourned.

NATIONAL DAY OF GREECE

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Philippe D. Gigantès: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, March 26, 1985, I will call the attention of the Senate to the National Day of Greece, and to the contribution of Ancient Greece to conservative thought.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have four motions which, in effect, refer four bills to committee for pre-study. With leave of the Senate, I shall introduce them now as motions or, if leave is not granted, I shall introduce them as notices of motions for tomorrow.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Doody advised me earlier in the week that he was going to handle these motions in this manner. I asked for an opportunity to consult my colleagues about it. I have done so and have advised him that we are supportive of this procedure. Therefore, leave is granted and there is no need for them to be introduced only as notices at this time.

FISHERIES ACT

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-32

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-32, intituled: "An Act to amend the Fisheries Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

Motion agreed to.

INVESTMENT IN CANADA

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-15

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-15, intituled: "An Act respecting investment in Canada", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-18

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-18, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other acts and to make other consequential amendments", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN ACT

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-31

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That, notwithstanding Rule 67(1)(m), the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-31, intituled: "An Act to amend the Indian Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

He said: Honourable senators, Senator Neiman, the chairman of the committee, would like to make a comment on this particular motion.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to this motion. We are anxious to get under way with the study of Bill C-31 as soon as possible. In fact, I have made provision for a meeting room for tomorrow morning to hear our first witness from the department who will explain the technical background and intricacies of this bill, which of course is an amendment to the Indian Act. You will be informed later in the day of the location of the meeting which will take place at 9.30 a.m. tomorrow and Mr. Lahey from the department will appear.

The meeting will be held in camera in order to give everyone as much opportunity as possible to discuss this matter thoroughly and to be briefed in an informal manner. There are several senators on this side of the house who have expressed to me the desire to become a member of that committee. As you know, we cannot accommodate everyone. However, I would urge those in this chamber who are interested in the provisions of Bill C-31 to attend as many sessions as possible in order to familiarize themselves with the provisions of the bill.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as you will note, our own order paper is quite bare of legislation. Nevertheless, the order paper of the House of Commons is not, and some of the 15 or 20 bills on it are quite substantial. They are going through due process in the House of Commons; the debates are ongoing, and its committees are examining those bills in detail. In anticipation of many of them arriving here at the same time, we have decided, in consultation with our honourable colleagues opposite, to ask certain committees to pre-study the subject matter of four of those bills.

The pre-study of the subject matter of those four bills will entail quite an extra load on the committees branch. When the Senate rises this afternoon, tomorrow afternoon, or whenever, I will suggest that we try to take advantage of our time to schedule committee meetings. I know that there are several meetings scheduled for this afternoon and tomorrow morning.

I do not know whether the scheduling of Senator Neiman's committee to sit tomorrow has been cleared with the chairman in charge of committees or not, so perhaps our whip, who has expressed some concern, will make a comment on that.

At this point I can only say that, since the order paper looks something less than crowded, we should take advantage of our time to conduct those pre-studies.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, if I may point out, there are limited facilities for holding committee meetings and a limited number of personnel to staff them. It was my understanding that all committee meetings were to be cleared through the chairman of committees, or the whips. The meeting proposed for tomorrow morning has not been cleared by me; the suggestion was not even made to me. I would ask the committee chairman to have the courtesy to do that so that we can avoid any difficulties.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As I understood the arrangement, the "traffic policeman's" job for these committee meetings was to be shared by Senators Phillips and Petten. I note that Senator Petten was not here, so that may be the reason he did not raise it with Senator Phillips. I confirm what Senator Phillips has said—that is, we have asked Senators Phillips and Petten to control the traffic as far as meetings are concerned. That may be the reason for the slip up.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I apologize to Senator Phillips. I had understood that the meeting had been cleared. We will certainly do that in the future.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PARLIAMENT HILL

CANADIAN FLAG AT HALF-STAFF

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I ask the leader whether the Canadian flag, which is at half-staff over the Peace Tower, is in that position to mourn the late Konstantin Chernenko, the former President of the U.S.S.R., or to mourn the late Right Honourable "Tom" Adams, the late Prime Minister of Barbados, or the Canadian who gave his life defending a foreign mission, the Turkish embassy, to discharge Canada's responsibility to give protection to those missions.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I hope the flag is flying at half-staff for all three of those reasons.

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE JOHN ADAMS PRIME MINISTER OF BARBADOS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT FUNERAL

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the Prime Minister of Canada is going to lead the Canadian delegation to the funeral of the late Prime Minister "Tom" Adams on Saturday next, and whether in that delegation will be included one of our distinguished colleagues, Senator Anne Cools, who comes from Barbados and who had a role to play in the formation of responsible government in that country.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I appreciate my honourable friend's reference to Senator Cools, because that is a matter that should be noted by this chamber.

The Prime Minister will not be leading such a delegation because at that time he will be in Quebec City, either meeting with President Reagan or making arrangements for that meeting. So, regrettably, he will be unable to attend.

I do not know whether, in fact, there will be a Canadian delegation to the funeral, but I will find that out, and if there is an opportunity to adopt my honourable friend's suggestion, I will look into it.

• (1410)

Senator Haidasz: May I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to impress upon his government the need to send a Canadian delegation to the funeral of the late Right Honourable "Tom" Adams as Barbados is one of our sister Commonwealth countries?

Senator Roblin: I think it is a valuable suggestion. I have just heard, via the grapevine, that there may well be a delegation of that kind. If there is, I will see that my honourable friend's suggestion is considered.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—AGENDA

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has indicated that the Prime Minister will be attending an important meeting with the President of the United States in Quebec this coming weekend. In view of the preparations that have been made, I am sure that honourable senators are concerned with the agenda for that very important meeting. Can the government leader enlighten us on the subject matter of that agenda?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have not received a copy of the agenda for that meeting, and I have to confess that I do not expect to receive one at the present time. Undoubtedly, it will be made available in due course, but I do not have that information now.

TRADE POLICY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I should like to ask a supplementary question. In questions that have arisen concerning trade and the relationship of the United States dollar to the Canadian dollar and its effect on trade, requests have been made to the Leader of the Government in the Senate to bring the importance of this matter to the attention of the distinguished Prime Minister of our country. Can he enlighten us on what kind of reaction he got when he did that?

[Senator Haidasz.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am afraid I cannot reply to the last part of my honourable friend's question, but I can tell him that the Prime Minister is well aware of the critical importance of the international relationship between Canada and the United States, particularly with regard to trade. The problems we are facing, in the rising current of protectionist sentiment in that country, have already seriously impinged upon our export possibilities to the United States. I can assure my honourable friend that while I cannot describe to him the facial expression or, indeed, pass on the comment of the Prime Minister when faced with this problem, I can assure him that he takes it with the utmost seriousness.

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I have a further question. Earlier this month the Globe and Mail, which is well known to my friend, in its lead editorial made reference to the sad state of the Canadian government's reaction to the action of the United States courts in support of the grand jury in Florida on the question of extraterritoriality in relation to the Bank of Nova Scotia. In view of the fact that that distinguished paper, the Globe and Mail, took such a strong stand and suggested that Mr. Mulroney might have an opportunity in Quebec, I wonder if that lead editorial was brought to the attention of the distinguished Prime Minister.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend already knows the answer to that question because I gave it to him personally a few days ago—namely, that this extraterritoriality problem with respect to legal matters of the kind he mentioned between the United States and Canada was under review. I believe I also told him that not only was it under review but we also expected to see some concrete proposals come forward in order to place that matter in a more satisfactory light insofar as Canadians are concerned and, indeed, insofar as Americans are concerned. I can repeat that assurance today.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, although that answer may have been well received by many people, the question went even further. It was: What steps are being initiated for a legislative remission of the $1.8 million penalty that was slapped on a very distinguished Canadian institution? Many people wonder what the reaction would have been if the situation had been reversed and Canada had slapped a $1.8 million "hit"—if I may use that word—on, say, the Bank of America.

Senator Roblin: I believe my friend is asking me a question of law which I am not competent to answer. I would also point out that such questions of law are not dealt with in Question Period.

I can only say that one has to abide by the law as it happens to be at the particular moment in time, whether in Canada or in the United States.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the point I should like to raise with the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: The United States takes the view that it has the right to extend its jurisdiction into other countries. While there may be certain instances when that is legitimate, generally the Canadian position has been to oppose vigorously that ideology of the United States, even though there may be concrete proposals here and there to tidy up difficult situations. What is so offensive to Canadians is the continued persistence of the United States in asserting extraterritorial jurisdiction over not only Canadians but over nationals of other countries.

What I am really asking the Leader of the Opposition—

Senator Flynn: Are you asking it of yourself?

Senator MacEachen: I thank Senator Flynn for his coaching.

My question to the Leader of the Government is: Will the Prime Minister be suggesting to the President of the United States that there is more required than attention to particular cases, and that what is required is an abandonment by the United States of its concept of extraterritorial jurisdiction?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I shall start by saying, "What's in a name? A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." I do not mind if my friend misnames me because I have done the same thing from time to time. Perhaps I will call him the Leader of the Government some day if I do not watch out.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Soon you may not have to apologize.

Senator Flynn: Soon?

Senator Roblin: In the words of a famous Canadian, "The universe is unfolding as it should" in that respect.

Honourable senators, I want to deal with my friend's question because it is an important one. I know he knows something about these matters because, for more years than one, he was in the position of having to resist the claims of extraterritoriality on the part of the United States when applied to Canada. He also knows just as well as I do the difficulties in dealing with that problem.

Without wishing to be pejorative, I would point out that we have had some successes in computing that argument.

I want to tell my honourable friend that we will do our best to deal with those matters in as constructive a way as he did, because we do not agree with extraterritoriality in regard to our relationships with the United States any more than he did.

Although I admit this is a limited area, what we are trying to do is deal with one aspect of the problem. If we can solve that satisfactorily, I will be well pleased. I am sure the government will be open to other suggestions as to how we can deal with other aspects of the problem, because it is a matter we do not intend to ignore.

Senator Frith: What is the one aspect?

● (1420)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has dealt with a certain aspect of my question. I do not think there is a difference between us on the importance of this question and the fact that solutions can be found to particular segments of it.

While the United States is ready to explore a solution to particular problems between our two countries such as legal enforcement, it has not been willing to accept the principle that we are advocating—namely, that there ought to be an abandonment of its assertion of extraterritorial jurisdiction, except in very limited circumstances.

While I understand the difficulties, I think it is important that Canada continue to assert to the United States its disagreement with the overall concept accepted by that country. That is why I ask again whether the Prime Minister will make that point, a point that has been made in the past and one which must continue to be made. Otherwise, we will not achieve our objectives in the long term.

Senator Roblin: Of course, the old bromide is "Rome wasn't built in a day."

We have taken concrete steps in dealing with this problem. In fact, as I have just been reminded, no later than December 13 of last year the House of Commons passed Bill C-14, a bill to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in anti-trust proceedings. That bill was eventually passed by the Senate and was passed into law as the Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act.

Again, while that act does not provide a solution to all of the problems of extraterritoriality, it does represent a concrete measure taken by this government toward that end. I assure my honourable friend that as the opportunity presents itself, we will take other concrete steps in this respect.

I express my thanks to the Honourable Senator Flynn for having brought the matter of Bill C-14 to my attention.

Senator Flynn: It is something that the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate had forgotten.

Senator MacEachen: It is not something I had forgotten. It was a bill prepared by the former government and one which I debated in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: But you had forgotten. A short memory.

Senator Frith: He debated it in this chamber when you were away.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the bill to which the Leader of the Government has referred relates to the ability of Canada to frustrate, in Canada, actions taken by the United States government. It is a help, but it does nothing in the way of removing the constant assertion by the United States of extraterritorial jurisdiction in principle. The Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act is a way of protecting Canada. It is useful. But it does not solve the main problem.

Senator Flynn: It indicates to the U.S. authorities what we think.

Senator Roblin: We have been working at the problem for six months and we have two concrete measures on the table, one being the Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act and the other being a measure dealing with the question of extraterritoriality and judicial relations between the two countries—a measure which, I assure my honourable friend, is to come.

That is not a bad record for six months. After all, his party had 16 years in which to deal with the problem and he knows the difficulties involved. He is not minimizing the difficulties, but I think he should recognize that we are facing exactly the same problems as he was facing when in government.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I agree with the Leader of the Government. I would merely point out that the bill for which he is taking credit, and properly so, was a measure that was before his colleagues when they formed the government. All the work had been done and the bill was ready.

Senator Roblin: We had the satisfaction of passing it into law.

Senator Frith: That can be said in respect of a lot of our legislation.

INVESTMENT RESTRICTIONS

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has already mentioned his concern—a concern of many of us—in relation to the protectionist developments in the United States, a tendency which has been developing now for two or three years.

Will the Prime Minister take up with the President of the United States the fact that the present government of Canada has been most generous in stripping away the restrictions on foreign investments and stripping away the protections—nationalistic protections perhaps—afforded by the National Energy Program, and that that has all been done without any compensation as yet?

And will he ask the President of the United States to recognize that fact by encouraging the U.S. government to get rid of the prohibitions and restrictions on foreign investment in coastal and freshwater shipping, aviation, nuclear and hydro generating, communications, financial industries, real estate, fishing, some mineral leases, dredging and salvage operations and defence industries—all of which exist in the United States to a far greater extent than they exist in Canada?

And will he ask the President of the United States to put an end to the use of securities and anti-trust agencies and monitoring by government to frustrate company acquisitions in the U.S. such as those attempted by Canadian Pacific, Seagrams, and Brascan?

Are we, after having given away our own protection, going to try to insist upon some amelioration of the tariff and non-tariff barriers and restrictions on foreign investment which exist in the United States to a much greater extent than they ever existed in Canada?

[Senator Flynn.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend raises the whole question of economic relations with the United States, which is worthy of a debate in itself. I cannot agree that I should begin that debate by answering my honourable friend's question. But I must say a few words about it, because the devices which he claims we have given away reflect a different philosophy from mine. I believe that the action we have taken with respect to FIRA and the action we are studying with respect to the National Energy Policy are good for Canada regardless of our situation with the United States, and will help us in our economic development. Our primary motive for doing that is self-interest, not in an effort to curry favour with anyone else.

My honourable friend has listed off a formidable recitation of areas in which he wants freer trade, or areas where he wants non-tariff barriers reduced. Surely that is one of the great issues that this government is struggling with at the present time. There is a public paper on the issue, various options are being set out, we are soliciting public input, and I solicit my honourable friend's input, as to what people think should be the best course for this country to follow; and when those consultations are completed, our agenda will be firmed up with respect to our trading relationship with the United States.

My honourable friend has put his finger on the key issue in this whole development. People talk about free trade. What we should be talking about is how to preserve the trade advantages that we now have with the United States. I can assure my honourable friend that that will be a paramount thought in the mind of our Prime Minister when he meets with the President of the United States in Quebec City.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer. I agree with much of what he has said. He and I have worked together on the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group and we understand the difficulties of these negotiations. I would simply point out that while we have certainly some great advantages in dealing with our American friends, we have been willing to sit back and allow them to abuse us for such agencies as FIRA and programs such as the National Energy Program, without responding to the very serious list of restrictions—it was only a partial list that I read. I stopped because I ran out of breath—on what Canadians can do in the United States, and the obstacles that are put in their way of doing it. I would simply ask that the Prime Minister, when he is talking to the President of the United States, try to convey that sense to him, that never has there been any restriction on American activities in Canada which compares in the slightest with those placed on Canadian activities in the United States.

Senator Roblin: In the interests of balance, my honourable friend should agree with me that in two or three very important particulars the non-tariff barriers that have been promoted by various interests in the United States have not been accepted by the President of the United States. On the question of lumber, which again is on the table, and restrictions on which would have had a disastrous effect not only in western Canada but also in New Brunswick and other places, the Government of the United States and their administrative agencies did not accede to what some people considered to be a very strong case.

● (1430)

On the question of the export of steel pipe and other items of that kind to the United States, when we protested against what we thought was unfair conduct toward us, our protestations were considered. We have not won everything, but it seems to me that we ought not to lose sight of those instances where the Americans have been able to accede to our requests in this area. I also say to my honourable friend that if he is interested in trade between the two countries, the tariff barriers in Canada against American exports to this country and American tariffs against our exports to the United States are not the same. The American tariff structure is lower than ours at the present time. One has to take that into account when dealing with the Americans. So, while I am not here to advocate the interests of the United States—I am here to advocate the interests of Canada—I think we will get further in dealing with them if we try to put on the table the good things and the bad things, because when they have done some good things we ought to encourage them, for the simple reason that we will need their help in the future.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCREASE IN CANADIAN FORCES CONTINGENT IN WESTERN EUROPE—EFFECT ON ESTABLISHMENT

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I welcome, as I think we all should, the announcement made on Monday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence that our contingent of land forces in western Europe will be increased by 1200. This is a positive, if incomplete, step toward implementing the recommendation made a few years ago by your National Defence Committee. My question to the Leader of the Government is this: Does that gesture mean that the authorization of man-years from the Department of National Defence will be increased by 1200, or does it mean that our already meagre home forces will be depleted by 1200 in order to fill part of a gap in western Europe?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I share the satisfaction of my honourable friend with respect to this move, because it was clearly a part of the recommendations of the National Defence Committee with respect to manpower in the Canadian Armed Forces. Although this report was prepared some few years ago, it is, nevertheless, gratifying to see that we are now beginning to accept more of our responsibilities to NATO in this way. I would hope that the whole of these 1200 men will be found from the administrative tail that we have in this country, so that we can put the manpower we are already paying for to better use. However, I cannot tell my honourable friend categorically that that is the case, because the minister has announced that there is a cost of some $50 million this year and some $100 million next year on account of this move, which leads me to think that it must involve salaries for additional personnel. I shall find out for sure and will let my friend know.

Senator Lafond: While the leader is doing that, he might try to discover, since the Secretary of State for External Affairs seems to be developing a propensity for accepting invitations to commit Canadian troops to peacekeeping undertakings, whether he is committing troops that the Minister of National Defence does not have or whether a similar increase in the number of authorized man-years would apply in these instances if our offers were accepted.

Senator Roblin: I am afraid that my honourable friend has posed a hypothetical question. Although the matter has been discussed in the news media and elsewhere, I do not think the minister has made any commitment at the present time. If he should make a commitment then the question becomes relevant and it will be answered.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question to those asked by Senator Lafond? With respect to the additional $50 million that will be required to provide the additional land forces in Europe for 1985-86, is that amount already included in the Main Estimates for 1985-86 as tabled in the house on that memorable day, or will that $50 million be provided for in a supplementary estimate?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I thought you had time to study the estimates in detail.

Senator Roblin: That question is being investigated at the present time. I shall have an answer in due course.

Senator Flynn: You should know that. You know everything since you have passed the bill.

Senator MacEachen: It does not show.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CANADIAN ADVERTISING IN UNITED STATES MEDIA

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the government leader. As he knows, Bill C-58, passed in 1975, has been the salvation of the Canadian broadcasting industry. Indeed, CKND television in Winnipeg is an excellent case in point, a television station that simply would not exist without this legislation which eliminated the tax deduction for Canadian advertisers buying space or time in U.S. media. My question is whether or not this law, as some have suggested, will be discussed at the so-called Shamrock Summit.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The law my honourable friend refers to deals with advertising revenues with respect to transport or transmissions. It is perfectly true that this law has been a long-standing irritant as far as Americans are concerned. Every year that I and some of my colleagues have had occasion to talk with American congressmen, the subject has been raised. Certainly, it has not been forgotten. I would be surprised if our Prime Minister will raise the matter, but it is quite possible that the President might raise it. However, I am quite unable to tell my honourable friend which might be the case.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): The President won't raise it.

Senator Davey: I can tell my honourable friend that in 1982 alone this legislation diverted more than $30 million in Canadian advertising money away from American television to Canadian broadcasters who were thus able to create 5,000 jobs. My supplementary question is: Would the leader undertake to speak to the Prime Minister and persuade him to hang tough on this legislation which is so important to Canadian broadcasters?

Senator Roblin: I just hope that none of the friends I made in the United States who do not like our legislation read Debates of the Senate, because when they see those figures, confirmed by such an eminent authority, it will add ammunition to their claim, to be sure. I have no information as to whether or not this item is on the agenda, so I am unable to respond further to my friend.

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—NEWSPAPER ARTICLE

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, my next question is not a supplementary one but it has to do with the so-called Shamrock Summit. I quote from an eminent authority who had an article in yesterday's Toronto Star. The authority is none other than Dalton Camp.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Wow!

Senator Davey: Mr. Camp said:

Of the two principals, one is a professional entertainer and the other has spent a life time moonlighting as one.

Unhappily, Mr. Camp did not explain which is which and I wonder if the leader could enlighten us.

Senator Roblin: God bless Dalton Camp! He is an old friend of mine and one of the most humorous men I know. Every time I read his column I get as much pleasure out of it as I know my honourable friend does.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Isn't there a New Brunswick vacancy?

END OF DECADE WOMEN'S CONFERENCE

COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION AND AGENDA

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Two weeks ago the American government announced the composition of their delegation to the End of Decade Women's Conference in Nairobi in July. This allows interested American citizens to express their views on the content of that conference. I wonder if the honourable senator would tell us who will compose the Canadian delegation and what arrangements have been made for input on behalf of Canadian citizens and organizations in preparation for that conference.

[Senator Roblin.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I shall have to take the question as notice.

Senator Marsden: I suggest to the leader that it would be useful if, in answering that question, he could give us some indication of what consultation will take place and when and where it will occur. The agenda and background papers are all published, and I think that many Canadians are anxious to ensure that our delegation represents their views.

Senator Roblin: The Secretary of State takes a very deep interest in this question, and he will provide every assistance to my honourable friend in giving her information.

UNITED NATIONS

RATIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION AGAINST TAKING OF HOSTAGES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can the Leader of the Government tell us why to this date the Canadian government has not ratified the international convention against the taking of hostages, which was established by the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1979?

● (1440)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think my friend is asking the wrong man. My honourable friend opposite is, perhaps, in a much better position to reply to that question than I am.

DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS

SECURITY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I wish to ask him whether he can report to this chamber the reasons for the breach of security that occurred at the Turkish Embassy yesterday, in view of Canada's obligation to protect diplomatic missions in Ottawa, according to its commitments to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations.

Senator Roblin: We take that responsibility very seriously. For some time, I think, Canadians were under the impression that this was a safe place to live, and that measures that might be required in other parts of the world were not necessary here. If that is no longer the case, then I am sure we will have to take measures.

I can tell my honourable friend, however, that the matter is now under investigation.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—PRESS RELEASE

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate that flows from the discussions we have had this afternoon with respect to that very important, upcoming meeting between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada. I am wondering if we may look forward to the publication of a press release relating to the discussions, the conclusions and the decisions arrived at at that conference, prior to the arrival of the President of the United States in Canada.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That is a question that should be addressed to the President of the United States, since it was not the Prime Minister of Canada nor the Canadian press officials who made the premature release to which my friend is obviously alluding.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

COMMITTEE REQUESTED TO STUDY AUDIO RECORDING AND BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF SENATE COMMITTEES

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 12, 1985, moved:

That the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders be requested to consider and report upon the question of the audio recording and broadcasting of the proceedings of Senate committees.

Hon. Senators: Explain.

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): Honourable senators, this motion refers to a problem that arose on February 18 at a meeting of the Standing Committee on National Finance when we were considering Bill C-11.

Senator Corbin raised a point of order when he noticed that a member of the public was taping the committee's proceedings on a cassette recorder. As I was chairing the meeting, Senator Corbin asked me for a ruling on the acceptability of recording the proceedings of this committee by persons not on the Senate staff.

The person concerned then identified himself as representing a newspaper, stopped his recording apparatus and apologized.

It was agreed that the chairman would not give a ruling until he would be able to respond to the point of order raised by Senator Corbin.

I believe this point of order raises two questions: Is it necessary to obtain permission for recording the public proceedings of Senate committees? If so, does the committee have the authority to give that permission?

It seems that at the present time, there is no unanimity on the subject. The Senate has a specific instrument for examining such problems and for changing the Rules, if necessary, and I am referring to the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders which, and I quote:

... is authorized to propose to the Senate, from time to time and on its own initiative, amendments to the Rules of the Senate.

I believe that we have here an authority that is qualified to examine the issue of audio recording and broadcasting of the proceedings of Senate committees, and I am seeking the support of honourable senators for this motion in order to clarify this point and to provide an answer to the point of order raised in committee.

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to comment briefly on the motion, since I raised the point of order on the committee that was considering Bill C-11 a few weeks ago.

If honourable senators decide to refer the matter for study and consideration to the relevant committee, I think it might be a good opportunity to consider as well the possibility of allowing live radio or television broadcasting of the proceedings of this chamber. I think all these questions are related. If the committee should recommend that the Senate allow the proceedings of a committee to be recorded, I think this chamber would be in a rather difficult position with respect to the radio or television broadcasting of its own proceedings.

I do not intend to move an amendment to the motion of Senator Leblanc but, unless I am mistaken, I believe the House of Lords in England—and God knows I do not want to draw a parallel between this institution and the House of Lords, they are altogether different and so are their origins—is or has recently been experimenting with direct broadcasting of its debates.

Being a component of the Canadian Parliament, we ought to consider the possibility of adopting a permanent procedure for this House and its committees as well.

As I said before, I am democratically minded. I do not see that we have anything to hide. God knows we get wide coverage when we are going through periods of crises, or so-called crises. Once they are over, we are totally ignored. A glance at the press gallery today will convince anybody. Whenever a minor controversy arises, we are swamped by reporters, we trip over cameramen and their blinding spotlights. After everything has died down, we are completely forgotten and our future is left in the hands of others. What is lacking in this institution, it seems to me, is a more direct link with the public, for it has a very fuzzy perception of the role, function and traditional heritage of the Senate.

Honourable senators, if the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders is to consider whether or not committee proceedings ought to be televised, I suggest that at the same time, without the need for me to move a formal motion, it should consider and make recommendations on the advisability of broadcasting and televising the debates of this house.

Those are the comments I wanted to make.

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words on this subject. I note that this motion refers to audio-recording alone. I think the motion should include television broadcasting as well. We have had experience with television broadcasting when the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee was considering the marijuana bill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Was that when the committee was considering the LeDain Commission report?

Senator Godfrey: When that committee was considering the marijuana bill, we received permission from the Senate to broadcast the proceedings on television. I must say that that was not a very satisfactory experiment. The bright lights blinded everyone, television cameramen were running around, and those running the broadcasting took over for a couple of days, and I think that that put many senators off. However, I believe that things have improved technically since then so that it can be better handled today.

I really think we should look at both radio and television broadcasting. I also think that the proceedings of the Senate itself should be broadcast on radio and television.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, it is not customary for me to rise in the Senate; I have developed the habit of being quiet, but on this issue I think I should express an opinion following the comments made by my colleagues, Senators Leblanc (Saurel), Corbin and Godfrey. I recall vividly that the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, then under the chairmanship of Senator Carl Goldenberg, allowed television cameras to cover the committee's deliberations at one time. I did not totally agree with Senator Godfrey when he said that that disrupted the proceedings of the committee; I think it improved the quality of the debates.

I am in favour of broadcasting our committee proceedings on television and radio. I do not think there is anything wrong with that. I think the public is entitled to know what is going on in Senate committees. That is where the Senate does its most important work. Members of the media rarely attend our committee meetings; they are only in attendance when something such as happened a couple of weeks ago occurs. I think enough has been said on what occurred a couple of weeks ago, and if we keep silent on it, the media will also keep silent on it.

When matters of national significance are discussed at Senate committee meetings, I believe that television cameras and radio broadcasting equipment should be allowed into the meeting rooms so that the proceedings could be televised and broadcast on radio. My position on broadcasting the proceedings of the Senate itself is that it should not be allowed unless the Queen or the Governor General is present in the chamber reading the Speech from the Throne.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I believe that Senator Robichaud, for whom I have a great deal of respect, as he well knows, inadvertently made an error when he referred to Senator Carl Goldenberg as having been the Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Corbin: Was the honourable senator referring to another committee?

Senator Robichaud: Yes.

Senator Corbin: I apologize; I thought you were referring to the committee on the Constitution, which was televised and broadcast by radio.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

COMMITTEES—REPRESENTATIONS BY PROVINCES—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, March 19, 1985, I will move:

That whenever a bill or the subject-matter of a bill is being considered by a committee of the Senate in which a province or provinces have a special interest, then as a general policy, the government of such province or provinces where practicable, shall be asked by the committee as to whether or not they wish to make written and/or verbal representations to the committee, and any province that replies in the affirmative shall be given a reasonable opportunity to do so.

This motion is no doubt very familiar to honourable senators. I think it was exactly two years and nine months ago that I originally gave notice of such a motion. I have been considerably emboldened by the fact that two other motions of mine were recently passed after two years and ten months. I hope that, with another month to go, I shall get this motion passed within the same time.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g) moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 19, 1985, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

REFORM OF THE SENATE

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he has any information on the constitutional amendment which Mr. Crosbie, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, is reported to have stated would be available for consideration possibly by the end of the month.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can give some more information by telling honourable senators, as they probably already know, that my colleague, the Minister of Justice, is the member of the cabinet who is conducting discussions at the present time with his provincial colleagues on this question of changes in the structure of the Senate. He has asked me to report to the chamber on a couple of developments that I think will be of interest to us.

First of all, on the question of substance, I can say that the principal item that is being reviewed at the present time is the question of time allocation in the Senate. As to the exact form the time allocation will take and to what bills it ought to apply, these are matters that are still being reviewed by the committee looking into this. I am not at the moment able to say what agreement has been reached on those points.

I can also give honourable senators some information with regard to the question of timing. While it is always dangerous to be too positive when one is dealing with matters of federal-provincial relations, particularly with respect to the Constitution, the minister is of the opinion—and I share his opinion—that there seems to be general agreement on the principle of time allocation with respect to the Senate. Based on that assumption and the progress that has been made to date, it seems probable that I will be able to make a further report, I hope next week, but I must place a caveat on that because I may be unable to deliver. So, I hope that I will be able to provide more information to the Senate as to the details in respect of this matter next week.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for that information. I have looked at the statement the Leader of the Government made on the subject a day or two ago in which he stated that there will be consultations on the timetable and on how this matter will be dealt with by Parliament. Am I correct in saying that there will be no consultation on the substance of the resolution with members of the Senate before the resolution is put down, and that the sole consultation will be with respect to how it is dealt with in Parliament?

Senator Roblin: All I can say is that until the negotiations and discussions are completed and we know the substance of the matter, I have to reserve my position with respect to the question my honourable friend has asked.

Senator MacEachen: While the leader has this question under reservation, would he reflect upon what I understand to be the commitment made by the Government House Leader that if a consensus is formulated by the provinces and the Government of Canada, at that point there will be consultation on the resolution with the leader of the New Democratic Party and the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons? I have no objection to that, but could the Senate be upgraded to the point where it will be consulted in the same fashion as the leader of the New Democratic Party?

Senator Roblin: I shall bear in mind that the honourable senator has disclaimed any right of the members of the House of Commons to tell him what to do or to tell the party what to do and that he reserves the independence of his position and that of the Senate.

Hon. Hazen Argue: That is the purpose of the Senate.

Senator Roblin: I quite understand his reluctance to allow discussions to take place in the House of Commons as if the Senate were not a party to this important constitutional matter. I can assure my honourable friend that the same consideration will be extended to the leadership in the Senate as is given to the leadership in the House of Commons.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his comments. This matter involves two parts, the timing and the substance. In talking about the substance of the negotiations the leader said that the principal subject is the matter of time allocation. Is it safe to assume that at this stage that is the only subject, that methods of appointment and other items are not the subject of negotiations at this time?

Senator Roblin: As far as I can determine at present, the subject matter of the resolution that Parliament will ultimately be expected to consider in very short order will be limited to the question of time allocation. However, I would not like anyone in the Senate to assume that other aspects of Senate reform will not come before us for consideration as well. I think it is quite probable they will. I am merely saying that at the present time, within the immediate purview, the one item that I have spoken about is the one that we shall be discussing.

I do not want anyone to inscribe these words in steel. I am always conscious of the fact that when negotiations are taking place and when you are giving a report on progress, something might change before they are finished, and I would ask honourable senators to bear that in mind. As things stand at the moment, the question of time allocation will be the only subject of the constitutional proposal.

Again, I repeat to members of the Senate that I am reasonably certain that at some time—I am not sure when—in the future we may expect other aspects of Senate reform to be before us.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 19, 1985 at 2 p.m.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to draw to the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate a report in the Ottawa Citizen of today which is headed "Governor General left out of summit". That article states, in part:

Government House sources confirmed Monday that [Her Excellency] Jeanne Sauv  was not invited to Quebec City to meet President Ronald Reagan at the "Shamrock Summit," nor invited to the gala concert held Sunday night.

The article goes on to state:

Insiders say the reaction at Rideau Hall is one of "stunned disappointment."

In light of the fact that in the absence of Her Majesty the Queen Her Excellency is the head of state of Canada, and that the President of the United States is the head of state of that country, as well as the head of government, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate explain why in this case the status of Her Excellency was not recognized so that she could participate in those important bilateral exchanges between the two countries?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am afraid that I have no information on this topic. I will have to take the question as notice.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Is he aware of the excuse reported in the press yesterday on this very matter, that the government was treating this not as a "state visit", but only as a "working visit"? That was the government's lame excuse for the Governor General not being present.

Senator Roblin: I think the degree of lameness resides in the eye of the beholder.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Le Moynes: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Considering that Madame Sauv  is Canada's First Lady, of French extraction, our highest ranking dignitary, and a woman, would it not be appropriate for the government to offer apologies?

[English]

Senator Roblin: I think that I inadvertently made a reference a moment ago that was the furthest from my mind. I apologize humbly if my honourable friend took that remark as a personal reference, because I had no intention it should be so.

Senator van Roggen: No, no.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate that.

With reference to Senator Le Moynes's question, I will take it as notice.

[Translation]

Senator Le Moynes: Honourable senators, would it not be appropriate as well—I am asking this of the Leader of the Government in the Senate—that apologies be extended to Her Majesty after the insult suffered by the Governor General yesterday?

[English]

Senator Roblin: I am afraid I cannot accept the premise to the question, but I shall endeavour to find out the answer to the interrogative part.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, there was another insult. The most highly-placed westerner in this land happens to be Her Excellency the Governor General, Madam Sauv . So, the west itself should receive apologies.

Senator Balfour: What nonsense!

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, while the Leader of the Government is making inquiries on this subject, would he also have the government delineate what are the appropriate uses of the Great Seal and by whom it should be used?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice, too.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Would he please find out whether it is a fact, as reported in the press and on television, that the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the other place, Mr. Broadbent, was invited to the gala but Mrs. Sauvé was not?

Senator Roblin: I am not sure that I can accept that question because I am not here to deal with material that appears in newspapers. If my honourable friend wants to rephrase his question, I will be glad to give it consideration.

Senator Gigantès: Thank you for giving me this opportunity. Would the Leader of the Government find out whether Mr. Broadbent, the Leader of the NDP in the other place, was invited to the gala performance whereas Mrs. Sauvé was not?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I will make an inquiry about that.

AIR CANADA

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—REPLACEMENT OF MEMBERS

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am curious to know why all 13 members of the board of directors of Air Canada were fired last week.

Senator Murray: Because they should not have been appointed in the first place!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think that I can do little better than repeat the observation made by my colleague. I should really tell my honourable friend that I will endeavour to find out why they were appointed in the first place.

Senator Davey: Would the leader agree that all of the new appointments are people associated with the Progressive Conservative Party?

Senator Roblin: I think that that is a fair statement of the situation as I see it. At the same time I observe that all or most of the people they replaced were closely associated with the Liberal Party. But since today most Canadians are associated with the Conservative Party, about twice as many as are associated with the Liberal Party—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): With growing shame!

Senator Roblin: —I find the appointments to be representative.

Senator Davey: The appointment of these 13 Tories makes a mockery of the Prime Minister's statement about a new day when it comes to political appointments. It is the same old game—13 Tories. Would the leader agree with that?

Senator Roblin: If it is the same old game, nobody is better qualified than my honourable friend to recognize it. I would say to him that there have been a number of distinguished appointments made involving persons who have nothing to do with the Conservative Party; one is the gentleman who now represents Canada at the United Nations. There are others that can be referred to as well.

Senator Frith: You have to recycle that.

Senator Davey: The curious thing about these 13 Tories appointed to the board of directors of Air Canada is that none of them has anything to do with transportation.

Senator Roblin: Of course, if my honourable friend took the trouble to examine the dossiers of these ladies and gentlemen, he would find that that statement is not correct.

• (1410)

Senator Frith: They also cover transportation like Marcel Lambert and other independents.

Senator Roblin: Just like Lloyd Francis.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government is: Based on his experience before he came to this chamber and before he became the Leader of the Government in this chamber, would he agree that continuity is one of the basic factors in boards of directors?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am, by no means, going to express my opinion on this matter. If my honourable friend wishes to ask a question about government policy or seek information on any appropriate subject, I will be glad to answer. I do not give my opinions because, after all, I think every member of this chamber is here through one form of patronage or another, and it ill behooves us to take some of the stands we are taking in this matter.

Senator Sinclair: My question has nothing to do with patronage; my question has to do with the proper conduct of business organizations.

Is it not good business practice to have some continuity in boards of directors?

Senator Roblin: I believe the two senior executives of Air Canada are still on the board, and if that does not constitute an adequate degree of continuity, I would be surprised.

Senator Sinclair: Would the Leader of the Government then recognize that independent directors must work closely with the executive, and that being so, would he tell this chamber whether those executives were consulted or whether their views were given consideration before the appointments were made?

Senator Roblin: I really do not accept my honourable friend's premise because he and I know perfectly well that it is not always the case that directors operate in the manner he has stated.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to Senator Davey's question about the change in attitude.

Are we to take it now that, inasmuch as all 13 appointments were high-profile Tory supporters, that is now the policy of the government, which is substantially different from that advocated, particularly last July?

Senator Roblin: The government will continue to show good judgment in making a judicious mix of appointments from those who are known supporters of its policies and those who are not.

Senator Olson: The Leader of the Government used the phrase, "judicious mix." Is 13 out of 13 a good example of judicious mix?

Senator Roblin: In this particular case, I think it is admirable.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there is a serious aspect to this matter, although there may also be some element of humour.

Can we now assume that the Tory party has completely abandoned its sanctimonious piety of last fall respecting patronage and that it will continue to do what it has done in the last few days?

Senator Roblin: We will have a good look around to see what competent people we can find irrespective of political views.

My friend should, by no means, assume that we have changed our policy.

Senator Olson: Can we take it, then, that what has been happening in the last few days reflects the policy of the present government and that the words of last July were just so much scam and fluff?

Senator Roblin: No, they are not. They are just as valid and just as worthy of confidence as the statements made by the leader of my honourable friend's party during the same period.

Senator Frith: As reliable as the sacred trust.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: To what classification, or to what quality of appointment does the Leader of the Government assign his own appointment, that of Senator Kelly, Senator Marshall, and the former Governor General, Mr. Ed Schreyer, though he was a member of the NDP?

Senator Roblin: If I knew the thrust of the question, I might be able to answer it. Would my honourable friend like to give it to me again?

Senator Olson: Who made the appointments?

Senator Gigantès: Is the Leader of the Government saying that when his government does things well and appoints members of other parties to certain posts, it is imitating the Liberal Party, but that when it appoints to the Air Canada board of directors 13 Tories—13 individuals whose qualifications may otherwise be admirable—it is simply using phrases such as "sacred trust" to camouflage the real issue?

Senator Roblin: I do not think anyone is trying to camouflage anything.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, my question, as well, is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. May I preface it by saying that the individual from the province of New Brunswick named to the Air Canada board of directors is a first rate chap and an excellent businessman. He is an individual I know well myself and for whom I have much respect. But he is also a bagman—

Some Hon. Senators: Shame! Shame!

Senator Doody: Horrors! People who finance elections.

Senator McElman: I am speaking of Jim Ross.

In the light of the gratuitous insult offered by the Prime Minister to so-called bagmen just before Christmas—our Christmas present—particularly "bagmen of the Senate," I now ask whether it is government policy to again elevate "bagmen" to a position of respect in the community.

Senator Doody: Bagpersons!

Senator Roblin: When I look around this chamber and see so many "bagmen" sitting here, I am inclined to agree with my honourable friend.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I understand that there will be 22 ministers from this government attending the Economic Summit at the end of the week. Will you be one of those?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think the number is 20. I have been invited to attend, but I doubt that I will be present.

Senator Marsden: A supplementary, if I may. I wonder, then, whether you can tell us the means by which we in this chamber will learn about what goes on at the summit and from whom we can get information about the debates which will be held at that summit.

Senator Roblin: I think what my honourable friend is asking me is, what kind of a conference is this? I can tell her that this is a conference which is not organized by the government in any direct sense. While it is true that the government suggested that the conference be held and made the preliminary arrangements for it, it is a committee of citizens who decided who would be invited to attend the conference and who would be invited to present papers.

Those ministers of the government whose portfolios bear on the particular subject under discussion are expected to be in attendance, though they may or may not take part in the proceedings. The proceedings will consist of the presentation of a number of papers and ensuing discussions, all of which will be fully publicized.

Senator Marsden: My question relates to how we in this chamber will get access to the debates that take place. I have read the papers and have reviewed the agenda. As well, I know a number of those who will be in attendance. I am interested at this point in what reports you will be able to provide for us in this chamber.

Senator Roblin: I shall be glad to table any material that is available for the information of honourable senators.

REFORM OF THE SENATE

APPOINTMENTS REVIEW COMMITTEE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I am wondering whether there is included in his government's proposals for Senate reform a review of his government's appointments, by the appropriate committee of the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Before I answer the question, I should like to thank my honourable friend for the suggestion he made last week about the propriety of asking Senator Cools to represent the Senate at the funeral of the late Prime Minister of Barbados. I am glad to say that we have been able to act on that, and I want to express my appreciation for the suggestion.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: With respect to the question concerning a review of appointments by a Senate committee, I can say that this is a subject that is being studied by a committee of the House of Commons. Once that committee tables its reports, we may be able to have further information on the subject.

THE PRIME MINISTER

CRITICISM OF APPOINTMENTS—REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

● (1420)

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In view of the way that the Prime Minister spoke of so-called patronage appointments prior to the election, and in view of the way he spoke of former Prime Minister Turner and the way he treated, at least in words, those who were appointed by the former Prime Minister to various posts, will the Leader of the Government ask the Prime Minister to have the decency to apologize to those people?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not believe the Prime Minister has said anything that could be construed as a personal reflection. I believe his observations were of a general character, and I must say with respect to some of them that his observations are widely shared by the public.

Hon. Jean Le Moine: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government accept that the Prime Minister's words should be understood in a Pickwickian sense?

Senator Roblin: That is the nicest question I have heard today. I think I will answer by saying "Yes".

[Senator Marsden.]

AIR CANADA

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—REPLACEMENT OF MEMBERS

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I apologize to the Leader of the Government for returning to the subject of Air Canada appointments, but I am wondering why the government did not follow the precedent set by Prime Minister Trudeau and Prime Minister Clark of allowing the terms to expire, rather than conducting some sort of purge. When Mr. Clark and Mr. Trudeau were in office, the terms were allowed to expire. I am wondering why that did not happen in this case.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not able to give a considered reply to that question, because it is a matter that does not fall within my purview. But I believe it is generally recognized that the change of administration that took place on September 4 was a most unusual event in Canadian history, in that the Progressive Conservative Party, for the first time in living memory, apart from Mr. Diefenbaker's noble example, had a majority, and the recent changes, following an election of that kind, would seem to me to be quite reasonable.

Senator Davey: Prime Minister Trudeau had a majority, but he did not purge those who had been appointed during the tenure of the Clark administration.

Senator Roblin: They were very few on the ground, I'm afraid. As a matter of fact, there were some complaints in certain circles that they were a little slow on that.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL CONFERENCE—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, since, in answer to a question asked by Senator Marsden, the Leader of the Government said he would supply us with papers on what happened at the economic summit, can he assure this chamber that such papers will contain at least some information, unlike the paper on trade published following the so-called Shamrock Summit?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if that is my friend's opinion of the paper on trade following the Shamrock Summit, then I do not think I should spend my time worrying about his grasp of the essentials. I can tell him that I do not know what is going to be in the papers to be dealt with at the economic summit. I have not seen them and I will have to wait until they are delivered. But when they are delivered, I will be glad to send them to my honourable friend. I think he will find them worthy of his consideration.

Senator Gigantès: The view that the paper on trade contains no substance whatsoever is widely held in the country, at least among editorial writers. Would the Leader of the Government advise his colleagues in the cabinet that they should give some flesh to this paper, so that people of miserable intellect, who are not members of the Tory hierarchy, but who are still citizens of this country, will understand what it is that the government and President Reagan are saying?

Senator Roblin: Well, I certainly would not say to my honourable friend that he is a man of inconsiderable intellect. I will say he is a man of considerable intellect. I would not like to have any misunderstanding on that point, because I do not strive to be rude to colleagues in the chamber, although from time to time I might slip from that lofty purpose.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): By propensity.

Senator Roblin: Sometimes I find myself a little encouraged to fall into that way of speaking, but I really do not intend to be rude. I do not want my honourable friend to think that I am rude to him. But I can say that the statement made by the two leaders in Quebec is one of the most hopeful statements made on Canada-U.S. trade in my lifetime. I do not recall when a President of the United States has previously undertaken to do the best he can, under the regulation of their Constitution, to deal with the question of trade impediments and barriers between this country and the United States. I do not know when a more positive and hopeful statement has been made, and to say that it has no substance seems to me to indicate a misunderstanding of the situation.

● (1420)

Senator van Roggen: May I welcome the Leader of the Government as a convert, as he now appears to be, to free trade.

Senator Roblin: I have been following my honourable friend with the greatest of interest for many years.

THE SENATE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEES TO INVITE PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIONS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hicks:

That whenever a bill or the subject-matter of a bill is being considered by a committee of the Senate—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you going to accept this?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): No.

Senator Godfrey:

—in which a province or provinces have a special interest, then as a general policy, the government of such province or provinces where practicable, shall be asked by the committee as to whether or not they wish to make written and/or verbal representations to the committee, and any province that replies in the affirmative shall be given a reasonable opportunity to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Neiman:

That whenever a bill or the subject-matter of a bill—

An Hon. Senator: It was seconded by Senator Hicks.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry.

That whenever a bill or the subject-matter of a bill—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Carried.

Senator Doody: No. Explain.

Senator Godfrey: You will go to any length to avoid hearing a speech from me.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am afraid that in the general merriment I have lost my place in the words and music. Just what is it that the Honourable Senator Godfrey thinks we have done?

Senator Godfrey: Pardon me?

Senator Roblin: What have we done?

Senator Godfrey: You have approved my motion. It is passed.

Senator Doody: No, no.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): The motion is carried.

Senator Roblin: Could I ask my honourable friend to explain?

Senator MacEachen: The motion is carried.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the motion is carried. However, with leave of the house, if honourable senators wish Senator Godfrey to speak on it—

An Hon. Senator: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: The motion is carried.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, on a point of clarification, if nothing else, when His Honour the Speaker stood to read the motion I very clearly heard some honourable senators say, "Explain" from this side.

An Hon. Senator: That was "Dispense".

Senator Doody: I cannot say what other honourable senators heard. I am telling honourable senators what I heard and I know what I said. I said, "Explain" on several occasions. Obviously, nobody paid any attention to me. Now the motion has been carried. If that is the way it is going to be done, then that is the way it is going to be done. I just want to express my disappointment with the proceedings.

● (1430)

Senator Godfrey: You are expressing disappointment that you will not be hearing from me?

Senator Doody: If that is the sort of flippant arrogance that is to dominate this chamber, then, from now on, that is the way it will be. However, I can honestly say that I asked for an explanation; none was forthcoming and then the motion was carried. I do not see much point in the small membership of the government side of this house coming to these sittings if that sort of bullying is to take place. You can bring 75 people in here any day of the week and pass anything you want, anytime you want to do it. Perhaps there is some merit in all of these cries we hear from outside for Senate reform.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Why didn't you ask for a division?

Senator Doody: I asked for an explanation, which is not unusual in this chamber and which has been granted to many senators on many occasions, on various matters. I have no idea what the honourable gentleman said when he stood up, and I would like to know. If you do not wish to give me that privilege, or present that courtesy to the government, then that is fine, but the word will go out from here that this is the way this place is being operated.

Senator Godfrey: I am quite willing to give an explanation. I was so delighted to hear that everybody was in favour without debate. I thought that the opportunity had been given for anyone who wished to speak to do so, and that nobody had taken advantage of it because they were in favour of the motion. If there is any way that we can reverse the proceedings and start over again, then I will be very happy.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I ask for leave of this chamber to hear the explanation of Senator Godfrey on this motion. If honourable senators will agree, we will rescind the vote and ask Senator Godfrey for his explanation.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, it may be that everyone here is very much in favour, but I would like to know what it is we have just approved. Surely that is not unreasonable.

The Hon. the Speaker: Are honourable senators agreed that we have Senator Godfrey explain his motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, if I may make a comment, merely to get us in order, I do not think it is in order for His Honour the Speaker to ask for leave. If some honourable senator would move that leave be granted, then that is the way to proceed.

Senator Godfrey: I ask that leave be granted.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Godfrey: I was somewhat surprised to hear from Senator Doody that he did not know anything about this motion—

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I would like to know exactly what is happening here. The decision has been taken. Was unanimous consent given to allow the honourable senator to explain the object of his motion, or was unanimous consent given to ignore the decision? Can someone explain to me where we now stand?

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Corbin, it was understood by the Chair that there was unanimous approval of the motion of Senator Godfrey. However, the Chair did not appreciate that some members had asked Senator Godfrey to explain his motion. That decision has now been reversed, and a motion has been approved that Senator Godfrey explain his motion before it is carried.

Senator Corbin: On the same point of order, I definitely heard you, Mr. Speaker, declare the motion carried. How can you now "uncarry" a motion that was previously carried?

Senator Frith: It can be done by unanimous consent.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was pointed out to me that I had not heard that some members had asked for an explanation of that motion by its proposer. Therefore, we are now proposing to rescind that motion and have Senator Godfrey explain his motion before putting it to a vote.

Senator Corbin: I should point out to honourable senators that it is not necessary for an honourable senator to speak to his motion for it to be constitutionally carried. All he has to do is move it. If no one rises, that is the end of that.

However, if there are honourable senators who wish to debate the matter and, following that debate, have the question put again, that is fine with me. I am neither pro nor con this motion.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, if we must give unanimous consent, I personally will oppose this unanimous consent unless Senator Doody does us the courtesy of retracting the implied threats in his statement.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I had hoped not to take part in this short discussion, but perhaps as leader of the house I am bound to do something about it. I would have to say that, as I sat here watching events unfold, Senator Godfrey rose and did not rise, Senator Doody rose and did not rise; they were up and down together because they were waiting for an explanation and Senator Doody wanted to have some part in this debate. While that was going on, Mr. Speaker, when you put the motion, if you asked for yeas and nays I confess I did not hear it. Had I heard it, I would have known the state of play. However, it seems to me that, regardless of all that, there is a general disposition on the part of members of this house to let Senator Godfrey explain his motion, and then we will have a chance to say what we think about it. That is the general feeling.

I think it would be a mistake to ask Senator Doody to withdraw something he obviously feels is not offensive and that he should not withdraw; it would be a mistake to make that a condition of any continuance of the debate here; it would not suit the temper of this house, and I hope the honourable senator will not insist on it.

Senator Godfrey: Unanimous consent has already been given to reconsider the motion.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I think that threatening—

Senator Molgat: Senator Gigantès, I think unanimous consent was given before, and then Senator Godfrey got up to speak on the motion. It is Senator Godfrey's motion.

Senator Godfrey: I must say I was astounded. That is the only way to describe it.

Senator Roblin: Of course.

Senator Godfrey: I was astounded as well as delighted when the motion was originally put and everybody seemed to be for it, without debate. I must say, I much prefer what we are doing now, because it is not so much a question of getting this motion passed for the record, as it is that I had hoped that the members of this house would display to the public at large by debating this motion that they really are in favour of it. I think it would be most unfortunate if, through some slip-up in procedure, it passed technically over the objections of some senators, so I am delighted that we have reopened the matter. I must say I was a little surprised at Senator Doody's anxiety to hear me speak again on this subject.

Senator Doody: You know I have always been a friend of yours.

Senator Godfrey: I would like to point out that this all started by my writing a letter to Senator Perrault, then the Leader of the Government in the Senate, on February 23, 1982, over three years ago. I think I might read the first two paragraphs of that letter. Don't start looking bored, Senator Doody. The letter says:

In the speech that Senator Stanbury gave in the Senate last week on Senate Reform, he pointed out that there were areas in which the Senate could increase its effectiveness without any constitutional or legislative change. He made the same point in a speech he delivered in the Senate on October 25, 1978.

That is seven years ago.

I have, since I was appointed to the Senate, become a firm believer that the main justification for the Senate in its present form is the work of the Senate Standing and Special Committees. I also believe that the work of the Committees could be improved if they were more co-ordinated and if, in certain areas, they pursued common objectives. With that in mind, I have proposed in the past that meetings of Committee Chairmen should be held from time to time so that these matters could be discussed and, where practicable and desirable, policies established. The only co-ordination at the present time appears to be the allocation of time for meetings of Committees which is supervised by Senator Lafond. This in my opinion is not enough.

I go on in this letter to bring up the question of having discussion on the pre-study of bills. I must say that we have come a long way in the last three years on that subject. I remember we used to complain about Christmas closures. Last year we got around that partly by pre-studying bills. I think that generally speaking, while it is not a unanimous decision, more and more people are in favour of the pre-study of bills.

I also said in the letter that the Senate should act as a watchdog with respect to human rights. Later, I became more specific and proposed a motion—this was shortly after the Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into effect in April of 1982—which, as we all know, was approved by the Senate finally two or three weeks ago.

● (1440)

I also mentioned in the letter the question of enabling clauses of bills, and just a few weeks ago that motion was finally approved.

I also mentioned in the letter the reducing of quorums in Senate committees, and that has been done.

I also mentioned in the letter the question of investigative committees. I might just read one paragraph, in which I stated:

Finally, the whole area of the investigative work of our Committees should be discussed from time to time with a view to seeing whether there is some subject of importance which should be studied by a Standing or Special Committee.

As we know, for investigative committees, we rely upon the initiative of individual senators, or certain committees of the Senate, such as the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and the Senate Committee on National Finance which have instituted that type of study.

I should now like to read the paragraph of the letter which is relevant to today's motion, where I stated:

One area in which the Senate has been criticized is whether or not it is properly performing its function to represent the regions. I can recall long discussions on this subject in the Senate Committee on the Constitution, chaired by Senator Stanbury, in 1978.

That was seven years ago. The paragraph goes on to state:

One of the conclusions we reached informally was that the Senate Committees should all adopt a policy that whenever a bill or a subject was being considered that affected Provinces, the Provincial Governments always be asked if they wished to make representations to the Committee. This again is an area which should be discussed by Committee Chairmen and a policy adopted.

The fact was that the committee chairmen met on March 3, shortly after I wrote this letter, but they did not get around to dealing with any of the subjects mentioned in the letter.

Finally, on June 22 of that year, I gave notice that I would move a motion that was in the exact terms of the Notice of Motion I gave last Thursday. I was trying to get some action going because no one seemed very interested and kept postponing the calling of another meeting of committee chairmen. Finally, that meeting took place on November 4, 1982—which was eight months after the original meeting took place—at which I asked that this matter be discussed. We did have a discussion on the matters mentioned in the letter.

I must say that at that time there seemed to be a general consensus in favour of the resolution—that is, the one I had given notice of in June. For that reason I did not want to press ahead and ask for formal passage of the resolution until we tried it out, in effect, because there had been that general consensus. So, I withdrew the motion of which I had given notice in June of that year.

As I said, there seemed to be general acceptance, but reluctance to adopt the matter formally. I felt that there were some committee chairmen who were not really in favour of the motion and that, therefore, I should eventually put it down in black and white so that they could not easily wiggle out of their obligations. So, I moved that motion again on April 21, 1983. On that occasion I said the following in closing my speech:

There has been general acceptance now, and I think it a good idea to put this sort of matter on the record for the future reference of committee chairmen. That is why I am moving the motion at this time.

Senator Frith adjourned that debate.

Some of those who were not in favour of the motion or who were not very enthusiastic took the attitude that the provinces would not appear before a Senate committee if invited. One province cited in that respect was the Province of Quebec. We all recall that when Mr. Parizeau, who was finally invited to appear before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the transport bill, came, he stayed for approximately three hours. I recall that the wording of the invitation he received from the chairman was to the effect that the committee wanted him to appear before the committee but that he had to confine himself to the constitutional aspects. The first thing Mr. Parizeau said was that he was not interested in the constitutional aspects but wanted to discuss the bill on its merits, which he did for approximately three hours. Honourable senators know what happened to that bill. The Senate committee suggested changes and in other ways criticized the bill. It was reintroduced in amended form but never passed. I think the Senate deserves considerable credit for that.

Another instance of such an invitation being issued was when a Senate committee was studying a bill concerning the establishment of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Many representatives from the provinces gave evidence before that committee. I have forgotten exactly how many.

I can also remember receiving a letter from Senator Roblin setting out that he was not too enthusiastic about my suggestion because the provinces would regard that as a supererogation. I must confess that I consulted the dictionary when I heard that word, and, not being a devout Anglican, I did not know it was part of the Thirty-Nine Articles. Supererogation means "beyond the call of duty;" in other words, the provinces did not really think that that was necessary. I see nothing wrong with doing something beyond the call of duty.

On the question of the provinces thinking that way, I should like to read one line from the Goldenberg/Lamontagne report, and that appears at page 34, where it says that the Senate should "become a forum where regional grievances would be heard." How can one hear regional grievances unless representatives from the regions appear before Senate committees? Certainly, individuals and corporations from regions appear before committees, as do associations, so there is no reason provincial governments should not also be invited to appear before Senate committees.

I should also like to refer to the Terms of Reference of the Molgat-Cosgrove committee, which appears as Appendix A to that report, which state:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider and report upon ways by which the Senate of Canada could be reformed in order to strengthen its role in representing people from all regions of Canada and to enhance the authority of Parliament to speak and act on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country.

I should like to read several extracts from that report. At page 9 it states:

It is the perception of many people who live in the western provinces, and of some who live in the eastern provinces, that their views are not given sufficient weight in the decisions of the national government.

The principal complaint the Committee encountered was that federal institutions as they are now constructed are unable to express and mediate regional concerns.

That report further states:

Those who argue for Senate reform, or for the reform of the House of Commons, say that institutional change can help the Canadian political system adapt to the new regional pressures. They do not argue that such change would solve all regional problems falling within federal competence. Rather the purpose would be to provide a better framework within which regional differences can be represented, debated and reconciled—a framework that gives the people of all provinces and territories a feeling that their views are given proper weight.

I appeared before that committee and pleaded that the Senate should have a particular interest in human rights, and also in this particular matter. Although the committee report indicates that that is one of the main roles of the Senate, it never does get down to the nitty-gritty. The nitty-gritty is, for example, the practical suggestion made by me in this motion.

● (1450)

I believe that the provinces should have a forum and it should be known that when they want to appear before a Senate committee they can do so. This motion is proposed so that chairmen of Senate committees who might be reluctant on certain occasions to invite them, or who could not persuade the committee to invite them because there was nothing on the record of the Senate to help persuade them to do so. We should go on record by this motion and show that we are serious in representing the regions. This is only one small step, but I suggest it is a practical one. It has been two years and nine months now since I originally gave notice of this motion and I hope that whoever adjourns this debate will not try to kill it by adjourning it indefinitely, as has happened before.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak at this time I will move the adjournment of the debate—and not indefinitely.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I propose that we should regularize what we have done. Rule 47(1) of the Rules of the Senate states:

A motion shall not be made which is the same in substance as any question which, during the same session, has been resolved in the affirmative or negative, unless the order, resolution, or other decision on such question has been rescinded as hereinafter provided.

It seems clear that this motion was passed and that we are now going to put it again. His Honour said that he agreed.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: Let me finish the point and you might be a little less restive. Rule 47(2) states:

An order, resolution, or other decision of the Senate may be rescinded on five days' notice if at least two-thirds of the senators present vote in favour of its rescission.

Rule 3 states:

Notwithstanding anything in these rules, any rule or part thereof may be suspended without notice by leave of the Senate, the rule or part thereof proposed to be suspended, and the reason for the proposed suspension, being distinctly stated.

I am suggesting that the record today show that we invoke rule 3 to suspend rule 47 in order to make it work.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Cape Breton), that further debate on the motion be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 20, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE JOHN ADAMS PRIME MINISTER OF BARBADOS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT FUNERAL

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I would like to make a brief statement to the members of this chamber. As you will recall, last Wednesday, March 13, the Honourable Senator Haidasz posed a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Honourable Senator Roblin, as to whether or not the Government of Canada was planning to include me in the Canadian delegation to the funeral of the late Prime Minister of Barbados, the Right Honourable J. M. G. Adams. As a result of this question posed by Senator Haidasz, Senator Roblin took swift, prompt and effective action, the result of which was my attendance at the funeral of the late Right Honourable "Tom" Adams in Barbados last Saturday.

I have no credentials to speak on behalf of the people of Barbados. However, I do feel, as a person born there, that I have the ability to convey to all here the sincere appreciation and the gratitude that they felt in seeing my attendance at the funeral of their beloved son. That appreciation was expressed in several ways—perhaps minor ways to some of us here but major ways to the people there. For example, one of the ways this appreciation was expressed was by the fact that our Canadian delegation, led by the Honourable Michael Wilson, was welcomed at the airport by the Minister of External Affairs himself. Obviously, in a time of sorrow such as this, a small nation like Barbados has to choose very carefully whom it sends its Minister of External Affairs to meet. I am told that the Minister of External Affairs of Barbados chose to meet certain delegations, including the Duke of Kent and the Canadian delegation.

Another small way in which that appreciation was expressed was the fact that our delegation was given choice seats in St. Michael's Cathedral where the ceremony for the late Right Honourable "Tom" Adams was held. I would like to tell this chamber that the funeral of the Right Honourable John Michael Geoffrey Manningham Adams was a majestic event. It was a glorious, rather than a sorrowful funeral and, as all of Barbados paid tribute to its native son, this friend of the Commonwealth, I can truly say it was a funeral befitting a statesman.

I would like to convey my personal and most sincere appreciation to Senator Duff Roblin, the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Senator Roblin not only knew the late Right Honourable "Tom" Adams but he also knew his father, the late Sir Grantley Adams, who was also a Prime Minister of Barbados. To the government leader in this chamber, I would like to say that I truly respect your efforts on my behalf and that I am fully appreciative of the fact that your involvement in this matter was not partisan, but was based purely on the recognition of a moral obligation to a sister member of the Commonwealth. I thank you, honourable senators.

THE ESTIMATES, 1984-1985

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance concerning its examination of expenditure as set out in supplementary estimates (C). I ask that the report be printed as an Appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix, p. 684.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Leblanc: Honourable senators, I move that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF RICHARD J. DOYLE, ESQ.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It deals with an announcement that was made yesterday concerning the Senate. I will have an opportunity to congratulate the, as he will soon be, Senator Doyle when he joins us, but I wonder if the announcement was incomplete, because I see that Senator Doyle is saying that he is "planning to be the member of the Senate from the Globe and Mail. I am going to come down here and tell everybody how to run the place."

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: I have almost got my answer. "It's high time somebody did," he continues. I wonder if that announcement was incomplete and we can soon expect an announcement that he will be replacing the Leader of the Government or the Deputy Leader of the Government.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The deputy!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I want to express my personal satisfaction with the news that the new Senator Doyle is to join the ranks of this body, and I am happy to see his announcement, not mine, that he intends to sit as a supporter of the present administration.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh!

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: What else is new?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): What a surprise!

Senator Frith: Now, there's news.

Senator Roblin: I rather anticipated such a reception for my statement. It is apparently Senator Doyle's opinion, at any rate, that up to the moment he has not been included in the ranks of my particular political party, so I accept this statement of this new recruit in the spirit in which it is offered.

As to Senator Doyle's views on the conduct of the Senate, I would not be surprised if, when he arrives here, he places a slightly different interpretation on the statement attributed to him from the one offered by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Frith: So you say we cannot expect such an announcement.

AGRICULTURE

DISCUSSION PAPER "TAX ISSUES IN AGRICULTURE"

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and it is in relation to the white paper issued by the Minister of Finance in January entitled "Tax Issues in Agriculture".

Honourable senators, the Minister of Finance and some of his officials have appeared before more than one committee of Parliament and continue to say that this document is a statement of the facts as they see them.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the government is going to disown the construction and impressions left by this paper because it says, as the Honourable Senator Argue pointed out some time ago, that a farmer's average tax rate is 4 per cent, which is "one-quarter of the average rates on wage and salary income and on non-farm business income".

It goes on to state that:

Many farm tax-filers have been able to reduce their tax to zero. They account for a significant proportion of high-income non-taxable individuals who could be affected by a minimum tax—

And get this:

—currently under consideration.

I think that the government has an obligation to set the farm community's mind at ease by telling them that the government is not going to use what is stated as being facts in this paper as a basis for a new run at farmers for taxation purposes.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, when the paper was first issued I was responsible for having it referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry for study and comment. I understand that that committee has met to consider the paper and has heard from certain witnesses in respect of the matter. I believe the Honourable Senator Olson was present at that committee meeting. I am not clear as to whether he addressed those questions to the representatives of the department who appeared to deal with the matter. They would have been legitimate questions to ask of them. I do not think that Senator Argue, who has displayed some interest in this matter, attended that committee meeting.

What I suggest is that, rather than raise the matter in the way that my honourable friend has, the committee charged with the matter convene another meeting. If my honourable friend has not received the information he thinks he should have received on the factual points, then he should have another opportunity to inquire of the department. I think we should also pay special attention to Senator Argue's position on the matter and ask him to attend that meeting.

I say that because we are anxious to obtain a full disclosure of the meaning of the paper on the table. It may be that the facts in the paper are, in effect, verifiable, but there may be other facts with respect to events which have occurred since the paper was prepared which cast a different light on the matter. I, myself, am anxious to have the matter ventilated. I think we should give some thought to having that committee continue its consideration of the paper and have it deal with some of the questions my honourable friend has raised.

As to the matter of taxation, it is perfectly obvious that information on tax matters will be made available to the Parliament of Canada when the budget is tabled, and not before.

Senator Olson: My problem is with the image this paper is conveying based on the construction of the so-called facts that the Minister of Finance has put together. I am satisfied that the people who prepared this paper for the Minister of Finance believed that they had put the facts together in a fair way; however, it is up to the minister and the government to decide whether they have been set forth in a fair way, if they want to be the sponsors of this kind of document. That is the question and I do not need, quite frankly, to appear before the committee any more. We already know what they have said, but the Minister of Finance needs to say something about this. He did appear before a committee of the other place, and as far as I can tell he did the appropriate amount of grieving for the farmers, but he did not back away from the image and the construction of this paper.

• (1415)

Senator Roblin: It may very well be that the facts of the paper are correct. My honourable friend had an opportunity to investigate that point before the committee. It is no use complaining to me in this house if he did not do so. If he thinks there are other facts that ought to be considered in connection with the paper, then let him say so and let him express his opinion and his views before the committee. You cannot do it in Question Period in this chamber when we have a perfectly satisfactory vehicle available for the full ventilation of the issue.

Senator Olson: There is one other even more satisfactory vehicle for that, namely, to let the farmers, particularly in western Canada, know what kind of attitude this government is displaying toward their activities.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is right.

Senator Roblin: This government so far has embarked on a number of very commendable acts involving policy with respect to western agriculture.

Senator Frith: Like what?

Senator Roblin: It has dealt with the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the cash advances under it.

Senator Frith: It was the previous administration's bill.

Senator Roblin: It has eliminated the taxation on farm gasoline, and that is worth millions of dollars to people in western Canada.

Senator Frith: That is nothing new.

Senator Roblin: The former administration never did anything like that. I regret that I don't have with me at the moment—because it is on my desk in my office, and I had better bring it in sometime—a list of the other moves that this administration has taken in support of agriculture, because it is a list that I think is most impressive.

Senator Frith: Do that.

Senator Roblin: Would my honourable friend like to take part in this discussion, too? He mutters into his beard and I cannot really hear what he is saying. It can't be worth much.

Senator Frith: I said bring the list.

Senator Roblin: You can stand up and say your piece the first chance you get. You are welcome.

Senator Frith: You heard clearly what I said.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend should bear in mind that these concerns for western agriculture are real and effective. They do not amount to perfection but they amount to progress. To assume from that that the government is taking an anti-western agricultural stance is, I think, not supported by the facts.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it is not an assumption at all. What these papers say is that farmers are about eight times richer in terms of assets than other Canadians, and that their income is about double the average of all Canadians. That in my opinion is an absolutely wrong interpretation of the facts and, yet, it is put together in that way in this paper. If the government wants to stand behind it and say that that is their position, that is fine. Then the rest of us have a great obligation—

Senator Frith: Do they stand behind it or not?

Senator Olson: —to tell the people out there how the government is regarding their economic situation.

Senator Roblin: The honourable senator has a great obligation to do his duty in the committee. White papers are published not as expressions of policy—

Senator Olson: They used to be.

Senator Roblin: —but they are published as a factual presentation according to the author of the document. If my honourable friend thinks it is not factual, he may be right.

Senator Frith: He is asking if it is government policy.

Senator Roblin: Let him express his view before the committee and thrash it out there. What is the point of having the matter referred to committee if we do not follow through and produce a report? If the committee does not like what is in that paper, it is at liberty to say so. As the government has no majority on that committee, there is no way that we can influence what you have to say. If you want to say something about the report, have the committee deal with it.

Senator Olson: You can be sure that I will.

Senator Roblin: I am sure you will.

Senator Olson: The Leader of the Government says that a white paper is not a statement of the position of the government, but it used to be that when a white paper of the nature of this one was issued—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: No, no!

Senator Olson: —it set out the position of the government on the policy involved at that time. There was another document called a green paper in which a number of options were put forward, but by the time it got to the status of a white paper it became a statement of the government's position as of that time. If that system has changed, we would like to know about it.

• (1420)

Senator Roblin: This paper is not a statement of policy; it is a statement of the facts that the department has produced.

The reason for this paper is to generate discussion, and there is nothing wrong with that. My honourable friend can continue to discuss it before the committee as long as he likes, but, if he wants an expression of opinion on this matter, then the committee is the place to get it.

Senator Olson: I will try only once more.

In a committee of the other house, the Minister of Finance has already said what he thinks of this paper. He did not back away from the fact that this was the government's position, at least as a discussion paper, and that it outlined the facts as he saw them.

I am trying to persuade him to withdraw this false image. If he is not willing to do that, then we will leave it for now.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, yesterday the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertook to obtain an answer to questions asked by myself and other senators as to the reason for the Governor General not being included in the reception for the President of the United States in Quebec City.

I referred to the excuse, which I had read in the paper, already given by the government in this respect. I have since read that the reception committee included not only the Prime Minister who, for all we know now, considers himself the new head of state, but also a guard of honour of 101 Mounties in ; 100 soldiers from the Van Doos; and a 35-man band. The President was accompanied by some four or five cabinet officials as was the Prime Minister.

In ascertaining the answer to the question raised yesterday, would the Leader of the Government also ascertain what the government considers to be the criteria for a state visit? Would they include 200 Mounties in dress uniform or 400?

Would he also inquire as to what criteria were used in designating previous visits of United States presidents and other heads of state as state visits as opposed to this one?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not think there are any rules which stipulate how many soldiers we should have on deck or how many mounted policemen we should turn out in order to make friends welcome.

I would point out, however, that surely one consideration which has to be taken into account in deciding the nature of the visit is the agenda. What are they here for? There is quite a clear distinction in my mind between visits by heads of state which are ceremonial in character and those which are not. It may very well be that that is the basis on which judgments are arrived at with respect to these matters. If they are here for business, that is one thing; if they are here on a ceremonial occasion, that may be another.

Hon. H. A. Olson: What about both?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government.

I understand from his reply yesterday that he was to obtain further information. While he is obtaining that information, could he also obtain for us the complete list of guests invited to the gala evening and the total cost of the visit?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend should put that question on the order paper, and it will be dealt with in the usual way.

TRANS-BORDER POLLUTION PROBLEMS

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate relates to acid rain.

As all honourable senators know, particularly those from eastern Canada whose favourite fishing lakes may be dead, this is a very serious matter.

I acknowledge the efforts of previous Ministers of the Environment, one of whom sits across this chamber, Senator LeBlanc, and the recent efforts by the present minister. I also acknowledge the fact that we have to, in a sense, get our own act together before we go screaming to the United States.

However, the fact remains that 50 per cent of the acid rain that falls in this country comes from the United States. Therefore, the United States must take some action to alleviate the serious problems which affect Canadians.

We have had the announcement in Quebec City of the appointment of the former Premier of Ontario, William Davis, an individual for whom I have high regard, and Drew Lewis of the U.S. to serve as special envoys on acid rain. The reaction to those appointments has been lukewarm at best. In the Globe and Mail we have the following: "Envoys on acid rain called small but important progress."

Mr. Davis is quoted as saying that the Canada-United States study "is not likely to produce dramatic results."

I should like to hear from the Leader of the Government in the Senate his version of what we can expect. Is this another delaying tactic, purely a delaying tactic? Or can Canadians look forward to some really serious joint action on the part of Canada and the United States on the problem of acid rain, and, more particularly, very decisive action on the part of the United States in the future?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I might say that this might be a useful subject for debate. It is a rather long question. I shall do my best to give a reasonably short answer to it.

The fact is, the acid rain problem in this country is not one of recent origin; it is something that has been with us for many years. Successive governments of Canada have tried to do something about it.

My honourable friend expressed the nub of the question when he said that 50 per cent of the acid rain comes from the United States. He should have gone on to say that 50 per cent originates in Canada. He was kind enough to mention the steps that have been taken recently in that respect.

Within our own exclusive jurisdiction, we have a certain responsibility. The initiatives taken by the present administration are, I think, commendable and hopeful. They certainly go far beyond anything that has been devised heretofore.

We have an understanding with the provinces on which we are working in order to deal with our contribution to the acid rain problem. Furthermore, we are putting into it not only our money, but we are putting a time limit on the efforts that are to be made. That, I think, is a good thing.

What happened in Quebec City, in the view of the government, is that the log-jam or the stalemate, or the stonewalling, if you want to be blunt about it, that some of us have felt has been characteristic of American policy on this question in recent years has changed. The problem has been recognized as a joint problem. That is something that I do not believe had ever happened before. To my mind, it is an important development that it has been recognized as a joint problem. No longer will it be considered exclusively a matter for the United States to decide on questions with respect to acid rain that originates within its own borders.

We have now asked two men, one from each country, to look into this problem, and we can only make certain assumptions as to what will be the result. I assume that this action has been undertaken by both parties in good faith and that they intend to try to make some progress on this matter—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): To study it further.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend says that they will study it further. I do not mind that. He has witnessed studies in the United States all the time he was in office—

Senator Frith: Exactly. It is just more of the same. Where is the progress?

Senator Roblin: —and he never secured any commitment from the President of the United States to take some action in this matter.

I referred to my friend as having been in office. That is wrong. He wasn't in office.

While the action may not be as much as he would like to see, it is more than had been secured from this President of the United States heretofore.

Senator Frith: He always said that they would study it further. That is what he told us, too. He always said: "We will study it more."

Senator Roblin: He has undertaken to appoint his own special envoy to look into the problem of acid rain, and we have done the same.

Senator Frith: To do another study!

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend wants to cast doubt on the good faith of the President of the United States in this regard, he is free to do so. I do not take that stance.

Senator Frith: It is your claim to progress that I am casting doubt on, not the good faith of the President of the United States.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: I think that those involved have entered into this matter in good faith, and they intend to try to get results. I am optimistic that something will occur that we can give our approval to. I do not expect miracles. I do not expect the problem to disappear or to be solved in any quick fashion. That is unrealistic. The fact that there is agreement between the two countries that it is a problem that concerns both of us, and one on which we must make a better effort than we have made thus far to come to a common policy on, is encouraging.

• (1430)

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his reply. I fully appreciate the need for studies. In this country we went through a phase of study some time ago to delineate the problem. A number of joint studies have been undertaken by Canadian and U.S. scientists going back to Senator LeBlanc's time as Minister of the Environment. In my view, the time for study is over and now is the time for action. Action is needed now.

I will accept the Leader of the Government's answer in good faith that we have to look at what can be achieved in the future. Perhaps the Leader of the Government can provide us with some material, as it becomes available. Could the terms of reference given to both the Honourable William Davis and Mr. Lewis be given to senators so that we may be guided a little further in what we might be able to expect?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I sympathize with my honourable friend's position. I believe he had some executive responsibility at one time in this field, and therefore he knows something about it. I would say, however, that it takes two to tango, and we are trying to coax the United States on to the dance floor. That is the position we are in at present. We hope that before long they may find the music sufficiently interesting to do some of the things that my honourable friend wants them to do. It seems that the first step has been taken. I make no claim other than that, because we must be realistic in these matters. But it is a helpful first step.

I do not have in my hand the instructions given to the Honourable William Davis in respect of this matter, but I do know that he is to approach the matter with his American colleague with a view to finding out what recommendations they will make to their various governments on what can be done, what initial steps can be taken and what lines of activity they consider likely to be productive. They have been given 12 months to consider this matter and to bring back something useful. The parameters of the problem are quite clear, and it is up to them to develop the positions of both sides to the point where they may have something helpful to report to us.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, I would ask of the Leader of the Government, when considering this important issue, that he and his cabinet colleagues take into account the example of the Province of New Brunswick, which, with technical and financial assistance from the Government of Canada—let us forget what government—proceeded to clean up the environment to a rather remarkable degree, to the extent—Senator Robertson will correct me if I am wrong—that some five, six or seven years ago that province met all of the targets that had been set in federal-provincial agreements for the reduction of environmental problems in that province. Since Ontario is now the major polluter in Canada, and we seek to set an example for the United States, may I suggest to the Leader of the Government that, in view of pending events in Ontario, it might be a good time for the Government of Canada to bring the example of New Brunswick to the attention of the Government of Ontario, as one to be followed.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am morally certain that the point has not been overlooked in the negotiations between the provinces and the federal government.

[Translation]

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Jean Le Moine: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate allow me to come back to a protocol matter of great concern to us?

Could he tell us about the consultation which, according to the Prime Minister himself, was held between Mr. Mulroney and the Governor General before the Quebec summit?

For example, was Her Excellency asked to refuse the Prime Minister's invitation?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend is a very good student of the Constitution. I think he understands that advice directed by ministers to the Governor General is confidential.

TRANS-BORDER POLLUTION PROBLEMS—MANDATE OF SPECIAL ENVOYS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to return to the question of acid rain. I think there are a number of other points that ought to be brought out in order to get a better picture of the significance of what happened at Quebec City. The summary of the Quebec summit outlines the principal achievements. Among those achievements is mentioned an agreement to appoint special envoys with an agreed mandate to consider the problem of acid rain. I have not found in the papers which I have what the agreed mandate is. Would the Leader of the Government indicate whether he has the precise words of that mandate and whether he can make the mandate available to us, because it really is mystifying as to what a relevant mandate on acid rain could be in the present circumstances. The matter has been thoroughly canvassed. The Leader of the Government was quite right when he said that the Canadian government is, to use his words, "coaxing them on to the dance floor." That has been the effort, and it was continued at Quebec City—coaxing the President on to the dance floor.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The stage!

Senator MacEachen: However, the President has not stepped on to the dance floor yet because he has not made any decisions with respect to a reduction of acid rain; nor is he prepared to enter into any bilateral arrangements with Canada with respect to a joint program for the reduction of acid rain. When that happens, the President will be on the dance floor. He has not come on to the dance floor yet.

I want to know what these two envoys will do in their agreed mandate to facilitate this question. Perhaps I will stop my questioning there because I want to come back with a couple of other points.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My friend and I are in accord. We are trying to coax the Americans on to the dance floor and we are hoping that they are going to dance. The point is that they had not even come into the dance hall until the summit meeting. At least we have them inside the dance hall.

Senator Frith: What is the mandate?

Senator Roblin: If we have any—

Senator Frith: He asked you about the mandate.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Relax, Royce.

Senator Roblin: You will get your chance.

Senator Frith: What is the mandate?

Senator Roblin: I would like to answer these questions as faithfully as I can, but I must confess that when the Deputy Leader of the Opposition insists on interrupting me quite regularly, it disturbs my train of thought. I find him so interesting that I am inclined to follow him down the garden path. If he would just oblige me by allowing me to make my statement—

Senator Frith: I was just trying to remind you of the question, because so far your answer has had nothing to do with it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I challenge you to repeat the question.

An Hon. Senator: Order!

Senator Frith: It doesn't mean a thing.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend is trying to be helpful, I have to tell him he is not succeeding.

Senator Frith: Obviously.

Senator Roblin: The most helpful thing he could do is to keep quiet for a while and let me get on with it.

Senator Frith: Why don't you answer the question? That will shut me up.

Senator Roblin: If the honourable senator is not going to be quiet, I shall just have to put up with the noise he makes.

I want to come back to the question raised by my honourable friend. In effect, he has asked for the terms of reference with respect to these matters, and I think I will be able to provide him with the information in due course.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for his willingness to provide me with the agreed mandate. I want to return to the analogy of the dance floor and the dance hall because the Leader of the Government now has said that he thinks that he has succeeded in getting the President into the dance hall. I thought at one time that I, too, had managed to get the American administration into the dance hall but the Government of the United States asserted very strongly that there was no link between environmental degradation and sulphur dioxide emissions; that the scientific evidence was lacking, and therefore it would be quite wrong to launch into an action program without the necessary research. Of course, Canadian scientists were absolutely aghast at this contention by the United States.

● (1440)

Finally, Mr. Shultz, in an effort to advance the cause, with good faith, I think, agreed that both Canada and the United States would appoint scientists from each country to look at the matter and to see whether they could reconcile their differences—and they did reconcile their differences. At least that problem was taken off the table, but we did not get to dance because the President himself refused to sanction any program of acid reduction.

Therefore I am asking now: Is it possible that Mr. Davis and Mr. Lewis must now go back to that scientific question? Will that be part of the mandate?

I go on to a second illustration that is quite important, in my opinion. Honourable senators may remember when Mr. Ruckelshaus was appointed the Environmental Secretary of the United States, and the assurance given at that time was that if anybody could do this job, it was Bill Ruckelshaus. I agree with that assessment; he was really quite a tremendous man and he did his damndest. He even came to Halifax when Mr. Shultz was there and met with the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Caccia, on the question of acid rain, and nothing happened. We came away empty-handed because they were preparing for an election in the United States.

I must say, without contesting the good faith of the President of the United States, that I am really asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he believes that this is just another evasive action to put off a decision. We do not need further studies; we want action, and I must say I am disappointed at this stage with this failure to get the President on the dance floor, even though the leader thinks he got him into the dance hall. Perhaps I will withhold my final judgment until I see the terms of reference. However, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate give me some assurance that there is something solid behind this effort?

Senator Roblin: I must agree with my honourable friend's description of the difficulties of the problem. I also agree with him that he and his colleagues were unable to do much about it. That is a fact; we know that. The problem is very difficult. However, we have now, for the first time, got the undertaking of the current President of the United States that he is willing to move a step further in this matter in the way that has been described.

[Senator MacEachen.]

I offer no guarantees whatsoever to this house as to what will happen, because I cannot foretell the future. However, I can say that this is an opening, an initiative which I welcome, and I think that with good faith something can be done. We can see, for example, how we can use the laws that are now in place in both countries—and there are some laws in place in both countries—to deal with this question. For example, we can see how to deal in the United States with the lobbies that are at work in the whole of this matter. In the United States, it is not a unitary government, as is the government in Canada, where the executive can make a finding and have things proceed on the basis of automatic parliamentary approval, one might say. It is quite different. The lobbies in the United States are very strong and very powerful, and undoubtedly they have had an influence that far exceeds that of any lobbies of the metal industry in this country in trying to influence our policy. There are real problems; I minimize them not at all. I think the honourable gentleman has been accurate in his analysis of the question.

With respect to the issue before us, the question asked of me was: Do I really think that the parties engaged in this matter are undertaking this exercise in good faith? And the answer is yes.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

COMPOSITION OF BOARDS OF DIRECTORS

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my interest, as I am sure the honourable members of this chamber are aware, is as always directed to crown corporations. Last Saturday, the Minister of Transport said that he held all of the shares of CNR. In view of the fact that the shareholders elect the board, can we expect that the Minister of Transport would exercise that right in regard to all of the directors of the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The other day, I sent my honourable friend a complete statement of the rules that govern Question Period in chambers of this sort. Having read those over, I am sure he will recall that he need not expect that I have any obligation to answer hypothetical questions of the sort that he has just posed.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate said yesterday that it was not surprising that there would be Tories on the Board of Directors of Air Canada, in view of the fact that 50 per cent of Canadians were of Tory persuasion. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if that is a statement of government policy—that the percentage of Tories is to be reflected on the boards of directors of crown corporations?

Senator Roblin: I merely stated the obvious fact that most Canadians support the Progressive Conservative Party.

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary, honourable senators. I have never heard even the Prime Minister claim that the Progressive Conservatives had 100 per cent support.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is in anticipation of that.

Senator Sinclair: I see; it is in anticipation of 100 per cent support. If that is the policy, until that anticipation is realized, could we not have a more even distribution?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: What about the question of distribution in the Senate?

Senator Roblin: I think that my honourable friend is asking that so-called patronage appointments be distributed equally, and I do not know what he means by "equally". Perhaps he wants the 24 per cent, or whatever it is, of the popular support that his party has at the present time, reflected in these appointments. When he makes a deal with me on the membership of the Senate, I will consider his other proposition.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I would not be at all surprised that a deal could be worked out regarding the next few appointments in the Senate so that one-quarter of them could be Liberals and three-quarters of them Tories. I think that deal could be struck immediately.

Senator Doody: That is a new naivety.

Senator Roblin: Now I know why my honourable friend was such a success in business. Obviously, his idea of mathematics is somewhat removed from mine. If he wants to say that 53 per cent of the senators should be Progressive Conservative, that is a bargain that I would not be able to refuse.

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is now over six months since the Mulroney government was sworn into office. Immediately after that swearing in, that government promised as a priority to go forward with an apology in the form of compensation to Canadians of Japanese descent for actions taken by the Government of Canada during the Second World War and immediately thereafter.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Can he give us some timetable as to when the government might finally act on its promise?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The government did its best to act on its promise by presenting to the leaders of the two parties in the other place a proposal that included a satisfactorily contrite apology to Canadians of Japanese origin for what had happened. They also made a proposal for certain studies to be made in this field of racial discrimination which would be a commemoration of the event that transpired, and an earnest expression of our intentions to do better next time.

I have to tell my honourable friend that that particular resolution, if my information is correct, was not approved by the two other parties in the other chamber and, therefore, could not be proceeded with.

Since that time, other negotiations have taken place and I think that this time the ball is really in the court of the Japanese Canadians to make it clear exactly what their views are. They did not like what the government proposed and no doubt they have other propositions to make. However, I must be perfectly frank with my honourable friend; I am not optimistic that we will find perfect agreement on this subject in the very near future.

Senator Grafstein: Just as a supplementary to that, is the government still actively considering a form of partial direct compensation on an individual basis to those Canadians who suffered loss of property?

● (1450)

Senator Roblin: I can say no, because I do not think the government ever considered that as an appropriate action to take in respect of this matter. It is not a matter that can be dealt with in terms of dollars and cents.

Senator Grafstein: Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate give us some idea what the government's timetable is in order to put its final proposals to Parliament, and perhaps to this house?

Senator Roblin: I think the government has already made up its mind what its proposal ought to be, but it was not approved, so that leaves the matter in limbo. Although negotiations are still going on with the Japanese Canadian community, I do not think anybody has any idea as to when they might be satisfactorily concluded.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—REQUEST FOR TEXTS OF AGREEMENTS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

At the Quebec summit statements were made that the defence of Canada and that of the United States are inextricably linked and that closer ties between the Canadian and the United States economies will follow. I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he would table in this chamber all of the seven agreements that were signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States in Quebec City last weekend.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The question of the interrelationship between Canada and the United States in connection with defence was first expressed in a very definitive form in the Ogdensburg Agreement in 1940, where it was made perfectly clear that the defence of this continent is shared by both and both had to take some responsibility for it. That was followed up by various other agreements between the two countries—the Hyde Park Agreement, for example, the NORAD Treaty, to say nothing of NATO, so the question of the defence relationship between our two countries has been the established policy of every Government of Canada since 1940. So there is nothing new there. That was the preamble to my friend's question. I have today tabled two of the documents that were agreed at Quebec City. My friend says there are five more. I will examine that situation and advise him if they can also be produced.

Senator Haidasz: On the question of Canada-United States defence, I should like to know whether any commitments were made or any agreements reached at this Quebec summit insofar as the strategic defence initiative is concerned, which means the space based anti-missile system, commonly known in the newspapers as "Star Wars."

Senator Roblin: No commitment at all was made by Canada with respect to the SDI.

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I want to go back to the question of the absence of Her Excellency the Governor General from the meeting in Quebec City. I go back to it, not only because a question of courtesy is involved, but because a constitutional question is involved. If I understood the Leader of the Government in the Senate correctly, he said that these visits should be put into either one corral or another corral; they are either strictly ceremonial visits or strictly working visits. Is that not too strict, or indeed almost too arbitrary, a division? Could not the proprieties have been respected without detracting from the competence of the Prime Minister and the other ministers to do the work that was to be done? Was there some basic incompatibility between showing respect to Her Majesty's representative in Canada and getting the work of the Quebec conference completed?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I do not think that I would like to pose as the constitutional expert on this side of the house. I think there are others who are more qualified than I am to make comments in that respect. I would not like the chamber to think that I am laying down any obiter dicta with respect to ceremonial visits versus working visits, because that was said by way of illustration only, not in any attempt to rewrite the Constitution.

Senator Stewart: I did not ask the Leader of the Government for assurance on this point as a constitutional expert. I asked him because he is the Leader of the Government in the Senate; he speaks for the government here. I put it to him: Was there some particular reason why the presence in Quebec of Her Excellency the Governor General, the Queen's representative in Canada, would have made the working sessions less effective? It seems to me that that is a simple question. I am sure the government made a decision on that point, and it would appear that the advice tendered to Her Excellency by the Prime Minister was that she ought not to attend. Was that the advice tendered? That it was is the obvious conclusion.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is entitled to draw any conclusion he likes, but it is not up to me to say what transpired between Her Excellency's advisers and Her Excellency, and I have no intention of doing so. Insofar as the rest of his question comes under that rubric there will be no answer.

[Senator Roblin.]

Insofar as there can be an answer provided, as I undertook to do yesterday, an answer will be provided.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, following on what the Leader of the Government in the Senate said earlier, can we assume that hereafter, when such visits are to take place, the Prime Minister or some person speaking on his behalf will declare in advance whether or not a visit is a strictly ceremonial visit or a strictly working visit so that when Her Excellency the Governor General is not present it will not be thought that an insult has been gratuitously thrown in her face?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can make any assumptions he likes, but he can be assured that the government has not gratuitously or otherwise insulted Her Excellency the Governor General.

Senator Stewart: Is the pattern of making a distinction between a strictly ceremonial visit and a strictly working visit the one that the government proposes to follow in future?

Senator Roblin: You know, my honourable friend was born out of time. If he were a scholastic in the Middle Ages he would no doubt be debating here how many angels could dance on the head of a pin. That is his idea of dealing with constitutional matters and constitutional propriety.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): But you are not a constitutional expert, so you cannot know.

Senator Roblin: All I do is try to bring a measure of whatever poor common sense I have to the questions involved, and there is no answer that I intend to give the honourable senator on that question.

Senator Stewart: The distinction is yours. It seems to me that since common sense is going to be the basis of decision, it would have been common sense to ask Her Excellency to arrange to be present to receive the President of a major foreign state. It seems to me that we could argue that an insult was offered not only to Her Majesty the Queen, but to the President of the United States of America.

Senator Roblin: When my honourable friend is in a position to know what advice was tendered to Her Excellency he may be able to know the answer to his question. He does not know; he is making assumptions; they are not correct.

Senator Frith: You are going to tell us then?

Senator Roblin: No, I am not.

Senator Frith: So we will never know.

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—DECLARATION ON INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I want to ask another question with respect to the Quebec summit—and I am glad that it has been given that official designation by the government, not that I have anything against the shamrock!

There are many interesting questions to be asked about this meeting, particularly in view of the fact that a number of declarations from the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States are listed. Among the achievements is a declaration on international security. I have a number of questions about this declaration. We know that an agreement was signed between the Prime Minister and the President on the northern warning line, so that is understood, and certainly well known. However, I want to know if the declaration contains any new concepts or any new commitments.

● (1500)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Which declaration?

Senator MacEachen: The declaration by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States of America regarding international security.

Senator Roblin: Are you referring to the northern warning line?

Senator MacEachen: It is a three-page declaration in which reference is made to the modernization of the North American air defence surveillance and early warning system. It covers a very broad territory of international concepts with respect to defence and security.

I am asking whether there are any new commitments or obligations or concepts in this declaration that hitherto had not been accepted or elaborated upon by Canada, either in a bilateral way with the United States, or with our North Atlantic Treaty Organization partners.

Senator Roblin: I believe the answer is that there are no new concepts contained in that that had not already been on the table in one form or another during previous discussions with the United States. However, it is a complicated question and I think it would be unwise of me to give a categorical answer without first being sure that I am correct. I think that I am correct, but I will investigate the matter further.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for that assurance.

Earlier I listened to his answer to Senator Haidasz on the question of the strategic defence initiative in which the leader, as I recall, stated that Canada had not made any commitments with respect to it. I am not asserting that Canada has done so at this point, but there is a sentence which states:

We seek a stable world, with greatly reduced levels of nuclear arms. The prospect of an enhanced ability to deter war based upon an increasing contribution of non-nuclear defences against offensive nuclear arms has prompted the U.S. research effort embodied in the president's strategic defence initiative. We are agreed that this effort is prudent and is in conformity with the ABM Treaty.

I take it that the Leader of the Government would agree that the Prime Minister did endorse in this declaration the strategic defence initiative insofar as the research aspect of it is concerned.

Senator Roblin: I think he endorsed the idea that it was prudent to look into these matters as, indeed, have the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the leaders of a number of the NATO-member countries.

Senator MacEachen: I realize that. In fact, some of the wording in this particular declaration has been derived from the communiqué that was issued by Mrs. Thatcher when she endorsed the research aspect of the strategic defence initiative. I wanted to refine, in my own mind, at least, the answer given to Senator Haidasz about the strategic defence initiative, because Canada, through the Prime Minister, has stated that this is a good thing to do, but there is some difference of opinion on that point.

I have one more question which the Leader of the Government may want to take as notice. There is reference made to the necessity of continuing dialogue and consultation between Canada and the United States. Of course, that is fully endorsed by everybody, I am sure.

There is a further reference to the negotiations currently under way in Geneva between the United States and the Soviet Union. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me whether Canada was consulted with respect to the negotiating stance which is being put forward on behalf of the United States at the Geneva talks at present under way? Also, has Canada given any views of its own? Could he also say whether the United States is going into that conference with the same negotiating mandate with which it entered the broken-off negotiations with the Soviet Union, particularly on INF weapons.

Senator Roblin: I think that we must leave to the United States the right to establish its own negotiating position when it goes into negotiations of this kind. After all, that country is in charge of the nuclear umbrella, and we are, in a sense, the beneficiaries of that country having assumed that task. So, we have to allow it to clearly set its own priorities.

That is not to say that we do not have opinions on the subject, and that is not to say that we do not express them, because I am sure that we do.

If my honourable friend wants a more explicit statement from me, I will consult with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to see what information can be provided.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I do seek further information, because, in the past the United States has consulted with its NATO allies about its negotiating stance, and Canada has taken advantage of that opportunity to put forward its own views. Therefore, I would like to know if that process has taken place on this occasion, and if Canada has endorsed the mandate, and whether it had certain views of its own which it would like to see included in the American position.

Senator Roblin: There is no doubt that this whole matter was on the table at Quebec City. As to what information I can obtain for my honourable friend which would contribute to the debate in the Senate, that remains to be seen, but I will do my best for him.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We are faced in this country, as everyone knows, with historically high real interest rates. Yesterday, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, stated that a reduction in the deficit in Canada would have "some effect on interest rates."

In view of reductions being tied to a budget, and in view of the importance of lowering interest rates, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise this chamber when we may expect action in that regard?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend refers to the level of interest rates. In the very recent past, they were considerably higher than they are now. They are too high in any case; there is no disagreement about that.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada showed perhaps—and I do not want to overstate it—a scintilla of optimism that they may come down in the near future, and if so, I am sure we would all be happy with that.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada has, during the time that my honourable friend, Senator Everett, was Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, been persuaded to appear before that committee to discuss his report and germane matters. I do not see why that could not be done again. He is a very interesting man to discuss matters with.

My honourable friend seems to be asking a question about budgetary policy. If that assumption is correct, then he will have to wait until the budget is presented for that information.

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary question. While we have seen interest rates in absolute terms in the past at higher levels than they are at now, in modern times I cannot recall real interest rates being at a higher level than they are at the present time, in view of the relatively low level of inflation. Because the economy is sputtering in certain areas, the importance of budgetary matters and interest rates takes on priorities that have not been with us for a long time. Canadians have been waiting for a budget now for many months. My plea to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is, when discussing these matters with his colleagues, would he emphasize the concern of business that action be taken as soon as possible.

• (1510)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think it is the concern not only of business that we should have lower interest rates but it is the concern of everybody. I should remind my honourable friend that we are now on a mop-up or rescue operation, because he complains about the fact that they have been waiting a long time for something to be done. During the previous administration not only did we see a budget which to all intents and purposes was out of control but we saw interest rates and inflation at higher rates than they are now. That does not make anybody feel any better at the present time. We have a problem and we have to face it, and we are going to try to do that. I do not think it is appropriate for my honourable friend to express this business point of view leaving me with the impression that he thinks we should jump to attention and produce our budget before we are prepared and ready to do so. This is going to be a very important document which will require all the attention and care that can be given to it. It is also going to require the amount of consultation that is being given to it, particularly when one thinks of the consultation that will be taking place with labour and industry over this coming weekend. I appreciate my honourable friend's anxiety to see action—we all want that—but I would sooner be right a little later on than take some action today which might not be productive.

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary question. The point I would draw to the honourable senator's attention is that the one way to cause continued disquiet is to create an element of uncertainty, and the one way to create that uncertainty is to do nothing. You can consult and consult and consult but there comes a time for action and the taking of responsibility. My suggestion is that that time has passed. I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to force upon his conscience the necessity of drawing that forcibly to the attention of his colleagues.

Senator Roblin: I can tell you one thing I am not going to do: I am not going to recommend to them that they follow the policy of the last administration. It had approximately 12 years to deal with this matter and during that—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): And they brought inflation down.

Senator Roblin:—whole period of time we saw the deficit increasing and the problems of inflation and interest rates increasing. They proved that they were unable to cope with those matters. I think we are going to do considerably better than they did.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has a convenient memory. It was the former administration that took action in regard to inflation and wrestled it to the ground.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Frith: You don't like the numbers!

Senator Roblin: I hesitate to stand up and prevent Senator Stewart from making his contribution, but I really must say that I appreciate the comment of Senator Sinclair because he said it with a smile on his face. That took all the sting out of it, didn't it? It wrestled inflation to the ground but inflation was shaking its fists in our face before we could turn around. It really was not a successful operation.

Senator Frith: Don't you read the figures, for God's sake!

An Hon. Senator: Steady, Royce!

Senator Roblin: Inflation was wrestled to the ground by Prime Minister Trudeau approximately 10 years ago and, unfortunately, it re-emerged.

Senator Frith: It has been going down since.

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, my question relates to the timing of the budget. I do not expect the Leader of the Government in the Senate to be specific, but would it be fair to assume, given his concern for a sound economic policy, that the budget will be brought down early enough so that the major measures eventuating from that budget can be dealt with before the summer adjournment?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend can make any assumptions he likes, but the Minister of Finance will tell us when the budget is coming down, and not me.

Senator Stewart: Is it open to be assumed that it will come down so late that the major measures cannot be dealt with before the summer adjournment? That is the clear implication. I hope that is not too complicated a proposition in logic for my honourable friend.

Senator Roblin: I think I can just barely cope with it. I understand what my honourable friend is driving at. I recall, however, that some of the measures proposed in the budget—took 18 months or 2 years to become part of the law of the country. In fact, some of the measures never did become part of the law of the country.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Thank God!

Senator Stewart: Change!

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend says "change" and I agree with him, and the change is going to be for the better.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a non-controversial question that won't exercise the Leader of the Government. Are we still on the April target announced by the Prime Minister for the budget?

Senator Roblin: The Minister of Finance will deal with the question of timing when he is able to do so. I am sorry but I cannot add anything further to that.

Senator MacEachen: The April target is not necessarily in place now. It becomes irrelevant.

Senator Roblin: The man to answer that question is the Minister of Finance, not me.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—ABSENCE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a follow-up question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate in response to an earlier question raised by Senator Stewart. Senator Roblin said that Senator Stewart's assumptions were not correct. I should like to know on what basis the government leader is making that kind of affirmation when, on the one hand, earlier he said the matter of Her Excellency was a private matter; on the other hand, he is backhand turning down assumptions honourable senators are making in this chamber with respect to impoliteness offered to Her Excellency. Would it not be convenient for the Leader of the Government or his party leader once and for all to make a public statement with regard to this matter, in view of the fact that the Parliament of Canada consists of Her Excellency the Governor General, the Senate and the House of Commons? The Canadian public is not just confused but flabbergasted at the incident which took place surrounding the so-called Quebec summit. I would certainly expect—in fact, I would demand—that the government clear this matter up once and for all for the information of members of Parliament generally as well as for the general public.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend is correct in stating that Parliament consists of the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons, but he should go further and say that the executive advisers to the Queen or to Her Excellency the Governor General are members of the federal Cabinet, not Parliament itself. That is the way our system works. I have nothing further to say on this matter.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, a few moments ago the Leader of the Government was accusing Senator Stewart of counting angels on the head of a pin. Things are what they are because they are that way, and because the Constitution says they are that way, but surely, on an occasion as auspicious as the visit of a head of state, to have ignored Her Excellency is an insult to the whole institution of Parliament of which Her Majesty the Queen is a part, as well as to her representative in Canada.

● (1520)

I feel strongly that we are entitled to a fuller explanation—not excuses, but a downright explanation of what has taken place, in the circumstances. This is fundamental to the good operation of the whole institution.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is raising a matter that has been dealt with now for the third time. I give him the same answer as I gave the other questioners.

THE LATE KONSTANTIN CHERNENKO

GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION AT FUNERAL

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate on another matter of protocol.

Since he has said that the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons represent all of the key constitutional elements, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform the chamber whether all the constitutional elements of Parliament, including representatives of the Leader of the Opposition and the Senate, were invited to join the Prime Minister in paying respects to the late President Chernenko?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must correct my honourable friend. I said that the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons were the Parliament of Canada; I said nothing more and nothing less.

As to the question of what arrangements were made for the funeral of Mr. Chernenko, the former President of the U.S.S.R., I am unable to answer.

Senator Grafstein: As a supplementary question, may I advise the Leader of the Government that I read in the press that the Mother of Parliaments in England sent a delegation to the funeral, including representatives of the government, the opposition and other parties.

In order to determine what the future practices of this government will be, would the leader advise us whether senators or representatives of the opposition were invited to attend that funeral in Russia?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think you will find that every parliamentary body has its own rules and makes its own decisions in respect of these matters. When occasions such as this arise, the government makes a decision, and that is how these matters are settled.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—DECLARATION ON INTERNATIONAL SECURITY—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, we have not heard the last of the so-called Shamrock summit.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate inquire and report back to the Senate as to how many jobs will be lost in the Atlantic provinces because of the new agreement reached between the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada regarding the new radar stations?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that part of the agreement was specific with respect to the stations to be closed, not only those in New Brunswick, but those in other parts of the country as well.

Explicit arrangements were made so that the United States will share the costs incurred as a result of anyone losing his job in this particular connection.

Senator Thériault: I had thought, honourable senators, that I had asked a very simple question.

How many jobs will be lost at those sites? I do not expect the honourable Leader of the Government to have that answer with him today, because I suppose, like many others in this government, he does not care very much about the people in the Atlantic provinces, but will he bring that information to this chamber?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is being unfair in saying that some of us do not care about the Atlantic provinces. Of course, we do. They have the same rights and considerations as any other part of the country and, while no balance is perfectly equal, nevertheless, an effort is made to treat them fairly in all respects. We will continue to do that.

If my honourable friend will rephrase his question and ask me how many jobs are involved, I can get an answer for him and I will, but as to how many jobs will be lost, that is another question. But I would point out that it will be considerably less than the number of jobs that are there now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): That is the question he asked.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I have heard that kind of answer before.

I have heard it said in Miramichi, where I come from, that no jobs will be lost in St. Margaret's radar station which will be closed, but that the workers will be transferred to Chatham. However, I would tell my honourable friend that in Chatham the unemployment rate is about 40 per cent, which means, of course, that the workers in Miramichi will, in fact, lose their jobs as a result of the closing of the radar station.

My simple question is: How many jobs are involved and how many will be lost at the sites of those radar stations that are to be closed?

Senator Roblin: I would point out to my honourable friend that there are many isolated areas in the prairies where the situation is even worse than that in Miramichi because those people are farther from any developing job centre.

That is a problem which is most difficult to deal with, and that is why special arrangements are being made to do what can be done.

Is my honourable friend asking me how many jobs in New Brunswick are related to the stations to be closed?

Senator Thériault: Yes.

Senator Roblin: I will find out.

Senator Thériault: I was referring to New Brunswick and the Atlantic provinces.

Senator Roblin: I will give him the figures for all of Canada if he would like that.

Senator Thériault: I thought I asked a specific question. The Leader of the Government can talk about the prairies all he likes, but I am interested in Atlantic Canada right now.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend cannot take "yes" for an answer.

Senator Frith: He is not sure the "yes" was in response to his question.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to oral questions. When I come across a question asked by Senator Corbin, I will read it into the record, if he so wishes.

STATISTICS CANADA

RESTORATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The first delayed answer relates to a question asked by Senator Marsden on January 22, 1985 regarding Statistics Canada and the restoration of the 1986 census.

(The answer follows:)

In order to meet objectives of the Government, and achieve the $100 million saving over five years that would have been realized by cancelling the census, some economies must be implemented.

Statistics Canada will make major efforts in all of its programs to limit its expenditures and increase its revenues in line with market demands for statistical products and services. By having users bear a fairer share of the census costs, Statistics Canada will be able to continue to provide as wide a spectrum of products as can be reasonably resourced.

One of the Government's programs in support of academic and scholarly research is to make available free of charge federal government publications to Full Depository Libraries. Statistics Canada, including the Census, is a major participant in this program. Students are frequent users of this service.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

POSSIBILITY OF BUDGET CUTS IN ONTARIO

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Corbin on February 14, 1985 regarding the possibility of National Film Board reductions in Ontario.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I should like to have that answer read aloud.

Senator Roblin: I will be glad to oblige my friend.

The answer is that the present restructuring effort being undertaken by the NFB must be understood as a response to both its new mandate and the recent budget reductions in its operations. As you are aware, the Film and Video Policy outlined, in 1984, a new role for the NFB as a world-class centre of excellence in film and video production and as a national training centre for advanced research, development and training in the art and technology of film and video. This new role will involve significant changes in production and distribution activities, as well as the reallocation of internal resources.

The policy required the NFB to product a five-year operational plan showing how it will restructure its activities to free up, over five years, $10 million in constant 1983 dollars, for reallocation into its operational budget to support production, research, development and training activities. This restructuring of activities should significantly benefit and strengthen the regional offices in Canada as the NFB undertakes to decentralize its operations and give more autonomy to the regional offices. As part of this restructuring effort, the NFB is presently re-examining all of its francophone operations outside of Quebec with a view to determining, through the benefit of a consultative process, how to effectively address the needs of those francophones in Ontario, and elsewhere, with the limited amount of resources that will be available to the NFB during the next few years. The Department of Communications is presently waiting to receive the NFB's finalized five-year operational plan outlining how the Board plans to implement this new role.

As well, the NFB's budget was reduced last November, by $1.5 million contributing to the restraint efforts announced by Finance Minister Wilson. It is anticipated that the NFB will sustain this diminution through a restructuring effort that is complementary to those efforts presently being undertaken as a result of its new mandate, and that the budgetary reductions will be implemented with a sensitivity to regional and minority interests.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Denis on January 24, 1985 regarding the reported statement by the President of the Treasury Board.

(The answer follows:)

No, Mr. de Cotret had no specific figure in mind.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TRADEMARK LEGISLATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Godfrey on February 5, 1985 regarding trademark legislation.

(The answer follows:)

During the 1970's, there was substantial progress made on revised trademark legislation and, after considerable study and public consultation, Bill S-11 was introduced into the Senate. The Bill was fairly non-controversial and had generated widespread consensus but unfortunately died on the Order Paper.

However, there are other pieces of legislation which require immediate revision and are at this time a priority for the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The Minister believes in consultation before legislation is introduced, so this bill cannot be introduced at this time in either the Senate or the House of Commons.

Nevertheless, Consumer and Corporate Affairs continues to consider proposals for revision of trademarks legislation. These are being considered in relation to the current international trading environment to see what changes, if any, should be made to the proposals originally put forward in 1979.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

CANADA-BELGIUM SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENT—DELAY IN TABLING

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to another question asked by Senator Godfrey on February 6, 1985 regarding the delay in tabling the Canada-Belgium Social Security Agreement.

(The answer follows:)

The Old Age Security (OAS) Act requires that an Order in Council declaring an international Social Security Agreement to be in force together with the agreement itself be laid before Parliament for thirty sitting days.

The Canada/Belgium Agreement was originally tabled in the House of Commons and the Senate on May 30, 1984. Because Parliament was dissolved on June 29, 1984, the Agreement only laid before Parliament for twenty-two sitting days. Ordinarily, the Agreement would have been re-tabled at the beginning of the following session of Parliament. However, since an election was called and a new government elected, it was necessary to obtain a new Order in Council to declare the Canada/Belgium Agreement in force.

This new Order and the Agreement were tabled in Parliament on February 5, 1985, within fifteen days of its making, in accordance with the OAS Act.

It should be noted that the Agreement will not come into force i.e., benefits paid, until both Canada and Belgium have completed the ratification procedures required by their respective laws. Since Belgium has not as yet completed its legislative requirements, the date of the tabling of the Canada/Belgium Agreement has in no way delayed the actual implementation of the Agreement.

The above factors, therefore, account for the length of time involved between the signing of the Agreement and the date of the tabling of the Agreement.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—FREIGHT RATE INCREASES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on February 12, 1985, by the Honourable Eymard G. Corbin regarding freight rate increases in the Atlantic Provinces.

[Senator Roblin.]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: I should like to hear that one too, please.

Senator Roblin: The answer is that in his economic statement on November 8, 1984, the Minister of Finance laid out a strategy for promoting growth and job creation in Canada. The need to remove obstacles to growth by reducing government regulatory intervention in the economy was stressed in this statement. In this context, the government decided to terminate the administered prices program. Inasmuch as this decision was based on broad national economic considerations, no specific studies were done to assess intra-regional or transport related consequences.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

ALLEGED FREEZE ON PROGRAMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is to a question raised in the Senate on February 14, 1985 by the Honourable H.A. Olson, regarding an alleged freeze on government programs.

(The answer follows:)

The speech of the Deputy Prime Minister is self-explanatory.

With regard to details of government programs, some have been announced (by the Minister of Manpower, President of the Treasury Board, Minister of Defence and others) and are on the record.

When details of further programs are available, they will be announced in the usual manner.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I wonder if I may have the indulgence of the Senate for a moment, in my capacity as chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

A cursory examination of the order paper for today persuaded me that today's sitting of the Senate would last considerably less than two hours, and on that basis I confidently went ahead and suggested 4 p.m. as the starting time for a meeting of the committee today.

As it now appears that the Senate may be sitting past 4 o'clock, we would need the permission of the Senate to have the committee sit while the Senate is sitting.

The meeting scheduled for 4 p.m. today is an important one as we are beginning our pre-study of Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Bill, with the witness today being the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

I am therefore asking for leave to revert to Notices of Motions, following which, if leave is granted, the Deputy Leader of the Government will propose the necessary motion to permit the committee to meet at 4 o'clock to commence its pre-study of Bill C-15.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ENTITLED "CANADA'S TERRITORIAL AIR DEFENCE"—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Second Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence entitled: "Canada's Territorial Air Defence," tabled in the Senate on January 23, 1985.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I am more than pleased to participate in the debate on the report of the committee entitled "Canada's Territorial Air Defence," which was tabled in the Senate on January 23, 1985, by Senator Lafond, the chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence.

I apologize for the delay in my making my response to the report. However, that delay afforded us the opportunity to hear the wide and varied reaction to the report by the experts in this field. Judging from the positive analyses, particularly as to recent events, we should be satisfied to a high degree that the committee made a realistic contribution toward Canada's future military planning.

I rise also to pay tribute to the chairman of this committee, Senator Paul Lafond. I do so more emphatically on this occasion because in this instance he accepted the daring challenge to look into futuristic aspects of military thinking, and he did so as a result of his forward-looking appreciation of the scenario toward which Canada's military must be projected in concert with our NATO allies and our NORAD partner to the south.

It is interesting to note that Senator Lafond's thinking, in initiating the study of Canada's Territorial Air Defence some two years ago, is only now the subject of debate in the other place, more as a political reaction to the leadership of our military commanders and government than to formulate the policy which our country should follow.

The report is about global stability and the concept of deterrence as much as it is about the status of the Canadian Forces, as was pointed out in the previous reports of the committee.

The threat to Canada is not a direct one, but we have to be realistic. Our country is part of, and located on, the North American continent. Whether we like it or not, there is a threat to our country by virtue of the fact that geography has placed us in the direct line of fire in any conflict that may break out between the two superpowers. It is therefore Canada's duty and responsibility to make a contribution to our allies, most particularly in cooperation with the United States, and to re-inject some sense of military preparedness commensurate with the size, population and wealth of our country, to ensure that we are able to protect our citizens and our nation.

Senator Lafond expressed very adequately the focus of our attention, which was the approach that Canada should take toward territorial air defence until the turn of the century, with a view to preserving our sovereignty and continuing to fulfil our commitments to our allies.

He made the very strong and realistic observation on our main thrust to review the developments of the threats, and the measures taken to counter them since the 1950s, as well as the awareness of the growing obsolescence, the inefficiency and the cost of the systems now in place, and the options available to Canada in seeking their modernization.

We have recognized a need for Canada to maintain defence arrangements with the United States that will permit this country to promote its own interests and policies, as well as to participate effectively in the common defence effort.

The report, honourable senators, faces head-on the issues which will confront Canada into the next century. As set out in Recommendation 8, it recommends that the Canadian government define its objectives in North American aerospace defence as clearly as possible and concentrate on those aspects that are essentially defensive in nature.

While the report has probably been overtaken by events which have taken place over the past few weeks, it is pleasing to note that the government's recent action to take some immediate steps to meet our NATO commitments follows the recommendations made by the committee as a result of its study of Manpower and the Maritime Command. One positive step that we endorse is the action taken to increase the strength of the Canadian Forces stationed in Europe by an additional 1200, an initiative that will augment four Canadian mechanized brigade groups in Lahr, Germany, and increase the level of preparedness.

A second positive measure is that to designate an infantry battalion group in Canada to fulfil our commitment to the Allied Command Europe Mobile Force, which is designated as reinforcements in case of a crisis.

It is important to note that this will be a separate force from the CAST group, the Canadian Air Sea Transportable group, committed to reinforcing northern Norway.

While these steps are commendable, they beg the question of where these troops will come from, lest we further weaken our present strength to fulfil our Canadian commitments. I hope that the committee's recommendation in its Manpower report, as well as Recommendation No. 10 in this report, to increase Canadian Forces strength, will be implemented as a priority.

We are approaching the deadline when our government must take up an option to purchase an additional 20 CF-18 fighter aircraft by April 1 to continue to meet our operational commitments. I hope that this will come to pass, if not already agreed to, fulfilling another of the recommendations in our report, recommendation No. 6, that being that this option be fully exercised in order to cover attrition and round out existing capabilities, if all current air commitments of the Canadian Forces in Europe and North America are to be maintained.

The Minister of National Defence, as many senators are aware, announced last week in the other place that the Prime Minister, with the President of the United States, concluded an agreement for the establishment of an improved warning system around the perimeter of the continental mainland, a system which will be capable of detecting aircraft and cruise missiles penetrating the warning perimeter at all altitudes.

● (1540)

Honourable senators are also aware of the political sensitivity that is so apparent in the other place and in some circles across the country. The simplest way to describe the content of that debate is to read an extract from the letter to our chairman from a clear-thinking retired military expert. In commenting on our report, he said:

It is unfortunate that you do not have some means of carrying on after a report is printed, when the House or media debates are obviously misleading for the Canadian public and cry out for some explanatory note from a recognized authority.

He went on to say:

I have in mind, as an example, the current misunderstanding of the catch phrase "Star Wars" which has come to mean various things to various people, depending on their intentions. The subject has become very confusing and misleading for the public, and a simple statement of definition is required to clarify the subject.

Honourable senators, the military space program contemplated in the report meets the requirements set out by the report that Canada's contribution to aerospace defence should be limited to activities that are essentially defensive in nature. That is contained in our recommendation No. 8. This also is a point that deserves emphasis.

Some members of the press have established a tie between this Canadian military space program and the American Strategic Defense Initiative, SDI. There is absolutely no ground for doing so. SDI contemplates systems that would be able to destroy incoming missiles. The program suggested in the report contemplates nothing more than surveillance and communication satellites which would have absolutely no war-fighting capabilities. Obviously they could conceivably have a limited usefulness should hostilities break out.

[Senator Marshall.]

The recommendations made by the committee with regard to the modernization of the surveillance system around North America—that is, the north warning system, the coastal radars, the AWACs, the deployment bases, the OTHBs—are based on an analysis which established beyond any doubt that existing systems are inadequate to provide the sort of warning which we need today and will need in the future.

As one of our witnesses, a very respected general, said:

Any "self-respecting nation . . . has to be able to find out what is happening in its airspace and to bring about a cessation of those activities which it considers harmful or improper. Unless we are prepared to say that we don't care who flies into or through our airspace—in the North or elsewhere—we must have a leak-proof surveillance system at least around the periphery of our country.

Honourable senators, I will not bother to repeat the description of the present warning system in detail and the proposed modernized system in greater detail, but I think it is important to place on the record the following sequence of events. For example, the present system was designed in the 1950s, and, as explained in the report, it is outdated, outmoded and does not meet the needs of the changing threat.

I would like to underline that the proposed modernized system is the result of considerable joint study and discussion by the defence staffs of both Canada and the United States and has been going on for some eight years. The first announcement of research to be undertaken into what has become known as Star Wars was not made until March 23, 1983. It is therefore obvious that factors whereby there was need to review the DEW Line were being discussed and contemplated long before President Reagan set out on his Strategic Defense Initiative; and it is worthwhile emphasizing that talks between Canada and the U.S. on the very intricate details were well advanced before any mention was made about Star Wars, and, as a reliable columnist expressed in a newspaper on March 18:

Only for those with very, very short memories will it be necessary to add that another government was in power in 1983, including some of the same people who lately have been crying to the heavens that star wars is the one, the sole sinister, reason for any interest in the DEW Line.

He went on to say that it is necessary to recall that it was also the previous government who undertook to make available Canadian landscape, approximately the terrain and temperature of the Soviet Union, to test air-launched cruise missiles, not for NATO, as was said, but for the Strategic Air Command.

The parliamentary argument about Canada's participating with the United States in renewing the DEW Line has been long on passion but short on reason. If the United States succeeded in perfecting a defensive system in space, the Soviet Union would have two choices: To throw in its hand or to seek improved ways of striking back as it could. Against the latter, an improved DEW Line probably would be useful. But then that improved way of striking back would probably involve, in the first instance, the use of air-launched cruise missiles which it will develop, if it has not done so already, without waiting for Star Wars.

Honourable senators, the other point that should be made is the fact that by the time the research is completed on Strategic Defense Initiatives, SDI, which is envisaged by President Reagan, likely into the next century, the north warning system will have existed at that time for 15 to 20 years. At that time a new technology will demand further updating of our joint surveillance and detection system because of retaliatory systems that may come about at that time.

Honourable senators, whether by accident or design, the Department of National Defence seems to have followed some of our recommendations; but I feel that we should stress three others that I have not mentioned. The first is that the committee urges the Government of Canada to undertake without delay the planned defence review. Canadian defence policy must be defined for this in the last decade of the century, and the Canadian people and our allies should be informed of its aim and substance.

Recommendation No. 2 is that the committee recommends that when the review of the NORAD agreement, due to occur in 1986, takes place, Canada should explore the possibility of renewing the agreement for a period of 15 years until the turn of the century, with provision for review every five years.

Recommendation No. 9 is that the committee notes the record of inadequate government-industry co-operation in the aerospace field in Canada and therefore recommends that the government should develop an effective immediate and long-range industrial strategy for air space, aimed at maximizing long-term industrial benefits, developing new technologies and expanding skilled and other employment.

Honourable senators, I conclude by joining Senator Lafond in expressing appreciation for the continuing efforts and the attention of all members of the committee, particularly for their dedication to the objective of the committee. I am happy to note that the committee will be continuing its study into other phases of air command, which, I am sure, will be welcome news to honourable senators, and I commend the Leader of the Government, Senator Roblin, for making that possible.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this order is considered as having been debated.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Your Honour, I believe that Senator Yuzyk may wish to speak on the report. Possibly the Deputy Leader of the Government could adjourn the debate.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT
FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1985

Wednesday, March 20, 1985

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985, were referred, does, in obedience to the Order of Reference of March 12, 1985, report as follows:

The Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses from the Treasury Board: Mr. J. L. Manion, Secretary; Mr. J. Brophy, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch; Mr. H. Cocks, Assistant Director, Crown Corporations Directorate.

Supplementary Estimates (C) totalling $1.9 billion represents the last regular Supplementary Estimates for the current fiscal year. These Estimates, together with the 1984-85 Main Estimates of $96.5 billion, Supplementary Estimates (A) of $0.3 billion and Supplementary Estimates (B) of $6.2 billion bring the total 1984-85 estimates to $104.9 billion.

Of the $1.9 billion in these Estimates, an amount of $1.2 billion is for payments already authorized by statutes, hence this amount is non-discretionary. The remaining $0.7 requires approval by Parliament through an appropriations bill.

Treasury Board supplied the Committee with a list of thirty-eight $1 votes included in Supplementary Estimates (C) which is attached as an appendix to this report. The $1 vote which gives permanent authority for Petro Canada to borrow money from the private sector interested Senators. The Committee questioned whether a $1 vote, approved through an appropriations act, could provide such permanent authority and would not require renewal each time Petro Canada sought to borrow funds from the private sector.

The Committee questioned the witnesses with respect to the Department of National Defence (DND) item of $147.6 million and its relationship to the purchase of Canadair 600's and 601's by DND. The witnesses were unable to provide the Committee with the price that DND would pay for each plane. At one stage Senators were told that the $147.6 million was for the purchase of the planes themselves and that additional servicing costs would be borne by DND from within its budget. At another stage they were told that $140 million of the $147.6 million was to be allotted for the purchase of the planes whereas the remaining $7.6 million was for other equipment. To further confuse the matter, it was stated that the $140 million could represent the price of between 8 and 12 planes.

On the matter of the cost of servicing these 8 to 12 planes, the Committee voiced concern over the fact that these ancillary costs would be absorbed internally within the DND budget. The Committee felt that when funds are appropriated for a specific purpose, those funds should not be used for any other purpose such as servicing a new fleet of planes, without requesting parliamentary approval for their reallocation. The Committee felt that Parliament was entitled to know the price of the planes before the government was committed to their purchase.

The $150 million to the Havilland as an investment in equity was also discussed by the Committee. The witnesses indicated that with this $150 million, the total investment in equity to de Havilland by the government is $650 million. The Committee further learned that the intention of the government was to reduce the debt level of de Havilland to zero and to keep it there. This situation was compared to that of Canadair when the debts of the company were transferred to the Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. leaving Canadair Ltd., debt free as of April 1, 1984. The difference between Canadair Ltd. and de Havilland is that Canadair may not borrow any new funds unless approved by the Minister of Finance, whereas de Havilland, under previous authority, may continue to borrow up to $100 million with full financial guarantee by the government to the creditor(s).

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

APPENDIX
LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES
INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1984-85

The 39 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates are listed in Appendix I by ministry and agency along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates.

These One Dollar Votes are grouped below into categories according to their prime purpose. The votes are also identified in Appendix I, according to these categories. The category for each vote has been designated by an "X". In those instances where a vote falls into more than one category, the prime category is designated by an "X" and other categories by an "*".

A Twenty-five votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)

B Seven votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)

C Two votes which amend provisions of previous Appropriation Acts. (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II.)

D Three votes of which two votes seek increases in the drawing authority for Revolving Funds and one vote amends the purposes of a Revolving Fund. (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II.)

E Two miscellaneous votes, one to clarify the borrowing power of Petro Canada and the other to inform Parliament of the amount of the actual 1983-84 deficit for the Canada Post Corporation. (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II.)

APPENDIX II

ADDITIONAL EXPLANATIONSCategory C — To amend provisions of previous Appropriation ActsRegional Industrial Expansion

Vote 7c—Authority is requested to amend Industry, Trade and Commerce Vote 6a, Appropriation Act No. 1, 1980-81, as extended by Industry, Trade and Commerce Vote 6e, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1981-82 so as to permit the Minister of Finance, on behalf of Her Majesty, to enter into agreements with the lenders to whom Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. has debt obligations guaranteed by Her Majesty pursuant to the said Votes for purpose to issue, within the meaning of Part IV of the Financial Administration Act, the relevant securities therefor.

Explanation—By March 31, 1985 the debts of Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. will approach its limit, guaranteed by Canada, of $1.35 billion and Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. has no source of funds to service or repay this debt. Separate authority is sought in these Estimates for a budgetary payment of $300 million to Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. to enable the outstanding debt principal to be paid down to approximately its March 31, 1984 level of $1.06 billion. This Vote seeks authority for the Minister of Finance to negotiate with the lenders for the purpose of assuming the remaining debt on behalf of Her Majesty. This will enable more efficient management and disposal of the debt; will eliminate the need for future vote funding relating to the debt, and will ultimately enable Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. to be wound up.

Transport

Vote 36c—Authority is requested to amend Transport Vote 10a, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1975 so as to enable the Minister to amend certain joint venture agreements related to the Canarctic Shipping Company Limited and the Vessel "M.V. Arctic" in order to permit the upgrading of the Vessel.

Explanation—Authority is required to permit the Minister of Transport to amend the joint venture agreement of December, 1975 with private shipping companies so as to permit structural modifications which would upgrade the Vessel "M.V. Arctic from class 2 to class 3 and to provide for the alternations and rebuilding of the Vessel as a tanker/dry bulk carrier instead of a cargo vessel.

Category D — To authorize increases in the drawing authority for two Revolving Funds and amend a third

Communications

Vote 2c—Authority is requested to increase the drawing authority of the Government Telecommunications Agency Revolving Fund from $15 million to $19 million.

Explanation—This Revolving Fund was included under the Adjustment of Accounts Act (1980). Section 33 of that Act includes authority to amend certain sections of the Act through an Appropriation Act, including Section 23 which deals with the Authority for making payments out of the Revolving Fund which specifies the amount of the drawdown authority.

This proposed increase in the drawing authority is required to provide the Revolving Fund with sufficient working capital to finance 40 days of operations thus reducing the risk of incurring surcharges by the telecommunications carriers for the late payment of invoices and to finance increased expenditures requirements.

The spending authority for this Fund was previously increased from $13 million to $15 million by Vote 2c, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1983-84.

Public Works

Vote 6c—Authority is requested to increase the drawing authority of the Construction Service Revolving Fund from $150 million to $300 million.

Explanation—This Revolving Fund was included under the Adjustment of Accounts Act (1980). Section 33 of that Act includes authority to amend certain sections of the Act through an Appropriation Act, including Section 26 which deals with the authority for making payments out of the Revolving Fund and which specifies the amount of the drawdown authority.

This proposed increase in the drawing authority is required to provide the Revolving Fund with sufficient working capital to finance operations until collections can be made of its Accounts Receivable. This increase in drawing authority for the Revolving Fund does not result in a change to the gross expenditures of government, but rather a change in the way these expenditures are displayed to achieve better visibility and accountability to Parliament, and also imposes on Public Works a requirement to manage its costs to the revenues collected. This drawing authority was previously increased by Vote 6b, Appropriation Act No. 3, 1983-84.

Transport

Vote 76c—Authority is requested to amend Section 31 of the Adjustments of Accounts Act so as provide for capital appropriations and expenditures.

Explanation—The Self-Supporting Airports and Associated Ground Services Revolving Fund was included under the Adjustment of Accounts Act (1980). Section 33 of that Act includes authority to amend sections of the Act through an Appropriation Act. It is therefore proposed to repeal the current Subsections 31(1) and (2) and to substitute therefore authority to make operating and capital expenditures and to expend appropriations for the purposes of this Section. The current wording of the Act does not provide specific authority for airport construction, nor does it allow for the new financial arrangements approved in the reconstitution of this Revolving Fund. In order to accommodate these new financial arrangements authority is added to the Adjustment of Accounts Act to allow for specifically voted appropriations for the Revolving Fund expenditure.

Category E — Miscellaneous

Energy, Mines and Resources—Petro-Canada

Vote 66c—Pursuant to para. 110(b) of the Financial Administration Act, specific authorization is sought for Petro-Canada to borrow money otherwise than from the Crown.

Explanation—The recent (Sept. 1, 1984) amendments to the Financial Administration Act concerning Crown corporations include a requirement, for agent corporations, that agent corporations borrowing money otherwise than from the Crown be both: (a) empowered by an Act of Parliament; and (b) specifically authorized by an Act of Parliament, including an Appropriation Act (S.110).

The requirements were included to ensure that Crown corporations created under the Canada Business Corporations Act (CBCA) that were borrowing from the private sector in the name of the Crown (i.e. as an agent corporation) were specifically authorized by Parliament to do so. A corporation created under the CBCA is empowered by that Act to borrow money (requirement (a) above). In the case of an agent Crown corporation, however, that general power is now insufficient and additional parliamentary authorization specific to a particular corporation is required (requirement (b) above).

In the case of Petro-Canada, although created by a special Act rather than under the CBCA, it is still subject to S.110 as an agent corporation. There is some uncertainty as to whether the borrowing provisions in its special act confer on Petro-Canada both of the requirements of S.110. To alleviate that uncertainty, it is thus proposed to clarify the matter through this Supplementary Estimate's Appropriations Act.

As noted, the legislative authority to include an item of this nature in Estimates is contained in para. 110(b) of the FAA.

National Revenue—Canada Post Corporation

Vote 21c—To report the actual excess of operating and income charges over revenues for the Canada Post Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984.

Explanation—In accordance with section 29(1) of the Canada Post Corporation Act (CPC Act), the Minister of Finance during 1983-84 placed at the disposal of the Corporation sufficient monies to enable the Corporation to meet all its operating and income charges during the year. Section 29(3) of the CPC Act requires that the amount placed at the disposal of the Corporation is to be included, in the form of a deficit appropriation item, in the next Estimates laid before Parliament thereafter. Since the amount placed at the disposal of the Corporation has already been reported as expenditures of the Government in the 1983-84 fiscal year, it cannot be voted as an expenditure in 1984-85. Accordingly, in order to conform with the intent of the Act, a $1 voted item has been included in the Supplementaries to inform Parliament of the actual amount of the Corporation's deficit for 1983-84. The actual 1984-85 deficit will be reported as a $1 item in 1985-86 Supplementary Estimates, again in accordance with Section 29(3) of the Act.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 21, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Registrar General of Canada showing that Richard J. Doyle has been summoned to the Senate.

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and was seated.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle of Toronto, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Duff Roblin, P.C., and Hon. Lowell Murray.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the committee's fifth report approving the budget of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 26th March, 1985, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps, as is sometimes the custom, the Deputy Leader of the Government and house leader will let us know what we might anticipate for business next week.

Senator Doody: Yes, honourable senators. We have been assured that at least one bill, Bill C-23, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, will be introduced in the Senate. There is some urgency respecting that bill in that the loan limit for that particular piece of legislation expires on March 31. It is obviously imperative that the legislation be enacted to permit the Small Businesses Loans Act to continue. If we receive that bill on Friday of this week or Monday of next week, we will be in a position to deal with it on Tuesday.

It is possible that we will have the Fisheries bill, although that is not certain. I have also been told that the bill relating to the Criminal Code amendments may be before the Senate next week. That bill is moving along very nicely. I have been told that it will probably be out of committee, and having gone through the report stage and having been given third reading, will be referred to the Senate sometime next week, although I cannot guarantee that. I have been told that we can reasonably expect to be dealing with that bill.

There is also in the offing the appropriations bills for the end of this fiscal year: an interim supply bill to look after the first three months of the coming year; and, of course, the bill respecting supplementary estimates (C). If all of those things come to pass, then we will have a busy week, quite apart from the many committee meetings that are scheduled. Most of the committees have a fairly full slate, what with the pre-studies and the legislation that will be coming before us. Of course, there are also several committees working diligently on preparing reports on the studies they have completed. Therefore, I anticipate a rather full schedule for next week.

● (1410)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Has the deputy leader received any indication from the opposition that they will be ready to deal with the bills if we receive them?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Which opposition?

Hon. H. A. Olson: How long do you want us to wait?

Senator Doody: I have had no indication that they are not prepared to deal with the bills. They have given me no indication as to how long it will take them.

Senator Frith: It depends upon what one means by "deal with," of course.

Senator Flynn: Are they prepared to adjourn indefinitely the consideration of the bills?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, speaking for the opposition, we are ready to deal with legislation and we make no promises in advance any more than any other previous opposition would have done.

Senator Flynn: If you were to deal with the legislation the way we dealt with it when we were in opposition, no problems would arise.

Senator Frith: I will look that point up and I think you will have some surprises.

Senator Flynn: You have a short memory.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): It would help if we had some legislation.

Hon. Charles McElman: Was Senator Flynn speaking in a leadership capacity?

Senator Flynn: No, in an ex-leadership capacity.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, could the Deputy Leader of the Government indicate what our schedule is going to be for the next two or three weeks? Those of us who travel to and from Ottawa are faced with the problem of making reservations in advance, and usually there is a bit of a shemozzle with confirmations during the Easter and Christmas periods. Is there any definite information regarding the adjournment for the Easter break?

Senator Doody: The intention is to adjourn on Wednesday, April 3. It is hoped that following that we shall have the Easter break, although I cannot guarantee that at this point. I should tell Senator Rowe that I have spoken to members in the other place and they have told me to tell him that his reservations are confirmed! Although most of these people are soul mates of mine and have been for quite a period of time, they do not seem to take the honourable senator's travel plans as seriously as I do. Our intention is to try to have the week off following Easter, but we will have to see what happens.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, yesterday the Prime Minister told us that the next budget would contain even deeper cuts than those contained in the November statement. My question to the Leader of the Government is: Is it the intention of the government at the economic meeting, which is to commence this evening, to discuss with the groups called from various parts of Canada the nature of the cuts that will be proposed in the budget?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think my honourable friend is somewhat confused as to the purpose of the meeting that is being held over the weekend. It is not a government meeting but a meeting which has been organized at the request of the government by the private sector, and the private sector is being encouraged to deal with 10 or 20 points in connection with the economy of the country. The participants, not only those who are sitting around the table but also those who are going to make the statements, have been selected by the private sector committee and include broad representation from every source you can think of.

The government's role is simply that of listener. We are there to hear what is to be advanced by the various interests represented at the conference. There will be no formal resolutions of any kind, as far as I am aware, but an effort will be made to discern the largest degree of consensus that may be possible at the meeting. It is not a forum for the government to discuss its policy; it is a forum for the government to listen to what other people think it should be doing.

Senator MacEachen: Am I being told that it is not the intention of the Prime Minister or other ministers to lay before this economic meeting the views of the government as to the state of the economy and steps that might be taken to improve it?

Senator Roblin: What will take place at the conference is a statement by the Prime Minister, which will be an opening statement only.

After that, the conference will be in the hands of the participants so that representatives of the private sector may express their views as to the state of the economy and what measures they think would be most productive.

Senator MacEachen: In view of the fact, honourable senators, that the Prime Minister yesterday denounced unilateralism as a policy, does the Leader of the Government think it appropriate that drastic cuts should take place possibly next month without giving any indication to the cultural groups who have been invited to attend the conference that a further sword is to be held over their heads? Does he believe that is an appropriate way to pursue the process of consultation, that is, to have in mind major cuts and not tell anyone about them?

Senator Roblin: I find it most strange to hear that argument advanced by my honourable friend because, during his period in office, he and his colleagues were quite willing to make decisions on that basis.

We are holding no swords over anyone's head. We will listen to the cultural groups who will be among those present at this conference, as they give the rationale for their views. Those views will be given very serious consideration when the budgetary proposals are developed.

Senator MacEachen: We are now told that the purpose of the conference is to educate the government and that, obviously, it has no views that it is prepared to disclose to the conference participants.

The Leader of the Government told us yesterday that he would not be among the listeners at the conference. I regret that because his absence from the Quebec summit made our exchange yesterday less productive than it might have been if the Leader of the Government had been in Quebec.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Empty words.

Senator MacEachen: There were major areas in which he was unprepared, understandably, to answer questions.

I would ask the Leader of the Government: Would he reconsider his decision about attending the economic meeting so that we may get some information in the Senate after the meeting is over?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend will have to recognize that our attitude toward the development of policy is much different from that employed by the previous administration. We intend to listen. We intend to have the widest area of public consultation we possibly can. That is one of the reasons this conference is being held. It is part of a deliberate approach to the development of policy and to enable the people who are going to be affected by it to have the widest possible input while decisions are under review.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Now, about the question?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend had a considerable preamble to his question; he must allow me to have a similar right in my reply.

Senator Frith: Now can we get to the question?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend will be patient, we might get to the question. I will not be hustled by him. I am not sure of what I will say, so I would ask him to wait a moment or two.

It is perfectly true that I was not at the Quebec conference; even if I had been, I would not have been a party to the discussions between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States. Although my friend flatters me with the assumption that had I been there I would be able to tell him a little more than I did yesterday, that is a false assumption.

I take to heart his suggestion that perhaps I should be at the conference tomorrow. In fact, so persuasive is he that I am able to tell him that I will be there.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: That is an expression of confidence in me that is not often expressed by those on the other side of the chamber. I take what little comfort I can from it.

Senator Frith: Take it that way for now, but do not press it.

Senator Roblin: It is precious little comfort.

The full proceedings of the conference are open to the public in the sense that the television cameras will be there at the plenary sessions and perhaps at some of the committees as well. I have undertaken—and I repeat that undertaking—that

I will collect for this body all the papers that are presented and I will see that they are made available to senators so that we will have the fullest possible view.

I warn my friends that they will find every conceivable view with respect to the economy, because the nature of this gathering and the qualifications of the people who are being asked to participate indicate that it is going to be, by no means, a controlled, muzzled or directed meeting. It will be one that will provide a forum for all the various viewpoints that will be presented there.

Senator MacEachen: It is a step ahead, honourable senators, that the Leader of the Government has accepted the suggestion to attend.

I have another suggestion for him on which I hope he will act. A member of the opposition in the House of Commons is being given a place at the conference, and I wonder whether the same courtesy could be extended to a member of the opposition in the Senate, who may be able to attend and observe the proceedings without relying entirely upon television and radio.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Would you understand it?

Senator Roblin: I do not think it is possible.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government has said it will not be possible to include a member of the opposition in the Senate at the economic meeting.

That is regrettable. I am not going to beg for a place, but maybe the Leader of the Government would explain to us why the Senate is being treated in this way, whereby it is not possible to create one seat for a member of the opposition. While he is reflecting upon his answer, perhaps I could ask him one more question and then let him get prepared for the meeting.

• (1420)

Senator Roblin: One question at a time, please.

Senator MacEachen: Yesterday I asked about the budget date and I was unable to extract from the Leader of the Government any precision as to the date of the budget. We know the Minister of Finance has stated that this is the last set of consultations before the presentation of the budget. We also know that officials of the Department of Finance have stated that it is unlikely that any of the comments made at the conference can be considered in the budget preparation, so they will not be reflected in the budget.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us when the budget date is? Yesterday Mr. Wilson, the Minister of Finance, said that the conference will be the end of his pre-budget consultations, adding that any good ideas that emerged could well find their way into his budget, expected in late April or early May. I was also made aware that the Prime Minister, according to a quotation reporting his remarks, "talked about government expenditures which were dealt with on November 8 and will be dealing with again in the April budget." Which date is correct? Can the Leader of the Government tell me today whether it is an April budget, as the Prime Minister said, or a budget possibly in May, as stated by the Minister of Finance? If he cannot tell me today, will he undertake to find out and tell us next Tuesday?

Senator Roblin: The first thing I should like to say on that rather involved question is that I hope the Deputy Leader of the Opposition will allow me the same licence, to explain my answer in the manner in which the question was extended, if I may, with his permission.

Senator Frith: So far.

Senator Roblin: That is very good. I am obliged to you.

I can say to the Leader of the Opposition, on the question whether or not a member of the opposition will be able to attend this conference, I made certain inquiries. As a result of my inquiries, I was told that there was, unfortunately, no possibility of that. While I cannot—

Senator Frith: "No room at the inn."

Senator Roblin: While I cannot be positive that I am correct in this statement, my impression is that this was a decision of the organizing committee. I must hedge on that statement because I am not absolutely sure of it, but that is my impression.

I did anticipate the question. In fact, I anticipated my friend all along the line. I anticipated his question as to whether I should go or not, and I settled that before he raised the matter again today. I also—

Senator MacEachen: I am glad I am keeping you thinking.

Senator Roblin: I am glad you do, because I enjoy the stimulation.

Senator MacEachen: I thought so.

Senator Roblin: It makes the blood run in the veins.

I also anticipated his question respecting the attendance at the conference of members of the opposition. I would like to have seen a member of the opposition in the Senate in attendance, and I am sorry that I have not been able to arrange that.

As for the conference itself, the honourable gentleman who just spoke quoted the Minister of Finance as saying that it was quite possible that any good ideas coming out of this conference would be included in the budget. I am glad he did, because that indicates that we are taking it seriously. It is a fact that that is the case, and I am glad that the Minister of Finance has made that clear and I am glad that my honourable friend has made reference to it.

As to the date of the budget, the general assumption has been that it will be in the month of April. I am hopeful that that will be the case. But I have to tell my honourable friend frankly that, to the best of my knowledge, the precise date has not yet been set, and until it is, obviously no announcement can be made.

Senator MacEachen: I understand that it is not possible to have the precise date. The Prime Minister, I think, has put the situation clearly in stating that the budget is expected to be brought down in April. I want to know whether the Prime Minister is speaking for the government when he says that it will be in April, or whether the Minister of Finance is doing so when he says that it may be in May. That is all. Who is right?

Senator Roblin: I think that I would have to say that the Prime Minister speaks with the most authority on behalf of the government.

Senator MacEachen: The most representative.

Senator Roblin: That is his statement at the present time. But that does not alter what I have said, that being that the date has not yet been set. As a result, one cannot be too precise about it at the moment.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I am afraid you confused me when you said, in reply to an earlier question from Senator MacEachen, that the conference that is being held this weekend is not a government conference but a conference of the private sector. Can you tell me how that conference is to be financed? Are the taxpayers of Canada paying for this conference, or is it being financed by the private sector?

Senator Roblin: I think I made it perfectly clear in my previous comments in respect of this conference that it is a conference that was initiated by the government. It is a conference that is being held at the initiative of the government, and the government is funding the conference in all respects. The actual organization of the conference, however, in terms of who should be invited to attend and the subjects to be discussed, and the way in which the discussions are to be carried out, is not something over which the government exercised any control. That responsibility was remitted to the private sector committee, a committee headed by Mr. Stanley Hartt of Montreal, an individual who enjoys wide respect and an individual who, in my humble judgment, has done a fine job in organizing this conference.

Senator Marsden: A supplementary, if I may. Can you tell me, then, what guidelines the government gave to Mr. Hartt and his committee in terms of who should be represented at this conference?

Senator Roblin: That is a matter that was left to Mr. Hartt's good judgment.

Senator Frith: And he decided that there should be no opposition senators in attendance.

Senator Marsden: It is quite clear from an examination of the guest list that while the conference will hear a great deal from organized workers through the representations of the CLC, and so forth, there will be little or no representation from the over 50 per cent of Canadian workers who are not represented by a union. Can you tell me how it will be that the government will hear from that segment of Canadian society?

Senator Roblin: The general public interest, as opposed to any specific interests of the sort my honourable friend mentions, will be adequately covered. A perusal of the list of people to be in attendance— academics, labour people, and business people—and a perusal of the subjects for discussion, indicate that the generality of the interests of the people of Canada will receive a good going-over.

Senator Marsden: Thank you. You will not be surprised to hear that we will be asking you next week what it is that you will have heard at the conference to be held this weekend. The government has already said that you expect no consensus, but I will be interested to learn whether or not you agree with Mr. Walker, who has provided one of the background papers in which he describes people who are on unemployment insurance as “layabouts”. Since it is likely that that is one of the things you will hear, I wonder whether you will be giving us your own view of what you will have heard Canadians say this weekend.

● (1430)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I will be listening to Mr. Walker with a great deal of interest. I will also be listening to Mr. Dennis McDermott, who will be one of the lead speakers in the conference, whose views will probably not coincide with Mr. Walker's.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS— REQUEST FOR SENATE REPRESENTATION

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government related to the one asked by the Leader of the Opposition. I am concerned about the forthcoming constitutional conference of first ministers with the native people of this country to be held on April 2 and 3. There are three senators in this chamber who have a special interest in that conference, namely, Senator Adams, Senator Watt and myself. Would the Leader of the Government make some inquiries as to whether space can be made available for us to attend that conference? Perhaps space can also be made available for non-Indian senators who might be interested in the subject.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe the conference will be an important one. I am also quite certain that it will be a very difficult one, because there are some quite opposing views being represented by the various parties who have an interest in this matter, and it will take the judgment of Solomon to get an agreement that will be satisfactory. I will take my honourable friend's request under advisement and will let him know if anything can be done.

NATIONAL HOUSING PROGRAM

EFFECT OF CUTBACKS ON NATIVE POPULATION

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government on another topic. I am concerned about the following headline which appears in today's issue of The Citizen: “Govt. chops social housing budget.” In the article it says:

[Senator Roblin.]

The initial 1985 capital budget of the federal housing agency provides for 20,000 new units of social housing. That's down from the 22,500 new units authorized last year and well below the annual target of 25,000 units established in 1979.

I am particularly concerned about the following paragraph in the article:

A total of 4,000 units were cut from non-profit and co-operative housing programs. The other 1,000 units were trimmed from the rural and native housing program—

Last year, on reservations, the target was for 1,240 units to be built under section 56.1 of the National Housing Act. I do not know what was the figure for housing under section 56.1 in the off-reserve areas, but I am sure honourable senators can see that this is a serious cut in terms of the effort made to provide native housing. I do not need to tell honourable senators how serious the housing problem is on reservations. I understand that the backlog is approximately 10,000 units.

Before I resume my seat, I want to mention a couple of very important parts of the housing program. Successive governments have struggled to try to meet the demand for native housing. For the first time, two rather important objectives have been met. First, CMHC is building quality houses on reservations. Second, there is more of a sense of ownership with regard to the houses built under this program than there is in the case of houses built under a purely welfare program. This is a very important part of the program. Would the Leader of the Government make inquiries to see whether the number of these units can be restored and even enhanced in the forthcoming year?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I knew my honourable friend had a question, and he has not disappointed me. I should say by way of preamble that every time the government seeks to reduce expenditures in one place or another the people who are directly affected will complain about it. I have to get used to that fact of life. While everybody agrees in general terms that the deficit of $35 billion is too high, and that something must be done about it and expenses must be reduced, the minute you start to impose expenditure reductions, those who are feeling the full chill, quite naturally, complain about it. I will simply have to get used to those complaints.

I am sympathetic to the point raised by my honourable friend. From my own experience I know something of the problem that he is alluding to when he talks about housing on reserves and things of that sort. I cannot promise him that the results he seeks will be achieved, but I will take his question under advisement and see whether any helpful reply can be given.

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I know that we all cry a little bit when our own ox is being gored. However, previous governments have always given special consideration to native programs, particularly as it relates to housing. I cannot recall a previous government cutting its budget on a serious matter like native housing, and I want to remind the Leader of the Government of that point. My question is: Would he make representations to his cabinet colleagues to increase the number of housing units built for natives rather than cutting them back?

Senator Roblin: I have to tell my friend that never before in the history of this country has the deficit been as high as it is now. It certainly is going to call for very painful decisions on the part of the government. While I appreciate what moves him to speak, I really can give him no assurance that I can do what he wants me to do.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to those asked by Senator Marchand. While the leader is checking into the matters raised by Senator Marchand, will he try to find an explanation why the worst-housed people in the country should be asked to make this additional sacrifice? While he is looking at that problem, will he also tell us if one of the reasons the program may be suffering cutbacks is that provincial authorities, particularly provincial premiers who share some of the ideology we hear here from time to time, are refusing to co-operate in the delivery of these programs to rural and native people?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has touched on a very important and sensitive point. As far as I know he is right, that in some provinces changes in policy have been made which affect what we are trying to do. That is one of the factors involved in this situation. I shall give to the honourable senator the same answer I gave to my honourable friend, Senator Marchand.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL CONFERENCE—SENATE OPPOSITION REPRESENTATION

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have been pondering the answer the Leader of the Government gave to the Leader of the Opposition with regard to the statement made on the conference that is being held on this weekend. For the life of me, I cannot understand the answer. Perhaps I should ask him to whom he referred his demand for at least one seat at the conference for the Liberal Party in the Senate.

● (1440)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Perhaps it was the same person who excluded the Governor General from the recent meeting in Quebec.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend wishes to make a statement, I invite him to rise.

The point that I wish to make with my honourable friend is that it is very difficult to get into that summit. There is an opening banquet being held tonight, at which the Prime Minister is speaking. I have been refused a seat at the banquet table tonight, simply because there are other people from the private sector who ought to be there instead of me and that is why it is being done in that fashion. I cannot undertake at all to tell my honourable friend with whom I conduct my conversations.

Senator Thériault: I am sure that some of the people that I have in mind could represent the business community in this country at that summit. I am sure they would not mind not being invited to the dinner, since they can afford to pay for their own dinner. Also, hearing the Prime Minister speak, I am sure, is not foremost in the minds of my colleagues, either. We hear a lot from the Prime Minister nowadays and we can surely do without hearing from him tonight.

However, being able to sit at that summit and hear what is going on in the business community and in other communities in the country is a very desirable thing. If the organization of this conference is not in the hands of the government, then I, for the life of me, cannot understand why the business community, or whoever is responsible for the organization of that conference, would have said no to having a representative from the Liberal side of the Senate.

Senator Roblin: I can only repeat what I have already said, namely that the organization of this function, together with the invitation list and coupled with the limitation on numbers, has been decided by the organizing committee.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate be forthright and tell us to whom he referred his demand or request for a place for a representative of the opposition in the Senate at the summit?

Senator Roblin: I have no intention of answering that question, honourable senators.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER SUPPLEMENT—POSSIBLE LEGAL ACTION

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would consult with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs respecting a matter that has apparently cost western Canadian farmers several millions of dollars. To give some background to my question, apparently in the last day or two, the Department of Agriculture has come forward with a report that a fertilizer supplement that was sold under three different names—Agrispon, Nitromax and Reward—has no value at all. Since the Department of Agriculture has been involved in testing this fertilizer supplement, perhaps we could ask that department what they intend to do about advising farmers in the west that this product has no value, and therefore that the millions of dollars they have spent, and potentially could spend in the future, have been wasted.

I believe, however, that some of the laws administered by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have a little more teeth in that if this fertilizer supplement has been promoted by means of false advertising, either written or by way of the media, those responsible have committed an offence. I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he could make inquiries to see if that department is taking appropriate action for the cheating or bilking that has been done in this respect.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I certainly will do that, honourable senators.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Members of this chamber, in common with Canadians generally, enjoyed last year the third wave. However, based on what is reflected in the media, the public is not enjoying the blue wave that is sweeping this country through Petro-Canada, VIA Rail, Air Canada and now the law profession of Ontario.

Yesterday, the honourable leader made reference to the fact that he thought it was wonderful and enjoyed the fact that there was a tango going on. In today's Globe and Mail, there is a reference to the tango. It is called "The patronage tango." My question is this: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate agree that men of good conscience, learned in the law, are not easily tethered by political bias?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am not exactly sure of the thrust of my honourable friend's question.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I think it was a witticism.

Senator Sinclair: I will repeat it: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate agree that men of good conscience, learned in the law, are not easily tethered by political bias? That is my question.

Senator Roblin: I have to say that, in my opinion, members of the legal profession are just as susceptible to having political opinions and party affiliations as any other group in the country.

Senator Doody: Present company excepted.

Senator Sinclair: I will repeat the question again. It is not a question of having views; the question turns on the word "tethered". If he does not know where the quotation comes from, I will help him. It comes from Justice Douglas.

Senator Roblin: It is an interesting proposition that my honourable friend advances. I have no comment on it.

Senator Doody: I will remember it for "Trivial Pursuit."

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL CONFERENCE—SUGGESTED FOLLOW-UP

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the government leader in the Senate and it is in regards to the National Economic Conference. I am one of those who have been invited to attend in my other capacity as a leader of a major labour organization in Canada. Some of the skeptics are saying that this will be just a public relations exercise; that the government has already made its decision as to what its policies are going to be and that it is really all just a waste of time.

I do not believe that, and I think that the majority of the people attending that conference do not believe that. I am convinced that many of the people who have been invited from every walk of life; from labour, from management, from the corporations, from small business, from women's groups, from native groups, from youth groups—every possible group has been represented by invitation at this conference.

One of the key parts of the format is that we do not have to listen to Michael Walker, the economist, a concern expressed by the honourable senator sitting across the way, because the submissions are presented in writing and one can choose to read them or not to read them. The time of the conference will not be monopolized by speakers at this conference, and if Michael Walker is going to make those kinds of foolish statements about the unemployed, we would have to look and see whether Bill Bennett's lips were moving when he was making the speech in any case.

The way the format has been established allows the individuals who are attending the conference to express themselves openly and forthrightly, and it is to be hoped that this will assist the government. This indicates to me that someone has done a lot of good, sound planning and I am very optimistic that this conference can achieve a great deal of good for the country and for the people of Canada. I congratulate whoever on the committee is responsible for that format.

I am convinced that many of us who will be in attendance at this conference will be offering new ideas and solutions, and that from these discussions there may possibly be solutions to serious problems. My question to the Leader of the Government is: Has the government taken into consideration the possibility of the respective ministers meeting with those groups or individuals on a follow-up basis where a consensus has been achieved or where solutions have been offered, in an effort to build a better way of life for all Canadians? There is a tremendous amount of good will, certainly from the labour side, and I think from all the people I have spoken to who are attending, to give this government an opportunity to find new solutions to some serious problems. I think it is a wonderful opportunity that should be taken advantage of by the government.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I thank my honourable friend for a very constructive suggestion. I think it has been given consideration, but I intend to see that the particular suggestion we have had presented to us just now is brought to the attention of the ministers concerned, because I think it could be very helpful.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, following his delayed answer to a question addressed to the Honourable Robert de Cotret. I wanted to know the number of persons or corporations that did not dare apply for investment in Canada because of FIRA.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate told me I had somewhat imagined the statement made by the Honourable Robert de Cotret that 97 per cent of all applications had been accepted. But he went on to say that no account was kept of those who did not dare apply.

Now the Honourable Robert de Cotret's answer is that he does not have specific figures in mind.

I therefore want the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate to know that I never made up anything with respect to Mr. de Cotret's answer, and as far as I am concerned the fact that 97 per cent of applications had been granted points to a rather favourable average. There is no need to have legislation under another title to arrive at approximately the same result.

This is why I am asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the Government can tell us if those 97 per cent of applications that were accepted reflect the facts, or what is the percentage of applications that were turned down because people were afraid to ask the Government?

[English]

● (1450)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think my honourable friend is asking me for a little historical research on this subject. I think I recall clearly that he asked me a question having to do with the statement of my colleague, the Honourable Robert de Cotret.

Senator Denis: Yes.

Senator Roblin: I have procured an answer from my colleague, and it evidently does not satisfy my honourable friend.

I think there are a couple of factors here that I can mention. We can ascertain the number of organizations which applied to FIRA for permission to invest and which were refused. That is a matter of record so I can obtain that information, if that is what my honourable friend wants. What is difficult to ascertain, however, is the number of people who did not apply because they felt they would not get through FIRA's screen.

There is some reason to think, on the basis of information which is statistically unverifiable, that that is not insignificant; that there is quite a number. But I do not know how anyone can positively say what percentage that would amount to.

Senator Denis: I agree with the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I was right when I asked for the number of those who did not dare make an application. I know I was right when I said that 97 per cent or so of the applications were agreed to. That proves that I was not imagining things.

Senator Roblin: I would not accuse my honourable friend of being too imaginative in that respect. But I can tell my honourable friend that the bill covering this matter is before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for pre-study. Perhaps he could explore the matter further with the officials from the department who have appeared and will appear before that committee.

Hon. H. A. Olson: You could give him the Tory propaganda of a few months ago.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: If he had attended the committee meeting yesterday he would have received that information.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I can save the Leader of the Government in the Senate some work by telling him that when the minister gave evidence before the committee yesterday he said that not one single application had been refused since September 4.

Senator Roblin: That is true, and if that had been the question, I could have given that answer, but I evidently did not understand it properly.

AGRICULTURE

INSPECTION FEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last night the nation, or that part of it that watched the CBC National news, was treated to the near-panic concern of Prince Edward Island potato producers in the face of a cost recovery program with regard to government inspection fees. I suspect that it was more than the token once-a-month coverage that the CBC usually accords the eastern provinces, but, in any event, that concern is genuine.

That near-panic concern is not limited to the potato producers of Prince Edward Island, but is very much a matter of serious concern to those other excellent potato producers from down east, the New Brunswick potato growers.

This matter has been raised in the other place and has been the object of written concern to the government by industry spokesmen over the past number of months. I, myself, have been raising a red flag of concern with regard to the calamities afflicting the potato industry in eastern Canada for some time.

In view of all these facts, and others to which the government does not seem to accord much sensitivity, will the federal government and the federal Department of Agriculture now retreat from their announced intentions with regard to agricultural produce inspection fees? Those fees involve more than the potato growers alone.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, dealt with this question in the other place yesterday and told the house that he will hold direct negotiations with the producers concerned and expects to reach a satisfactory settlement of the issue.

THE SENATE

RECEPTION FOR NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, good traditions should be kept alive, so it is my pleasure to invite all honourable senators and their spouses to my chambers after the Senate rises today to toast our new member of the Senate, Senator Doyle.

THE ESTIMATES, 1984-1985

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C)

On the Order:

Consideration of the Fourth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented in the Senate on 20th March, 1985.—(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, further to the Speaker's kind invitation, I will be brief because I certainly have no wish to detain honourable senators.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: That was my purpose!

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Surely the Speaker knew you were to rise.

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): I would like to outline the three major items examined by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance concerning the Supplementary Estimates (C).

First, there is a $1 item granting Petro-Canada standing authority to borrow monies from the private sector.

Of course this has held our attention. As an explanation, we find in Schedule II, under the title Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, item 66c, where it is stated that pursuant to Section 110(b) of the Financial Administration Act, it is proposed that Petro-Canada be explicitly authorized to borrow monies from sources other than Her Majesty.

Apparently, the way to do that is to add in the Estimates a $1 item providing a standing authority that would not have to be renewed each time Petro-Canada wanted to borrow from the private sector.

The second item that was of concern to us is the one about which we have asked to know what was the cost of aircraft 600 and 601 which the Department of National Defence intended to buy from Canadair.

The witnesses could not specify the unit cost of those aircraft. At one point, the honourable senators were told that those $147.6 million appearing under National Defence in Supplementary Estimates (C) would cover the cost of those aircraft.

But at some other point, we were told that of the $147.6 million, $140 million only would be used for buying those planes. To compound the confusion, it was also stated that $140 million covered the cost of from eight to twelve planes. The committee is of the opinion that Parliament is entitled to know the cost of those planes before the government decides to purchase them.

[The Hon. the Speaker:]

We also discussed the extra $150 million granted to the de Havilland Corporation in the form of equity financing, or in other words, as "investment and equity".

The explanations we obtained are as follows. The committee has learned that the government intends to cancel the de Havilland's debt and prevent the corporation from incurring further debt. A parallel was drawn with Canadair, whose debt has been transferred to the new Canadair Financial Corporation Inc., so discharging Canadair Ltd. of all its debts as of April 1, 1984.

The difference between Canadair and de Havilland is that the former may no longer make borrowings without the approval of the Minister of Finance, while de Havilland, under an already granted authority, can go on borrowing up to $100 million with full government financial guarantee.

I could elaborate further, but I would not like unduly to detain honourable senators, so I thank them for their kind attention.

● (1500)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate very much Senator Leblanc's report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. I note with interest that many of the concerns raised by the committee are much the same as those we have been raising for many years, to be conservative about it. The $1 votes which we have been decrying, and that were decried before I was appointed to this chamber, are still appearing with increasing regularity. In this set of supplementaries I noted that there were 39 $1 votes. It is a very convenient mechanism for the bureaucrats to move money around within departments, and I sometimes think they are walking a very fine line in terms of what Parliament has approved and what they would like to think Parliament has approved. But I have never been able to get that message across. Perhaps when studying estimates in the future we could pursue that further with the witnesses.

We have been told regarding Petro-Canada's authority to borrow on the outside that this is a situation which has existed for some time. They have obtained financing from sources other than government for some time. The question has been raised as to the legality of that practice. Apparently a $1 vote has been put in the estimates to cover that and, henceforth, it shall be considered as legal. I have been told that that point was checked with the legal advisers of the department and everything appears to be in order.

The other major point that really concerns honourable senators is another ongoing problem, namely, the perennial question of Canadair and de Havilland, particularly Canadair. The amounts of money that have been channelled into that company are awe-inspiring. It seems to be endless. There is a further figure of approximately $300 million in these estimates to reduce the debt and to start the company off again. The same is being done with de Havilland.

As Senator Leblanc mentioned, the purchase of the eight or twelve airplanes gave rise to some questioning. My understanding is that there are to be eight which are presently in stock in mothballs and have been built for some time which this government is buying from the company and there are four new ones to be built. That certainly does not help in trying to ascertain the price of the aircraft. They tell us that the inability to give the price arises from the possible configurations and the amount of equipment and the purpose for which each individual aircraft will be used. Nevertheless, there is approximately $147 million in the estimates for that purpose. We can have a more in-depth debate when the appropriation bill comes before us, which we hope will be next week, and at that time we can deal with the ongoing problems with which the previous government was and this government is now struggling.

Once again I want to thank Senator Leblanc and his committee for the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this order is considered as having been debated.

THE SENATE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEES TO INVITE PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hicks:

That whenever a bill or the subject-matter of a bill is being considered by a committee of the Senate in which a province or provinces have a special interest, then as a general policy, the government of such province or provinces where practicable, shall be asked by the committee as to whether or not they wish to make written and/or verbal representations to the committee, and any province that replies in the affirmative shall be given a reasonable opportunity to do so.—(Honourable Senator Doody.)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to thank honourable senators for finding a way to have this motion brought back before us. I was perhaps derelict in not paying more attention to the proceedings at the time. I did shout but apparently not loudly enough. To be perfectly frank and candid about it, the thought of Senator Godfrey not standing up to give an explanation on anything at any time that it was open to him to do so completely escaped me. It was beyond my comprehension.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It hypnotized you.

Senator Doody: I am delighted to see Senator Godfrey apply himself to matters that might concern the provinces. I had always envisioned him, and obviously incorrectly, as a great centralist and federalist who really was not that concerned about the lesser colonies beyond the pale. I am pleased, indeed, to hear his concern, because I think that motion is an excellent one. Inviting the provinces to comment on federal legislation as it goes through the various stages is a good one. I emphasize the word "comment" because I do not think it should go beyond that. The provinces should be invited to give their opinions, and that fits pretty squarely with the original concept of the Senate as a chamber wherein the regions, and for "regions" I interpret the word to mean "provinces," should be favoured to express their views on various matters that come before us.

As I read the motion and while I agree with the principle of it, I am concerned about the operation of it. I gather that the individual committees are to be asked to decide which of the bills that they are examining should concern provinces. They will have to make the decision as to whether province a, b or c should be invited, and then some difficulties might arise. I know that some provinces are very sensitive about which matters do or do not concern them, and matters which might seem to be far removed from the interest of an Atlantic province, for example something that is happening in central Canada might, nevertheless, have a bearing on such a province. Some thought should be given to making sure that the Senate does not run up against a series of problems and, perhaps, hurting the tender feelings of some of our premiers.

• (1510)

I also have concerns about some of the terminology in this motion. I would refer specifically to the words "practicable" and "reasonable" which cover a good deal of ground and are open to interpretation. Once again, the individual committee will have to decide what is practicable and what is reasonable, which may cause some problems with the provinces or with the other place.

I also notice the word "shall" in this motion. Obviously, we "can" or "may", but the word "shall" seems to be too definitive.

I am not quite clear whether this is to be a guideline. If so, do we require a motion? Perhaps this is to be a standing rule or order and, if that is the case, that, in turn, may cause some difficulties.

I feel there are certain areas in this motion which should be explored. With great respect to Senator Godfrey, who is a master of composing motions, the thought has occurred to me that perhaps a group of people or a committee should examine this and, perhaps, they could polish it up a little. They may be able to remove some problem areas and place it squarely in the program of the Senate for use later on. I believe there may be merit in referring the motion to a committee. Since the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has a heavy agenda, perhaps it could be referred to the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

This is not a matter that must be decided this afternoon. If some other senator wishes to adjourn the debate, perhaps we can reflect on this matter. However, if Senator Godfrey so wishes, perhaps it could be referred it to a committee today. I am certainly open to any suggestion that may be made. I would prefer that this matter be given sober second thought before it is carried.

I would point out, however, that I have no problem with the principle of the motion. I commend it to my colleagues with the stipulation that it may be worthwhile having another look at the matter before we endorse it.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to say a word or two on this motion, but I do not wish to detain honourable senators on this auspicious day. Perhaps it would be convenient if I were to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Senator Stewart, debate adjourned.

UNEMPLOYMENT

METHOD OF COMBATTING

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 19, 1985:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to one way of fighting unemployment.

He said: Honourable senators, by now you must have before you—or you should have before you in a moment—the text of what I am about to say. I am providing you with a text because it is chock-full of figures, and it is difficult to follow without one. I would request the permission of the Senate to have this published as an appendix because the printers have told me it is easier to do it in that fashion than to accommodate the numbers.

For my anglophone colleagues, I would be pleased if they would put on their earphones, should they want to listen, of course, because I intend to do a simultaneous translation in French since I do not have a French text.

Before proceeding, however, I should like to say a few words about being chased into this chamber by my old boss, Richard Doyle. I thought I had escaped his clutches many years ago, but, lo and behold, here he is. He used to edit me in the Globe and Mail and, undoubtedly, he will be editing me here too.

He has come here to cries of dismay from Ontario Tories and federal Liberals, but I only have the best memories of him, personally. I enjoyed working for him. He never put any restraints on my freedom of expression. Some of you may feel that this was wrong training to give a young reporter.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Gigantès: I would point out, honourable senators, that I appreciated that. I am sure that I will enjoy working with him more than some of his colleagues on the same side of the house as he is when they realize how very independent and cantankerous he can be. But I like him.

● (1520)

[Translation]

I would now like to talk to you about a rapid cure for unemployment. I suggest you refer to the introduction on page one. When looking at the Canadian economy, we see there are one and a half million unemployed. Our production facilities are being utilized at only 74 per cent of capacity. We have a federal cash shortfall of $32 billion, and I am not talking about the deficit but about revenue that would otherwise be forthcoming. We have some $40 billion in tax loopholes. Interest rates are around 12 per cent, perhaps even higher, which means 8 or 9 per cent after inflation, a level unprecedented in our history.

It would be nice if we could increase the country's wealth and reduce unemployment, increase production and cut the deficit, all at the same time. It is quite possible.

All we have to do is look at the facts in the simplest possible way, our minds free of economic mythologies. But we must first understand the multiplier. It is the leverage in the economy. If you give me $1 for helping you unload your car, you have contributed $1 to my income, and thus to the gross national product. I might save some of this dollar. I shall pay part of it in taxes. Some will go for imports. The rest I shall spend to contribute towards the wages and profits of other Canadians.

They will go through the same process as I did in paragraph (a) which I just read to you. In so doing, they will also contribute towards the wages and profits of other Canadians.

It turns out that each dollar spent generates, in effect, within a year or so, two dollars in national income. But the opposite is true as well. Each dollar of cuts in spending reduces national income by two dollars.

Government revenues are a proportion of the Gross National Income or Gross National Product. When the GNP falls, Government revenues fall. When it rises, they rise.

Now for some figures. According to Statistics Canada, the average Canadian is married, the sole breadwinner and has two dependent children under 18. His average salary is $23,000. If we apply the multiplier, this gives us an increase that corresponds to a GNP of $46,000. According to the Department of National Revenue and Statistics Canada, federal revenue on this amount of $46,000 is 16 per cent or $7,360. Provincial revenue, and I am talking about the Province of Ontario, is $8,740. This gives governments a total revenue of $16,100 when a Canadian worker earns $23,000.

Let us suppose our average Canadian becomes unemployed. We pay him $13,269 in unemployment insurance benefits. The GNP generated by these payments is $26,538, which is the product of $13,269 multiplied by two. Federal revenue on GNP is $4,246, while provincial revenue is $5,042, giving total revenues for all levels of government—federal, provincial and municipal—of $9,288. Of course we have to subtract from this amount the $13,269 paid by the Government.

On the next page, under No. 11, you will see that this leads to a shortfall of $3,981 for all governments. The Government must borrow money to finance this lack of revenue. Since all governments are running deficits, we must therefore add 11.25 per cent per year, or $448 in interest.

Therefore, when a Canadian becomes unemployed, the loss to all governments is $4,429. However, before, they had a positive inflow of $16,000, and now they have an outflow of $4,429, so there has been a change of $20,529. The resulting increase in deficit for the three levels of government is $20,529, and the GNP, as you can see under (11), has fallen to $19,462.

And now for the figures under No. 16. These figures put the cutting of government spending into perspective. Cutting spending means cutting jobs. Each person who loses a $23,000 job and goes on unemployment costs all levels of government $20,529. If the one who loses his job is a $23,000 a year public servant who goes on unemployment insurance, the Government pays him $9,731 less, but government revenues go down by $6,812. I will explain how these figures are calculated in the text.

By firing a $23,000 a year public servant, the Government only saves $2,919. But the revenues of other Canadians go down by $19,462, because it means a shortfall for the GNP. This means that for each two people who lose their jobs, one more Canadian loses a job. It is a vicious downward spiral. This is explained in paragraph (c) in the introduction and paragraph (24) later on.

Thus, instead of cutting spending and therefore jobs, governments should use what we pay in U.I.C. benefits to subsidize the growth of employment. This has been tried successfully on a small scale. It will work on a large scale, and here are some examples.

An employer has been told to "hire this person and pay him $23,000 and we will pay $13,269 of that amount". As we saw earlier, in paragraphs (2) to (5), government revenue will be $16,100. From that amount we must, of course, subtract the $13,269 paid in U.I.C. benefits, which results in a total gain for the Government of $2,831. Compare this with the loss of $4,429 for the Government on the previous page in paragraph (13).

So we go from minus $4,429 to plus $2,831, so that if we use this method, government deficits are reduced by $7,259 for each person getting a new job, and the GNP or national income goes back up to $46,000. Let us therefore look at the projection of 400,000 jobs in this way. The combined deficits of governments will be reduced by $2.9 billion, or $400,000 multiplied by $7,259. As described in paragraph 24, a gross national product of $440 billion gives us 11 million jobs. This is a fact and not just a theory. It means that, for one job, we are using $46,000 out of the gross national product, and each of the 400,000 re-employed by this method would generate an additional $19,462 of gross national product.

As shown in paragraph 26, $9,731 of these $19,462 have accrued to these 400,000 people as additional income. This is why I distributed the text. Such a speech is quite boring, but it is sometimes necessary to look at the figures. The amount of $9,731 must not be added twice, but the second amount of $9,731 remains to create other jobs. By multiplying $9,731 by 400,000 and dividing the result by 40,000, we get a figure of 97,310 jobs created through this system. Moreover, these jobs have not been subsidized by the government through the Unemployment Insurance Program.

Those among the 97,310 people who were receiving unemployment insurance benefits represent deficit reductions since they are no longer collecting unemployment insurance or welfare benefits. For someone in Montreal who is married and has two children, this corresponds to $9,936. The figures vary according to the provinces, but not by very much.

These additional savings would reduce the deficit by at least $600 million and a maximum of $1.3 billion according to whether those reemployed are on UIC, which would be a maximum saving, or on welfare, which represents the minimum saving. The total minimum reduction in the deficit would therefore be $3.5 billion, as pointed out in paragraph 29. I am not proposing here a scheme which need be run by the Government. It could be run by the private sector. A similar scheme, called the employment tax credit, produced 50,906 jobs in 1979-80. There was very clever accounting on the part of businessmen when the scheme was tried out in 1979-80. For every 100 subsidies these fine people collected, they only produced 60 additional jobs. If the Government takes my advice and applies my system, it might cost more. However, with only 60 per cent effectiveness, and I can assure you that my figures were checked by many accountants and economists, we would reduce the deficit by at least $500 million.

We have learned a lot since 1979-80. Paragraph 32 explains how to prevent our fine businessmen from cheating such systems. The computerized tax system records what salaries are paid to which social security number. We therefore know who receives what and we can tell the employer that, if he has ten employees and one foreman and fires that foreman to replace him by another one, he will not receive the subsidy. However, if he hires a second foreman, he will get the subsidy.

Paragraph 33 points out that if we want maximum benefits for Canada, we should be selective in the application of the system I am proposing, and use it in the sectors of the economy which have a smaller need for imports; these are losses in the multiplier. Construction, provincial low cost housing, services, homes and attendants for chronic patients, day care, tourism and the artistic community, of which we met some members yesterday, are a few examples of sectors where the UIC funds could be invested to produce a maximum benefit for the Canadian economy.

Our exporters and high technology firms could also benefit from these innovations, as pointed out in paragraph 34; participating firms would only have to pay 42.3 per cent of any new employee's $23,000 salary. When he uses only 74 per cent of his equipment, what sane businessman would invest in even more equipment? He will invest only when there is demand, and there will be demand when the unemployed are re-employed.

Some might object that, technically, UIC benefits are not there to be used for subsidizing wages. That is a quibble. UIC contributions are, in effect, a form of tax revenue, and governments should use it constructively.

The scheme presented here demands some legislation and a high degree of co-operation among the federal government, the provinces, labour and management. What better field for such co-operation is there than action to increase wealth, decrease unemployment and decrease the deficit?

We already have a tax incentive system. I mention the amount of $40 billion, on the first page, paragraph IV. What is proposed here does not take resources away from the acquisition of modern equipment, as described in paragraph 38, and it does not involve more government spending—on the contrary, the deficit will be reduced.

It may be argued that this subsidization of additional employees will favour new firms over existing firms, but we have always had lots of schemes in our system to help new firms. It has always been done because launching a new business is very chancy. In this country, four out of five small businesses fold up in the first twelve months of operation. Besides, by expanding, existing firms can benefit from this system.

In paragraph 41, it is proposed that the scheme apply to any one firm for one year at the full rate of subsidy and for a second year at half the rate.

By beginning immediately, in three years there may be people who will get the subsidy at half the proposed rate.

Whatever the evolution of the economy during the next three years, a considerable number of permanent jobs will have been created. Even if some jobs are lost after the subsidies cease, people will have had work for two years.

We cannot turn our back on some such scheme when the number of families under the poverty line grew from 768,000 in 1981 to 968,000 in 1983, according to Statistics Canada; when the proportion of families headed by people 25 or under and below the poverty line, grew from 23 per cent in 1981 to 36 per cent in 1983; when the proportion of single young people below the poverty line grew from 38 per cent in 1981 to 50 per cent in 1983.

What is proposed here would not divert resources from making the economy more modern. What is proposed here would divert resources from paying people to suffer the debilitating effects of unemployment, while hampering their capacity to be full-fledged consumers. We would use these wasted human and monetary resources to create more wealth and more jobs in this country.

[English]

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the honourable senator a question. When he commenced his speech, he asked for permission to append to the proceedings of the Senate statistical information which is enclosed in this document. From looking at it, there is a good deal of what I might call non-statistical information. It is really an abbreviation of some of the papers. Is it the honourable senator's intention that this whole document be printed as an appendix? I know that in the United States they do not even bother attending the Senate sittings because they just file speeches and they are printed. This seems to be going halfway in that direction. What was the honourable senator's intention?

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I was informed by the technicians—perhaps I misunderstood them; I am not trying to blame them—that it would be easier for them to print such a text if they printed it as an appendix, when they are not constrained by the need to divide it into two columns. If there is another way of doing it, I have no objection to how it is printed.

Senator Godfrey: The honourable senator may have misunderstood me. I have no objection. It is useful to have these statistics in the appendix. That is a well-established practice. I am suggesting that a lot of what was included by the honourable senator in his speech is included in this document. Bearing in mind the previous practice, where we put in schedules, and so on, perhaps the honourable senator would edit this document, because there is no point in having it quoted in his speech and also as an appendix. Surely the statistics should appear as an appendix.

Senator Gigantès: I thank the honourable senator. I would like the non-numerical parts and the numerical parts to appear together for ease of reading.

Senator Godfrey: Does the honourable senator mean the first page, for instance?

Senator Gigantès: Yes. I would like the first page, the second page and all of the other pages to be together as a group, because if honourable senators read the text, they will see that I keep referring to preceding paragraphs. It will be easier to read if they are printed together. If the printers can print it all together in one part rather than in another part in the Debates of the Senate, it is immaterial to me. I suggest that they should do whatever is easier for them. They told me to ask permission to have it printed as an appendix.

There is another point. While I was translating, I was not translating with as much faithfulness as perhaps I should have done. With the permission of honourable senators, I would like the text in English, which is in front of them and which is pretty close to the translation I gave, to be the one that appears on the English side.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is a rather new departure. Honourable senators can correct me if I am wrong. I followed the translation carefully through my earpiece, and it seems to me that what the honourable senator is asking is that after having had his speech recorded and made available for printing in Debates of the Senate, we should now append that speech, plus some figures that he had not read. I do not believe we are in a position to get into that. I can appreciate the importance of the subject matter and I congratulate the honourable gentleman on the amount of work and effort he has put into it. But our rules are clear on this, and I certainly would not want to start a precedent of attaching as an appendix to our Debates the text of a speech, no matter how much other information is available. If there are statistics that may help in the explanation of his speech, then I would suggest that the honourable senator might separate those figures and have them appended to the Debates of the Senate; but I would be very reluctant to agree to establishing this precedent.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I am quite willing to abide by whatever the Senate wishes on this issue. I will make sure that each honourable senator receives a copy, unless they would care to take this one along with them.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, it seems to me that we have been fortunate to listen to the comments voiced by Senator Gigantès and be able to follow at the same time and in logical sequence the points he was making, illustrated in numbers and columns in the written information he had circulated to us. My concern would be that, fortunate as we may be in the full appreciation of his comments, readers of Senate Hansard would not be so fortunate. I am guided by precedents in this matter, and I will not add or subtract from what has been said; but I am sure there are interested readers of Hansard who would very much want an opportunity to look at the documentation provided to us by the honourable senator, and perhaps they could be invited—and this is my advertisement to them, if they read Hansard—to call Senator Gigantès at his office and obtain from him a copy of the text we were able to follow in the course of his speech.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, rule 5(h) says:

“leave of the Senate” means leave granted without a dissenting voice;

Unless we have unanimous consent, I will have to deny the honourable senator's request.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, that leaves us with the fact that although leave was not granted, for reasons explained, everyone who spoke to the subject thought it would be a useful thing for Senator Gigantès to put the numerical part of his document in so that it could be read with his speech. So can we assume that the honourable senator would like that part to go in; and then, I imagine, he would have his leave.

Senator Gigantès: I am not sure that I quite follow you, senator.

Senator Frith: There is this document, which the honourable senator wants attached to Debates of the Senate as an appendix. Senator Godfrey has pointed out that it is not usual to have speaking notes, or what amounts to a speech, appear as an appendix. But if the honourable senator is referring to, and relying on, some other material, such as figures, then it is appropriate and, in fact, desirable to have that attached as an appendix. The Senate is prepared to give leave to have printed as an appendix the numerical part, the figures, which would be pages 2, 3 and 4. So, if the honourable senator is prepared to ask for that, it seems to me, having listened to the interventions made, that he will receive leave.

Senator Gigantès: Unless, of course, the printers find a way of printing the document, which is my speech, as reported by Hansard, in the main part of the record.

Senator Frith: The honourable senator misunderstands me. The problem that has been flagged by honourable senators is not a technical matter of printing; it is a matter of custom, of having the text of his speech, as such, appear in Debates of the Senate as an appendix. It is usual to have as an appendix any separate document, such as reports, exhibits, letters, and so on, that one wants to refer to but does not read into a speech verbatim. To apply the principle to the case of Senator Gigantès today, the numerical portions would appear as an appendix. That is what honourable senators thought Senator Gigantès was asking leave to do. It was not a matter of printing.

Senator Gigantès: I read all of the figures. They are part of my speech. Everything that you see in this document I read. So all we are talking about is a question of printing technique. If the Senate has certain rules, I am sure that the people who print Hansard know them and will follow them, and I shall go along with them. I do not want to waste the time of the Senate on this matter. Let us leave it to the technicians to do the right thing.

• (1550)

Senator Frith: That is not good enough. The technicians, to use the honourable senator's term, will do what the Senate asks them to do. In effect, the honourable senator must ask the Senate to tell the technicians what to append. He must ask for leave for this to be done. Had the honourable senator received leave, it would have been done.

Senator Gigantès: With leave of the Senate, I withdraw this request and ask that my speech be printed as I delivered it.

Senator Frith: But that is what you do not have leave for.

Senator Gigantès: I don't have leave?

Senator Godfrey: I have one other suggestion for Senator Gigantès. In view of the fact that he expected to have these tables included in the appendix, I suggest that he be given considerable leeway when he edits his blues to make sure they make sense.

Senator Doody: I do not think there is any question about that. There is no desire on anybody's part to do other than make sure that every last scintillating iota of information the honourable senator presented to us today will be included in Hansard. It will be printed as a matter of course. The technicians, as they have been referred to, will see to it that every gem will be preserved for posterity and I am sure that that will happen. Let us not go any further. The honourable senator simply wants all his words, all his wisdom, all his figures and all his wit incorporated for future generations of Canadians to read and I think we can safely assure him that that will be done.

Senator Frith: Be careful, or we will have you as an appendix.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this order is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 26, 1985 at 2 p.m.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-23, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Like many Canadians, I am sure that honourable senators watched with interest the conference held in Ottawa last weekend attended by some of the heavy hitters in both the corporate and union world. Can the Leader of the Government inform this chamber what proportion of those invited responded to the invitation to attend the conference? I would like to know the response, whether it was 100 per cent or 90 per cent. How many turned up?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not know the answer to that question. I will have to ask Mr. Stanley Hartt, the chairman of the organizing committee, to give me that information.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, was it necessary, in the light of restraint, to have the government pay the hotel bills of such outstanding Canadians as Mr. Rowland Frazee, Mr. Dennis McDermott, Mr. Jean de Grandpré and the like, to have them attend? If they did not pay the full bill, did they pay part?

Senator Roblin: Again, that information is not available to me. I can speculate, however, that the same terms and conditions necessarily had to be offered to all participants; but what they did with the offer is, of course, their own business.

Senator Sinclair: As a supplementary, in view of the answer of the Leader of the Government, is this a mark of the approach of the government to universality?

Senator Frith: Baby bonuses to bank presidents!

Senator Roblin: That is an interesting proposition. I can tell my honourable friend that there was a wide range of participants at the conference—that is, with respect to their economic circumstances. It is true that the gentlemen mentioned were there, but there were also representatives of the Union of Unemployed and the National Anti-Poverty Organization. I am referring to Mr. Patrick Johnston's organization. There were many others present of a like character. In attendance was a diverse group of approximately 135 people representing all aspects of Canadian life. So it is only to be expected that reasonable financial arrangements had to be made to permit some of them to attend. I am perfectly willing to admit that there were other people present for whom that benefit was not required.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

REMUNERATION OF SENIOR OFFICIALS AND OTHERS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while we are on the subject of the enrichment of the higher income classes by the government, may I draw to the attention of the Leader of the Government the rather handsome increase in salary that is now to be paid to the new High Commissioner in London? The salary range has been increased substantially. The new High Commissioner, Mr. McMurtry, will certainly be rewarded more handsomely than his predecessor, Mr. Jamieson. I am wondering whether, like the National Economic Conference, this additional amount was necessary in order to induce Mr. McMurtry to serve in London.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not believe that is a matter on which I can produce any definite information. I have to observe, however, that every member of this house received an increase of 3 per cent on January 1. So it is not surprising that there should be changes in the remuneration paid to other public servants.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I would not like to leave the impression that the increase was 3 per cent. The salary range was increased from an existing salary range of from $75,000 to $88,000, as the maximum, to a scale of from $89,000 to $105,000, as the maximum.

● (1410)

Senator Frith: Some chicken, some 3 per cent!

Senator MacEachen: I ask again: What is the justification for this increase and why the particular timing? It suggests that this additional pay may have been necessary in order to secure the services of Mr. McMurtry. I continue to ask whether the same consideration will be applied to the Canadian representative at the United Nations in New York, Mr. Stephen Lewis. Has his salary range been increased also?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, unfortunately, I do not know what Mr. Jamieson was receiving. I know what his salary range was. I do not know what salary Mr. McMurtry is receiving, although I know his salary range. If one is at the top of his range and the other at the bottom, which is a possible assumption, then the gap does not appear to be as large as might otherwise be indicated.

Senator Thériault: They will probably both be at the top.

Senator Roblin: That may be the voice of experience speaking. I cannot really offer a comment on it because I myself do not know. As for Mr. Stephen Lewis' remuneration, we can give the same information with respect to the range that he is paid at.

Senator MacEachen: Let me just conclude by asking the Leader of the Government whether he will tell us if a general upgrading of salary ranges has been made in the diplomatic service applicable to all posts, including London, Paris, Washington and New York. Can he tell us that when he is able to get the information?

Senator Roblin: Yes, I will ask my colleague what the information is.

Hon. Hazen Argue: I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I might say that I have worked out the increases for both Mr. McMurtry and a gentleman by the name of Lawrence Hanigan, a defeated Conservative candidate—who did even better than Mr. McMurtry and who has gone to his reward as Chairman of VIA Rail. He has gone from an original range of $97,000 to $114,000 to a range of $114,000 up to $135,000. My question is this: How does the minister square this increase, for those who already receive so much, in the salary range by an amount of over 18 per cent, when labour in this country is often taking settlements of 3 per cent or less, much below the inflation rate? How does the minister square this increase of 18 per cent with the government's alleged policy of restraint and cutbacks?

Senator Roblin: It is not exactly unknown for defeated candidates to receive appointments. I can think of one at present, the chairman of Air Canada, who did rather well out of that system. With respect to the specific question on the 18 per cent, first of all I will find out if it is 18 per cent, and if that happens to be the spread between the remuneration of the two gentlemen I will see what I can find out by way of an answer.

Senator Argue: My calculation is that the change provides for an increase in the range of over 18 per cent.

I have a further supplementary question. Does this mean that the government is prepared, in its negotiations with the Canadian Union of Public Employees and other unions, in the future, to consider for them a range of increases that might go as high as 18 per cent, or is it one rule for the wealthy friends of the government and another rule for those who work for the people of Canada?

Senator Roblin: I think that any arrangements that are made with respect to the remuneration of public servants will be reached through the regular process of collective bargaining. That is the way it is done, and that is the way it will be reached. I think it was unfortunate for my honourable friend to try to indicate that some one person received special treatment when there may be good and sufficient reasons for the pay he gets. After all, it is important to be able to attract good people to the Public Service; we are able to do that. I think the salaries in the Canadian Public Service at the higher levels are very good. I would be rather surprised if Mr. Hanigan's pay were out of line with what is otherwise being offered.

Senator Argue: The minister really did not answer my question. My question was: Is the government prepared to consider a range that goes up to 18 per cent for the Public Service generally, even just to consider it in the negotiations, or is it, in fact, a case of to him that hath shall be given, and to him that hath not even that which he hath will be taken away? In other words, I am concerned that the government will offer the public servants of this country a wage settlement in the upcoming negotiations that is less than the inflation rate.

Senator Roblin: I think it only fair to say that I very much doubt that the government will contemplate an 18 per cent increase for the Public Service generally, and I do not think that my honourable friend would approve of it if it did.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question with respect to the remuneration of the High Commissioner in London. My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: When this scale was taken into consideration and in fixing the point in the scale at which he will be placed, was some weight given to the relative values of the British pound and the Canadian dollar in light of the marked change that has taken place in those values in the past six months to a year?

Senator Roblin: I must confess that I do not know whether the foreign exchange problem is taken into account in these matters, but my friend has asked a serious question and I will endeavour to get an answer for him.

Senator Sinclair: As a further supplementary question, it also applies the other way in regard to Mr. Gotlieb's salary in Washington, so perhaps he could get both answers at the same time.

Senator Roblin: I would be surprised if I found that there was a connection between the rate of exchange and these salaries.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to follow up on this question of increments in salaries and other financial arrangements and ask whether the government has considered the per diem rate offered to the members of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women which, I believe, stands among the lowest offered. I believe the remuneration is reported at $150 a day and I notice that the government has made some new appointments to the advisory council. I wonder if the Leader of the Government would consider bringing the per diem offered to people who serve on that important council into line with that offered to members of other boards of directors and advisory councils?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am not in a position to say that my honourable friend is right when she asserts that this is the lowest remuneration that is offered, or among the lowest. I shall ask the minister concerned whether there is any move at the present time to alter these per diem rates. I really do not think that there is.

BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I note that just prior to and during the weekend the Government of Canada became very generous, and I have a question for the Leader of the Government regarding the bail-out of the CCB. My question arises from some answers given by the Minister of State for Finance in the other place yesterday during Question Period when she said that one of the reasons that the bank was in trouble was because of bad loans made on the other side of the border, especially in the energy sector. One thinks back to a couple of years ago when the opposition in this chamber and in the other place were saying how the NEP was driving investment to the other side of the border because there they could make some money.

What percentage of the losses which caused the bank to be in such difficulty that the Canadian taxpayers had to bail them out to the tune of $60 million plus occurred on the other side of the border?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I suspect that before long a bill will come to this place to deal with the subject of the support being offered to the Canadian Commercial Bank, and I fully expect that at that time the bill will be referred to committee and then honourable senators will have an opportunity to investigate any aspect of this transaction that they think requires their attention. No doubt the Inspector General of Banks will be available to answer any questions of a like nature.

Senator Thériault: Is the Leader of the Government saying that there is going to be special legislation introduced? Was the bill introduced in the other place?

Senator Roblin: I think there will be special legislation within a few days.

UNEMPLOYMENT

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN STRATEGIC DEFENCE RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, on January 23, I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate about the relationship between the problem of unemployment on the one hand, and defence policy on the other hand. At that time he said:

We do not spend defence dollars because doing so has satisfactory economic consequences; we spend defence dollars for the defence of the nation.

Later on, he said:

I would assure my honourable friend that, if he is concerned that economic considerations will decide what defence policy is going to be, I think he is right in saying that that should not be the way it goes, and it is not the way it goes. Defence policy is established and then whatever economic advantages can be gained from that follow; not the other way around.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, I have been reading what transpired in the other place yesterday. I have also been reading a piece in the Globe and Mail. I hope honourable senators will not find it offensive for me to mention that paper in view of the article published on Saturday. However, in this piece in the Globe and Mail, a very responsible reporter reports that Brian Mulroney said, on Saturday, that the Canadian government would consider participation in the $26 billion space-based Strategic Defence Initiative research project if it might create jobs in Canada.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us if there has been a change in government policy?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators, I think there has not. I stand by the statement I gave my honourable friend in January.

The Prime Minister's statement had naught to do with the subject we had under discussion, namely, the policy we are following with respect to the defence of the country and in connection with the reinforcement of our troops in Europe. I was talking at that time about defence policy being followed by the Government of Canada for the defence of the nation.

Whether or not to expect economic spin-offs from another program is something quite different.

Senator Stewart: Am I to understand, honourable senators, that the implication of the story carried in the Globe and Mail is erroneous and deceptive?

Senator Roblin: I do not usually comment on stories in newspapers; it is not part of my function to do so.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, either the Prime Minister said what he is reported to have said or he did not. On the face of the matter, he is in clear contradiction of the government policy as stated by the Leader of the Government in the Senate on January 23.

If one or the other is going to resign, I assume it will not be the Prime Minister.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend may have the opinion that we are not on the same wavelength in respect to this matter, but I do not think he is correct.

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF SENATOR DOYLE—PARTY AFFILIATION

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would preface my question by saying how absolutely delighted I am with the arrival here of Senator Richard Doyle. The senator has been a great Canadian journalist whose presence here will enhance this chamber. It is an excellent appointment.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Davey: However, if I am to believe the Globe and Mail—that gives one pause for thought—the senator only chose to sit as a Conservative because of the Liberal majority in the Senate.

I would like to know if Senator Doyle would, in fact, have sat as a Liberal had there been a majority of Tory senators. I should also like to know if the Leader of the Government consulted with his caucus before allowing Senator Doyle to become a member of that caucus.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend is safe in asking those questions because he knows they are quite unparliamentary. Certainly, I cannot answer for Senator Doyle, and Senator Doyle is not subject to questioning of the sort my honourable friend would like to impose. If my honourable friend is willing to tell me what takes place in his caucus, I might consider telling him what takes place in mine.

Senator Davey: As a supplementary question, would the Leader of the Government agree with me that, in announcing he is a Tory, Senator Doyle is a little like Senator MacEachen announcing he is a Liberal, Senator Roblin announcing he is from Winnipeg, and the Pope announcing he is a Catholic?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend must know Senator Doyle a good deal better than I do. I have always considered him to be a man of independent mind and sound judgment.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

TRANSPORT

MIRABEL AIRPORT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Pietro Rizzuto: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The newspaper La Presse reported this morning a statement by the President of Air Canada in which he recommended that commercial flights be transferred from Mirabel to Dorval Airport. Would the Leader of the Government tell us whether that is government policy?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am not aware that the President of Air Canada made the statement. He certainly was not expressing government policy at the present time. What may transpire in the future remains to be seen.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF SOCIAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I put my question to him in the context of a background item, as I will call it, in the Globe and Mail setting out that the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta are proposing a $225 million bailout for the Canadian Commercial Bank—a very large institution, an important institution, and one that is getting, I think, quick and favourable treatment from the government.

My question is in relation to an article in Le Devoir this morning which relates to a study of welfare payments in the province of Quebec, a study carried out by professional organizations. According to that study, young people between ages 18 and 30 in the province of Quebec are provided with welfare payments of only $156 a month. Adults above 30 years receive welfare payments totalling $432 a month.

Is the Leader of the Government aware that this story states that young people are in fact going hungry; that one particular person who was interviewed lived on ten pounds of potatoes for a seven-day period; that because of the dire circumstances brought about by such a low income, many young people have been turning to thievery and prostitution and the taking of drugs?

My question is this: Will the Government of Canada embark on an immediate and thorough review of welfare programs in Canada? I have referred to the situation in the province of Quebec only because the study in question is the subject of an article in this morning's press. The story in Saskatchewan is not much better.

Senator Barootes: A lot better.

Senator Argue: A single person in the province of Saskatchewan receives $125 a month, and that is to cover everything but lodging. That is not a very good system. Will there be a general and complete review of social welfare payments across this country, with a view to bringing the standard of living for recipients of such payments into line with what we consider acceptable Canadian living standards? I ask this question because the federal government accepts responsibility for paying 50 per cent of the cost of such programs.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): No one can help but be sympathetic to the plight of the unemployed in this country. That is why the subject of job creation is one of the foremost items on the agenda of the government. I should like to point out to my friend, however, that the matter of welfare payments is something that comes under the provincial sphere of responsibility under our Constitution. The Canada Assistance Act is the means by which the federal government contributes. The federal government does not set the standards. The provinces set the standards and the federal government agrees to pay 50 per cent of whatever those standards are. So it seems to me that this is a question which does not come within the jurisdiction of this level of government.

● (1430)

Senator Guay: That's right.

Senator Argue: I am very disappointed in this answer. The federal government pays large sums of money and, obviously, it accepts a responsibility in this field. When it comes to bailing out a bank to the tune of $240 million, the sections of the Constitution which put the responsibility on one level of government do not preclude swift, yes, lightning action by both levels of government, federal and provincial, to bail it out. Why can the federal government not call a conference forthwith—

Senator Stewart: Not another one.

Senator Argue: —to advocate, propose and set out levels of welfare payments which, in the opinion of the government, would be of an acceptable standard? Let us raise our sights and let us give these young Canadians a chance.

Senator Roblin: I would be more impressed if I had heard my honourable friend pose the same argument one year ago.

Senator Argue: I have made it often.

Senator Roblin: Not in my hearing, and I hope the honourable member made it in cabinet while he was a member of the government.

Senator Argue: I did.

Senator Roblin: Good for the honourable senator. I am glad he did.

I would like to address this question of the bail-out of the bank. If it was only to bail out the bank, I think the policy of the government might be open to some question. However, it is more than that. It was done in consideration of the fact that this bank, a commercial bank operating in the wholesale sector, does almost all its business with the small business infrastructure in western Canada. If the bank were to be judged bankrupt or out of business, someone would come in, take it over and start to call those loans. So the bail-out was necessary in order to underwrite the financial position of many small businesses in western Canada, to make sure that that eventuality did not occur. That is the basic reason why the government is moving on this.

I would be wrong if I did not say that it is also necessary to maintain confidence in the Canadian banking system. That is why, not only the federal government but two provinces—Alberta and British Columbia—the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and six banks have agreed to share this responsibility to keep this bank afloat in the way they have. If my honourable friend wants to go into the matter further, there will be ample opportunity when the matter comes before committee.

Senator Argue: I want to correct the suggestion of the Leader of the Government that when there was a Liberal government and I was a Liberal senator I did not put forward exactly the same kind of considerations in this chamber as I just did. I once had a friend in a home for the blind in Saskatchewan who received a so-called comfort allowance of $22 per month for clothes, drugs and spending money. Every time the Government of Canada increased the pension or increased the payments that would go to people in those circumstances, the provincial government of the day, an NDP government, moved in and took up the difference. I fought that, and I can say that my record is clear. I make the same kind of proposals in the Senate and I make the same kind of speeches no matter which party is in government, because I think these people need spokesmen and help.

I think the Senate, as exemplified by the leadership of Senator Croll over the years, is a friend of the low-income people of this country. I want to make it perfectly clear that I was not saying that the Government of Canada should not have been a part of the bail-out proceedings for the Canadian Commercial Bank. What bothers me is that the government can say that the depositors need this protection—and they do and it would be difficult for them if they were to lose their money—considering how few welfare people have deposits with banks and considering that there seems to be one law for those who are better off and another law for those who are not so well off.

My question is: Will the minister do in cabinet as I have done in the past and put forward the proposition that action should be taken to increase the welfare payments in this country from the inadequate levels they are now at?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I want to correct the impression that my honourable friend seems to have, that my reference was to the depositors of this bank. My reference was to the people who received loans from this bank and were liable to pay them back on demand. The shareholders will lose, according to present calculations, about three quarters of the value of their shares, because part of this arrangement is a dilution of the share-holdings in the company, for which they will all have to pay. Unfortunately, a number of those shareholders are pension plans and arrangements of that sort. Undoubtedly, it will hurt as far as they are concerned.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PETITION AGAINST CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In some ways it is related to the questions asked by Senators Argue, MacEachen and Sinclair. At the Economic Conference on the weekend a consensus was reached, as I understood it, by approximately 87 of the 136 participants, who presented the Prime Minister with a petition asking that he rescind the April 1 deadline, that is the date on which severance pay will be considered as income when determining the eligibility of the unemployed for unemployment insurance. My question is: Has the Prime Minister responded to this petition and, if so, has he agreed to rescind that deadline?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this same topic was raised in the other place yesterday, and the answer given by the minister was that government policy would not be changed.

Senator Fairbairn: I understand that Miss MacDonald answered that question in the other place yesterday. Perhaps I was seeking to go to a higher authority often quoted by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Prime Minister, who has spoken a great deal about the combination of sacrifice and fairness which he is offering Canadians. My question is: Will the people who are represented by Victor Schwartzman of the Winnipeg Centre for the Unemployed and the others who signed the petition receive the fair consideration that those in the diplomatic corps received when they had their salary levels increased?

Senator Roblin: The question of fairness in the conduct of government administration is always a very difficult one. I am frank when I acknowledge that we will never achieve fairness in the eyes of all the beholders. We can only do the best we can, and it may be perfectly true that from time to time anomalies will be noticed that do not meet with universal approval. All I can say is that the main thrust of our endeavours at this time is to try to get the economy moving to the extent that some of these people whose interests concern my honourable friend have an opportunity to work. In the course of doing so, there will be strains; there will be hauling and pulling on the economy and various sectors of the economy. We in Canada shall have to do our best to adjust to them.

Senator Frith: So the answer is, "No, they won't."

THE SENATE

OFFICIAL REPORT—PRINTING OF APPENDICES

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, to go from the sublime to the ridiculous, I would like to ask a question of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, and I am sure that senators who chipped in last week will chip in again. They were very helpful. I had produced an economic text which I had typed in a way which would make it intelligible to senators who had it before them. Honourable senators may disagree with everything I say in that text, but it was so presented that it was intelligible and they could find out what it was that they disagreed with. It was then printed in Hansard according to the rules, and, I submit, it is now unintelligible. I am not talking of the substance of the speech but of its presentation. I assume that the Senate has adopted new techniques of presentation and of writing in the past. I see microphones that, I am sure, were not here earlier and inkwells in which there is no longer any ink.

I am asking the chairman of the committee whether his group would kindly consider some possible changes in the rules so that an economic text can be set out in Hansard in a way that is intelligible. As an editorial writer I am used to being read by only two people, my boss and my wife, and I have always assumed that that is what happens to Hansard. However, there may be someone who might want to read it later, and from the way it is presented in the record, such a person would not know what was said, never mind whether it was wise or silly.

• (1440)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, this question is asked of me in my capacity as chairman of the Rules Committee. I wish to thank the honourable senator for having advised me of the question beforehand. It gave me an opportunity to reread the proceedings of last Thursday. I was present in the chamber at that time and followed the discussion. The difficulty, of course, is that if the Senate were to accept for printing holus-bolus the printed speeches, as they are prepared by honourable senators, then we might be establishing a dangerous precedent. In the past we have always made it a practice to accept for printing as an appendix tables and statistics. However, we can certainly take another look at this question in committee, if my colleagues on the committee are prepared to undertake that study. It may well be worth doing and we can bring back to the Senate a recommendation.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps I could add a brief footnote on a point of order. We should remember that questions to chairmen of committees in Question Period should be confined to matters dealing with the work of their committees.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, may I point out that the Rules Committee is the only committee that has the right to initiate its own inquiries. Therefore I would say that the question was a perfectly proper one.

Senator Frith: One can certainly ask a question as to whether the committee had recently used its power to initiate an inquiry on that subject.

Senator Argue: We are flexible.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, Senator Argue suggested calling another conference. After what we went through last weekend, I would implore the Leader of the Government to impress upon his colleagues the fact that to arrive at any consensus, it has to be done in private and the jury has to be fewer than 136 people.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot let that observation go unnoticed. I cannot undertake to make any such recommendation, because I believe it is important that discussions of this sort have an element of public interest. That is part of what we are trying to do. Consultation in private may be no consultation at all, insofar as the public is concerned. I believe the public has a right to know, and it is good for the process in a democracy that they should be informed as to the issues that divide us as well as those that unite us. So I do not find anything wrong with a public meeting of that kind.

Senator Sinclair: As a supplementary, if that is the purpose of a conference, then the objectives should be different from those stated for the last conference, which was to arrive at a consensus, and, secondly, to have an open debate. I suggest that once we put people of established views before a microphone, they will parrot those views. And that is what happened for hour after hour.

Senator Roblin: I must also offer an observation on my honourable friend's statement. He did not ask a question, but he did imply one. It seems to me that what he said about the performance of people before the microphone is correct. That is what happens. People come there representing their constituency and they feel obliged, in order to discharge their representative capacity, to say what their constituency feels about things. But the matter does not end there. What happens in the action and study groups that meet after that, and in the general exchange of ideas that goes on after the statement of original positions, is that people begin to understand something of what the other fellow is talking about. Perhaps they do not come to an agreed view of the matter to start with, but at least they have broken the ice. We have to expect people, when they attend such a conference, to address their own constituency, but I believe we are entitled to expect, and it happens, that they go beyond that and try to mitigate or reconcile some of the differing views that they hold.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, of course, it is well to understand another's point of view. I agree with the Leader of the Government in that respect. But I thought the purpose of the National Economic Conference, as it was stated in its objectives, was to bring about an open debate and a consensus. What was the consensus? I watched the proceedings, as did many Canadians, and I would like to know whether the Leader of the Government can tell us what the consensus was that arose out of the conference. Was it a consensus to disagree?

Senator Roblin: If that were all that we got out of it, that would not be a bad thing, because it is important that people in this country understand what are the differing views. Mr. Rowland Frazee, the honourable senator's friend, who is Chairman of the Royal Bank, expressed his satisfaction at having had an opportunity, the first for some time, to listen to people besides other bank directors and people with whom he normally associated. He found something good in that process. That is not to say that Mr. Frazee, and Mr. Dennis McDermott, the President of the Canadian Labour Congress, will find a consensus in a meeting like that; but the fact that the two of them were there, talking together and ventilating their notions on how the country should be run, is no bad thing and I do not apologize for it.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government indicates, I know Mr. Frazee rather well. I must say that I am absolutely astounded, if he is reported correctly, that the only views he ever receives are different from those that he received at the conference. After all, Mr. Frazee comes from the maritimes. He is a graduate of Dalhousie. He has been around. If we have to have a conference to educate the Chairman of the Royal Bank of Canada, then I say we should not have it.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend had better convey his views to Mr. Frazee. I merely report in this chamber what he said. I am not going to get into an argument with Mr. Frazee, because I know him too well. He spent some years as a banker in Winnipeg, and he is a man of good repute in that area of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, this is Question Period, and debates concerning personalities are a little out of order at this stage. May we please proceed with the Question Period?

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In light of the excellent conference that was held over the weekend, and in view of the questions that have been posed to the Leader of the Government by those who seem to dislike, for instance, that very intelligent sister, a member of an order from Newfoundland, the representatives of the unemployed, of the anti-poverty association, the teachers' union and a number of others who certainly could not afford to attend such a conference, I feel that such persons should be looked after. If someone belongs to an old boys' club and feels that he wants to stick a needle into someone who is probably a member of that old boys' club, then that is up to him if he wants to do that; but, frankly, I do not believe that being president of a bank, or of the CPR or CNR, means that they have all the brains in the world. Many union people and representatives of the workers who attended that conference also have a good deal of brains. The Leader of the Government should give the question concerning payment of expenses the consideration it merits. If an honourable senator who is a member of an old boys' club wants to help Rowland Frazee with his expenses, that's fine, but the Leader of the Government should please give the question of expenses full consideration.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for restoring some balance to this discussion.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on the subject of the National Economic Conference, which I believe is of great importance to Canadians, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In order to give it some point, I wish to refer to a survey made recently in Ottawa of, I believe, 65 private firms, each having more than 300 employees. The survey demonstrated that there would be little, if any, change in the number of hirings which those firms will have made by the end of 1985. That situation is described as being very bleak; and if a situation is very bleak in Ottawa, one can imagine how bleak it is in Newfoundland, Cape Breton and other parts of the country, which historically have not enjoyed the rather buoyant economy of the Ottawa area.

I would ask the Leader of the Government whether he perceived in the discussions, the development of any economic strategy around which there was some convergence that would change that particular prediction which, it is stated, will continue throughout 1985?

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend was referring to a survey made of firms that employ more than 300 people; I think that is the one he is referring to. He nods to indicate that that is the case. I have to tell him that it is not only firms of that size but firms of much larger size that are having some problems in maintaining employment. In fact, the large business sector of this country has been shedding workers for the past little while, not employing more. That is a sweeping statement and it is subject to modification, because some firms operate differently from others, but that whole category of large business has not been the source of jobs. The source of jobs has been the small business. I am referring to businesses which employ maybe 10 or 20 people, very small business. It is that kind of small business structure in our country that has provided all the new jobs in the last four or five years. Perhaps I had better modify my statement. It may not be all, but by far the largest proportion of the new jobs developed in Canada in the last few years have come from the small business sector. That is the sector that was very importantly represented at this conference the other day, and they had some very concrete and precise ideas as to what could be done in order to help them with their task of job creation, and I am sure that will be part of the considerations that the Minister of Finance will have in his mind when he comes to write the budget.

Senator MacEachen: I take it from the reply of the Leader of the Government that there is nothing emerging from the conference that would assist firms with 300 or more employees, that whatever pertinent suggestions were made would apply exclusively to firms with fewer than 300 employees.

I want to follow up my question by asking the Leader of the Government about the twin objectives of deficit reduction and job creation. The Prime Minister expressed the view that he believed equally firmly in each of these objectives, namely, deficit reduction and job creation. We know that the conference split down the middle on that point, that many of the representatives to whom Senator Muir so eloquently referred stated that job creation should take the priority and deficit reduction should take a secondary role. The Minister of Finance opened the conference by saying that deficit reduction should have the priority. I want to know whether, in the opinion of the Leader of the Government who attended the conference faithfully I am sure, there is any strategy emerging from the conference that in the short term could reconcile these twin objectives of deficit reduction and job creation.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend is not entitled to his first assumption, that nothing in this conference will affect the prospects of firms that employ more than 300 people. I think that is quite wrong. I think that some of the suggestions made with respect to taxation and other matters will affect those firms as well, so I think we should not be carrying a contrary impression away with us.

With respect to the two priorities of deficit reduction and employment creation, I share the Prime Minister's view that they are both equally important. The question is, of course, how you balance the two goals in the most effective manner. Some people maintained at the conference that the way to do it was through an increase in government spending, which of course means an increase in the deficit, on the grounds that that would employ more people. I must confess that that has not been our experience in recent years. We have increased the deficit regularly over the last six or seven years and we have seen the unemployment rolls continue to mount, so there must be other factors in the mix besides that one. Therefore, I do not think one can say that the deficit situation is a priority in the sense that by increasing that deficit we could guarantee that there will be more jobs in the country. That is a questionable proposition in view of our experience. On the other hand, you cannot sit around quietly and watch 1.4 million people look for jobs unsuccessfully in the country. We have to address that problem as well. That is the task of the budget, and when the budget is produced my honourable friend will have an opportunity to judge whether the efforts of the government to deal with those two important priorities in our national economic structure meet with his approval.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government has talked about the perils of increasing the deficit. I was asking about the policy of deficit reduction combined with a policy of job creation. I am not asking about the budget. I am asking whether at the conference, in his opinion, any strategy emerged that in the short term would reconcile these two objectives. In his opinion, was there a strategy, or does it now remain for the government to develop a strategy? It is a fact that the conference split down the middle on this question.

Senator Roblin: I do not intend to offer my opinion to my honourable friend, because he knows that as a member of the cabinet it is not appropriate for me to do so.

Senator Frith: But you are reporting to us on the conference. That is all he is asking.

Senator Roblin: I am reporting on the conference and I will be glad to deal with that matter in an appropriate way. What I am saying to my honourable friend is that the government has listened to this debate in the conference and now has the responsibility to decide what to do. The way in which that decision is expressed to the people is in the budget. That's when he will hear what the government's opinion is and what my opinion is.

Senator MacEachen: Is the Leader of the Government saying that, having listened, there is some prospect now that the Minister of Finance will depart from the objective which he declared in his opening statement?

Senator Roblin: I think the Minister of Finance knows his own mind, and my honourable friend will find that exemplified in the budget.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, may I ask one more question to see if I can get the Leader of the Government to step out from behind the curtain and say something? Does he believe that in the fragile Canadian economy, in the precarious situation we face at the present time, it is possible to reduce the deficit? Is that the government's view, that it is possible to reduce the deficit and create jobs at the same time?

Senator Roblin: We are going to make our best effort to meet the question of how best to handle the deficit, whether it is to reduce it, whether it is to try to prevent it from growing, or whether it is to keep it in step with the changes in the economy. Whichever of the various solutions that are under consideration will be adopted, that will be made clear to my honourable friend when the budget is brought down. At the same time, the effect of those measures with respect to unemployment will be discussed as well.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have just one more question on this today. I did not want to avoid asking questions, I wanted to ask them about the conference. However, in his most recent reply the Leader of the Government seemed to be somewhat soft on whether government policy was to hold the deficit where it is, to reduce it or to increase it. Am I to understand now he has receded a bit from the stern statement he made earlier, that the government was still fastened, as stated by the Minister of Finance, on deficit reduction regardless?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend knows perfectly well that he is not going to get me to make a budget statement here in this house at this time, and he might as well stop trying.

Senator Frith: He is trying to get an answer to a question, that is all.

Senator Roblin: Not on that question during Question Period.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, now that we are talking about deficit reduction, may I mention that I read that the press secretary to the Minister of National Revenue said yesterday that a study of income tax evasion, by two University of Alberta professors, estimated that Ottawa is losing $8.6 billion a year in unreported income tax. I also read that a report for the federal Solicitor General on white-collar crime showed that an estimated $2.7 billion in unpaid taxes could have been recovered in the 1978 taxation year if everybody had been audited.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this. Can we conclude that the Minister of Finance, when he brings in his budget about two months from now, will not make any changes in the income tax structure that will distort the presuppositions on which Canadians carry on their businesses until a serious effort has been made to collect this money which, under the present law, is due to be paid, money which, as the figures cited reveal, would go a long way towards helping to balance the annual budget?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend had taken the trouble to read the whole of the statement he would undoubtedly have told the chamber that similar figures were developed by the various people concerned for prior years. In other words, this is no sudden discovery that there is an underground economy in this country in which people avoid paying tax. That is nothing new. It is a question of quantifying it each year. The amounts that have been calculated as being tax-avoided for the previous years are very substantial. They are even more substantial now because of inflation and the fact that the economy is growing. These are ongoing problems, and I can tell my honourable friend that the government will give the best consideration it can to the question of what measures that can help reduce the amount of tax avoidance can be introduced. Incidentally, if my honourable friend has any suggestions that he would like us to consider with respect to this matter, we would be glad to hear from him.

● (1500)

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, if the Leader of the Government in the Senate had been listening carefully, he would have noted that the figure I quoted was the 1978 taxation year and I emphasized that so that there would be no suggestion that this was a new phenomenon. I was trying to be as fair as the report that I have before me. I think it is offensive for the Leader of the Government in the Senate to suggest that I was trying to be unfair.

I go back to my question: Will the government try to do better than its predecessor, considering that its predecessor was not very successful in this respect and, consequently, have a beneficial effect upon the deficit? Can we have that assurance? Will the possibility that the government can do better than its predecessor be taken into account when the Minister of Finance is developing his budget policies?

Senator Roblin: I can give my honourable friend an unequivocal assurance that the government will do its utmost to do better than its predecessor, and I can hazard a guess that they will probably be successful.

TORONTO—PROPOSED DOMED STADIUM—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question raised in the Senate on January 23, 1985 by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz, regarding government assistance for the proposed domed stadium in Toronto.

(The answer follows:)

Canadian National owns about 80 acres in downtown Toronto which it has been attempting to develop over the past ten years. When fully developed the value of the properties will be increased many times over and the sooner these lands are commercially utilized, the sooner these returns will accrue to CN.

When the Province of Ontario selected a site within this property for its proposed stadium, CN recognized that such a project would act as a catalyst to accelerate the real estate development of the remaining 75 acres. From this purely business viewpoint, CN had a financial incentive to support the stadium project.

The Stadium will cost $150.0 million of which $130.0 million will be paid by the Stadium Corporation. CN undertook to raise the $20.0 million balance, a normal role for any developer of a project of this size. In return, CN will have a large parcel of serviced land suitable for the construction of three million square feet of buildings in a vital part of downtown Toronto. This $20.0 million investment will show a handsome return to CN.

In addition, CN has purchased $10.0 million equity in the Stadium Corporation (as part of the private sector consortium of 13 major Canadian corporations which in total will invest $70.0 million). Given the various benefits that share ownership provides, this investment represents excellent value; and CN foresees the opportunity of selling some or all of this equity at a premium in the medium term.

The Federal Government has made no commitment of funds to this project. The investment by CN is justified on the commercial returns it will earn for CN and represents no cross-subsidization of any kind.

ESTABLISHMENT OF AMERICAN PLANT IN CORNWALL, ONTARIO

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question raised in the Senate on February 14, 1985 by the Honourable Peter Bosa, regarding the establishment of an American plant in Cornwall, Ontario.

Kohler Ltd., a U.S. company recently incorporated in Canada, has accepted an offer of a $4,145,600 contribution to open a plant in Cornwall, Ontario to manufacture bathtubs, spas, and whirlpools. The assistance was granted under the Business and Industrial Development Program of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board.

The company will invest $11,720,000 to implement the project which is expected to create 183 jobs and is scheduled to begin in the spring of 1985. The new Kohler plant in Cornwall will produce, using new technology, a line of bathtubs, whirlpools, spas and related products for sale in Canada and the U.S. Counter tops as mentioned in the question are not part of the product line as presented to officials. Kohler Co. is a leading manufacturer of plumbing equipment in the United States and the Cornwall project, representing the company's first investment in Canada, will permit the company to supply the Canadian market from a Canadian plant rather than from the U.S.

A careful analysis of the project was undertaken by officials prior to the offer of assistance, and it was determined that the Kohler project would not have an unduly detrimental effect on existing Canadian manufacturers.

UNITED NATIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question raised in the Senate on February 26, 1985 by the Honourable Jeremiah S. Grafstein with respect to government policy at the United Nations.

(The answer follows:)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote the Director General of UNESCO, Mr. Amadou M'Bow, on October 1, 1984, and stated that Canada would keep its participation in UNESCO under continuing review. In that letter, a clear statement was made of the intention of the Canadian Government to keep its position open with respect to participation and that our ultimate attitude would be determined by the extent to which the organization is able to bring to a successful conclusion the reform movement currently underway.

Canada will continue to assess the progress of reform to measure the merits of Canada's continued participation.

VIA RAIL MAINTENANCE CENTRE LOCATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question raised in the Senate on February 19, 1985 by the Honourable Joseph-Philippe Guay regarding industry and VIA rail maintenance centre location.

(The answer follows:)

It is not proposed that Winnipeg be dropped as a maintenance centre. What has been proposed is that the scheduled new building in Winnipeg for that purpose be delayed in an attempt to conserve capital and to divert funds to the acquisition of much needed new equipment.

Indeed, with restoration of the "Supercontinental", some 35 additional man years of work will be available in Winnipeg.

We anticipate that in rescheduling of the capital projects that a new maintenance centre may be initiated in the future.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 3:

Hon. R. James Balfour moved the second reading of Bill C-23, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the Small Businesses Loans Act is a federal government loan guarantee program designed to assist new and existing small businesses in obtaining term financing for a variety of capital purposes. Under the program, borrowers obtain loans guaranteed by the government from private sector lending institutions at an interest rate of 1 per cent over the prime lending rates of the chartered banks. In addition to the chartered banks, approximately 500 private lenders, such as credit unions and trust companies, participate in SBLA lending, ensuring widespread delivery of a program which is truly national in its coverage. The efficient private sector delivery of the program is one of its most attractive features, because the degree of government involvement in both financial markets and program administration is minimized. Indeed, the simplicity of delivery and lack of red tape associated with the program have contributed greatly to its popularity with lenders and borrowers alike.

Since its enactment in 1961, over 170,000 loans totalling nearly $4 billion have been authorized under the act. In 1984 alone the existence of the program encouraged lenders to extend about $900 million in SBLA loans to nearly 30,000 small businesses. Many of the loans were made to businesses in the services and retail trade sectors, with businesses also represented from wholesale trade, construction, transportation and communications.

Bill C-23 was introduced in the House of Commons on January 23, 1985 with the hope that the legislation would be passed quickly to avoid any major disruption in this popular and useful program. This urgency remains as the current act expires March 31, 1985. It has now been more than a month since the lending ceiling under the current act was reached and no new loans have been guaranteed during this time. Lenders have continued to make loans under the terms of the program and these applications are now being held for processing. Therefore, it is important that this legislation be approved quickly to ensure borrowing under the act continues and that applications submitted since January 21 can be registered.

Since its introduction in the house, Bill C-23 has passed through the normal stages of house debate at second reading, referral to and in-depth study by the Standing Committee on Regional Development, reporting and approval at third reading and now consideration by the Senate. Most of the changes to the act proposed in the bill have been accepted at all stages in their initial form. They are: Increasing the current lending ceiling by $300 million from $1.5 billion to $1.8 billion to ensure lending continues under current terms to March 31, 1985; providing for a new five-year lending period commencing April 1, 1985, and expiring on March 31, 1990 to create a more stable planning environment for both borrowers and lenders; setting the lending ceiling for the upcoming period at $1 billion with future adjustments to this level to be made annually by an appropriation act; increasing the limit for eligibility under the program to firms with gross annual sales not exceeding $2 million from the current limit of $1.5 million; assuring that in the case where two or more businesses with SBLA loans amalgamate and the combined total of SBLA loans exceed $100,000, in the event of a default the minister will not reject the claim on the basis that the SBLA loan total exceeds the $100,000 limit.

In addition, cost-sharing measures were proposed initially to include a government-lender loss-sharing ratio of 90 to 10 rather than the current situation where the government absorbs 100 per cent of loan losses, and a one-time fee of 1 per cent of the amount of the SBLA loans to be paid by the lender at the time of loan registration.

Opinion differed concerning these cost-sharing measures, in particular the introduction of a 1 per cent up-front fee payable by the lenders on the amount of the loan. Representations by small business and financial organizations before the standing committee, and by small business people during country-wide consultations by the Minister of State for Small Business indicated that if the lenders absorbed the 1 per cent fee, lending under the SBLA program would be reduced significantly.

In response to these views, the minister introduced the following amendments which were subsequently approved by the House of Commons at third reading. These amendments are: First, the 1 per cent up-front fee payable by the lenders remains but the bill has been amended to enable lenders at their discretion to pass this fee on to the borrower; and second, in the event that a substantial portion of the approved loan, that is, more than 50 per cent, is not advanced by the lender to the borrower, a portion of the 1 per cent up-front fee attributable to the unadvanced portion of the loan will be rebated to the lender and, where applicable, will be passed on to the borrower by the lender.

The current proposed loss-sharing arrangement between the government and the lenders of 90 to 10 has been altered to 85 to 15. These amendments have been well received by the small business community. Both the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Organization of Small Business support them. As well, the Canadian Bankers' Association has accepted the increase in the risk-sharing ratio and intends to promote the SBLA program more widely.

In conclusion, the measures contained in Bill C-23 undoubtedly represent the most comprehensive revision of the Small Businesses Loans Act in its nearly 25 year history. By extending the program and implementing the changes proposed in the legislation, this government is demonstrating its concern for the vitality of the small business sector and, of equal importance, is sending out a message that it is determined to achieve its goals in a fiscally responsible manner.

Again I stress the urgency associated with this bill and ask you, honourable senators, to support the speedy passage of Bill C-23 through the Senate, a bill which is so important to existing and future small businesses in Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

• (1510)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in speaking to Bill C-23, I start by assuring you of two facts of which you are probably all aware. One is that, traditionally, on second reading, we speak on the principle of the bill. The second point is that we, on this side, and I think all honourable senators and parliamentarians support the principle of this bill as we supported the principle of the original bill which it amends. There is no question concerning support for the principle. The only issues raised with reference to debate on second reading are questions as to whether this bill fulfills and expresses that principle; whether it fulfills and expresses it adequately and whether, in some cases, the legislation before us, in fact, is contrary to the principle we all support.

[Senator Balfour]

For the reasons advanced by Senator Balfour, I believe that this bill, based on its principle and on the question of its urgency, should receive favourable consideration by the Senate.

However, I think the committee should examine a few points with reference to my reservation about whether or not the principle of this bill and the principle of the original bill are adequately expressed by the legislation before us. For the benefit of honourable senators and for the members of the committee, I would flag three examples of my concern.

My first concern is whether the amount available is adequate. Senator Balfour implicitly referred to some reservations in the small business community as to whether the bill, as originally prepared, did provide adequate funding to achieve the bill's principle. He also pointed out that the original amount of $1.5 billion has been raised to $1.8 billion. The committee may consider whether that is a sufficient increase. In this connection, I understand the committee will hear evidence from the minister as well as any other evidence it may wish to call.

My second concern is as to whether or not the added provisions of this bill, in addition to the 1 per cent up-front premium, make the borrowing process and the objectives of the bill more difficult to achieve. Certainly, the 1 per cent premium falls into that category. As Senator Balfour has pointed out, it has been modified, but has it been sufficiently modified? Have this added condition and other conditions that appear in the bill, to some extent, frustrated the purpose of the bill by making the process more difficult? In other words, to use the metaphor used by Senator Balfour, has the net of the red tape been increased? There is no question that the red tape was increased in the original bill. There have been some modifications to that. I hope the committee will look at the question of whether or not the net red tape has been increased and, if the committee comes to the conclusion that it has, it should seek some undertakings from the minister to correct that situation in the future.

If honourable senators agree with the principle of this bill, and that the act should continue in force after March 31, it is in that context that the committee, if it finds that some changes ought to be made, might obtain some undertakings from the minister to make those changes at the next revision.

My third concern is with a new element in this bill, which is added to the desired power for legislation by order in council. A good deal of attention has been paid in this place and by interested organizations to the desirability of increasing the discretion of cabinet to make decisions that might otherwise be made by Parliament related to the subject matter and the scope of this bill.

Honourable senators, I repeat that we on this side believe that this bill should receive second reading. We support its principle. We hope it will be referred to a committee. We ask that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce since I understand that committee is now organized to receive the bill. We ask that the committee, when it studies the bill, give careful attention to the details that are properly before it, particularly as to whether or not these and any other elements might frustrate or not adequately express the generally supported principle of the bill.

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that, if the Honourable Senator Balfour speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators, Senator Frith has raised some important and legitimate questions concerning this bill which, we agree, could most conveniently and best be investigated by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Balfour, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, in my capacity as chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I might intervene to say that the Minister of State for Small Business, Mr. André Bissonnette, is standing by to appear before the committee tomorrow. Since it is appropriate to give a minister a specific time for his appearance, I have suggested that he come at 4 o'clock. It may, therefore, be necessary for me tomorrow to ask the Senate for permission for the committee to sit while the Senate is sitting.

I may also say that, after we have heard from the minister, it will be my intention to adjourn the committee, and to begin a new meeting immediately to continue our pre-study of Bill C-15. Our witnesses on that matter will be from the Canadian Association of Advanced Technology Manufacturers.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1984-85

SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-34, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending 31st March, 1985.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-34, Appropriation Bill No. 4, 1984-85, provides supply for the supplementary estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985. The final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985 total approximately $1.8 billion and bring the total tabled estimates for 1984-85 to $104.9 billion.

These are the supplementary estimates that the National Finance Committee dealt with last week and which were reported by Senator Leblanc on behalf of the committee a few days ago.

The supplementary estimates (C) were tabled in the Senate on March 12, 1985, and were referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance the same day. On March 14, 1985, they were discussed with Treasury Board officials.

The total of $1.8 billion represented by supplementary estimates (C) consists of a net increase in statutory requirements of some $ .6 billion, and some $1.2 billion of new spending authority is being recommended to Parliament for approval.

As indicated to the National Finance Committee, the proposed increase for the statutory requirements consists of a number of major elements, including $222 million for statutory advances to the Mortgage Insurance Fund for the purpose of meeting claims under section 8 of the National Housing Act, $205 million in statutory payments to cover insured health services under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and the Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act of 1977, $138 million in statutory post-secondary education payments to the provinces pursuant to Part VI of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act of 1977, $122 million in statutory payments to the provinces for fiscal stabilization under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, $114 million in payments, of which $99 million are statutory and $15 million voted, in respect of Atlantic fisheries restructuring, a $72 million reduction in the estimate of statutory advances under the National Housing Act due to lower than anticipated demand, and an $89 million reduction in the estimate of Guaranteed Income Supplement statutory payments, primarily due to a reduction in the rate of inflation.

The new spending authority being recommended includes the following major items, which were discussed a few days ago: a $300 million payment to Canadair Financial Corporation, to reduce the level of debt existing at the time of its creation a year ago—and I am sure we will be discussing that later in the year as we deal with the estimates for the current fiscal year; a $200 million vote for Petroleum Compensation Program payments, $150 million in payments under the Petroleum Incentives Program, due to increased exploration activity; and a $150 million equity payment to de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited to pay down existing debt and to continue planned operations. There is a $148 million payment to National Defence for the acceleration of equipment projects. This would be in respect of the purchase of the Challenger aircraft, something which we discussed a few days ago.

There is $112 million under the Public Housing Program to enable CMHC to charge expenditures to the appropriation in the year incurred.

There were 39 $1 votes in the supplementary estimates (C). A listing of these votes was provided to members of the committee, and that list is, of course, available to any honourable senator who might wish it.

The 39 $1 votes, as well as the others, were discussed with Treasury Board officials at the March 14 meeting of the National Finance Committee.

Should honourable senators require additional information on supplementary estimates (C), I will be pleased to try to provide it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Bill C-34 is a bill of supply, covering supplementary estimates (C), as Senator Doody has just pointed out, and specifically covering the final period of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985.

As Senator Doody has also pointed out, Bill C-34 reflects a request for the moneys already covered by the estimates referred to the National Finance Committee and since reported by that committee.

It is not the business of the Senate, in my opinion, to refuse supply or to delay supply, especially after it has considered the appropriate estimates. Borrowing authorities are in quite a different category, as we all know, both theoretically and practically.

I know that in closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill, Senator Doody will give us the usual undertakings and assurances. Those honourable senators who have been here for some time, and particularly those who have also served in the other place, will know that there is something a bit arcane about some of the customs that surround supply bills. There are some almost liturgical aspects, requiring that it be said that the bill is in its usual form, and so on.

Senator Grosart was always the one to call—

Senator Flynn: That is in respect of interim supply, not supplementary supply.

Senator Frith: I think it applies also to this bill. I note that this was something that was raised in the other place.

Senator Flynn: Not on this.

Senator Doody: Not on the supplementary surely; on the interim.

Senator Frith: With reference to the undertaking with regard to the one-thirds, and so on, I think you will find it is in respect of interim supply; but the undertaking that the bill is in its usual form is one that has to be stated so that one does not have to worry about the supply bill not reflecting the estimates.

[Senator Doody.]

I assume that we will adhere to that catechism aspect in closing. It should also be understood that in supporting this supply bill, the opposition should not be taken as supporting any of the economic policies that might be corollaries thereto.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: I appreciate the comments of Senator Frith. Certainly, I shall be, as always, faithful to the catechism. I can assure honourable senators that the form of this bill is the usual one for a supplementary supply bill, and in no way would it change the amount of the supplementary estimates (C) which were before us.

I want to thank honourable senators for their indulgence in allowing the motion for the second reading of the bill to be put at this sitting. I can assure Senator Frith that the government will in no way misplace the trust that he has so graciously placed in it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1985-86

SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-35, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1986.

He said: Honourable senators, Appropriation Bill No. 1, 1985-86, provides interim supply for the first three months of the 1985-86 fiscal year. The 1985-86 estimates were tabled in the Senate on February 26, as some honourable senators may remember, and were immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. The committee discussed the estimates with officials of the Treasury Board Secretariat on that same day.

Appropriation Bill No. 1, 1985-86 contains $10,502,000,000 of voted items which are required to meet government expenditure requirements to the end of June, while the main estimates are being reviewed by the various committees. A second appropriation bill will be tabled prior to June 30, 1985, to secure release of the balance of the estimates.

The bill before us contains a general proportion of three-twelfths of all votes, plus additional proportions for some 42 votes. The additional proportions are required to meet payments of a seasonal nature in some programs, to meet payments in accordance with certain agreements, and a need, in other instances, to make major payments before the end of June.

I should point out that, as usual, in no case is Parliament being asked to pass the entire amount of any vote. Parliament will, of course, have ample opportunity to debate the entire main estimates later.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, in anticipation of Senator Frith's request, I will recite part of the catechism, as has been the custom in this and other legislatures mounted on the British system. The proportions requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the Government of Canada up to June 30, 1985. In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by the bill. The form of this bill is the usual one for interim supply bills, and the passage of this bill will not prejudice the rights of members to criticize any item in the estimates when they come up for consideration in committee, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as the result of the passing of this measure.

Honourable senators, I commend the interim supply bill to your approval.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there is very little to add to what Senator Doody has said. This bill represents a portion, the three-twelfths, of the estimates for the reasons he explained. I can remember, while I was in his position, studying the various agreements and undertakings that required such measures to be more than three-twelfths in anticipation that Senator Phillips would ask me about them, and he usually did. However, I do not propose to ask Senator Doody about them. Of course, it is quite in order for the government to ask for this interim supply and I believe it should be granted.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY IMPACT OF ITS REPORT ENTITLED: "SOIL AT RISK—CANADA'S ERODING FUTURE"

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Sparrow, seconded by the Honourable Senator Riel, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine the impact of the recommendations contained in its Report on soil and water conservation in Canada, entitled: "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future", tabled in the Senate on 6th November, 1984, and to inquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence received on the subject and the work accomplished during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, one of the greatest Canadian fallacies is that we have an almost inexhaustable supply of good land. Many Canadians, perhaps because we have such a small population, because we are a major food exporter or because we have tremendous open areas, seem to think that this can go on for ever and that our soil is not something that is deserving of our concern. The facts are very different. We have a very limited amount of good land. In fact, the total class one farm land in Canada is a little less than the size of the province of Nova Scotia. Although we are the second largest country in the world, only about 9 per cent—

Senator Frith: What did you say about Nova Scotia?

Senator Molgat: That the total amount of class one farm land in Canada—remembering that there are seven classes of farm land, half of which can be cultivated and two of which are really top notch—can be put into the province of Nova Scotia.

In fact, Senator Sparrow, who spoke in this debate earlier, mentioned that if you went to the top of the CN tower in Toronto you could see 50 per cent of the good quality farm land in Canada. Canadians continue to think that we do not need to worry about our land, that we have lots of it. That is not true. Approximately 9 per cent of all of Canada can be considered as cultivatable land. Of that 9 per cent, half is used for other purposes—housing, cities, highways, recreation and so on. So of the total land available for cropping, we end up with about 4.5 per cent.

During the course of our study, which has culminated in this report, "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future" we did not attempt to do the basic research ourselves. We accumulated all the information we could find. A great deal of work on this problem had been done in Canada by various bodies at various times, but it had never been co-ordinated. In fact we found that in many government departments there was some disenchantment because, while they recognized the seriousness of the problem, it seemed that Canadians did not and, as a result, these departments and the officials concerned were unable to get a focus on the question. In Ontario during the period 1951 to 1971, 20 years, more than ten acres of good land were lost per hour. That is not per day but per hour. In western terms that means almost a half section of land per day was lost to agriculture.

The other thing our committee found is that the losses are not confined to one part of the country. We in the west seem to think that dust storms are the great problem but in Nova Scotia, for example, it is another problem—water erosion or too much water under the soil—and in Ontario the problems are different again. We learned that in the St. Lawrence valley organic material in the soil has been badly depleted because of monoculture and long cultivation. In parts of western Canada we found that salinization is becoming a greater problem. So the aim of our committee was really to focus this material, to get it all in one place.

I want to join in the comments made by Senator Sparrow in appreciation of the work of our staff on the committee and all who participated in it. They did an outstanding job. Also, I want to commend Senator Sparrow for taking the initiative to bring this question forward and carrying it through in the work of the committee. I know that since the publication of the report he has been extremely busy speaking across the country because there have been a lot of demands made upon him by various groups, not necessarily agricultural groups, interested in conservation. I know that some of my colleagues on the committee have been doing the same thing.

It is extremely important that we get the message across, that we get governments at all levels—federal, provincial and municipal—concerned about the issue. It is not simply a farmers' problem. It is a national problem. We know how important agriculture is to Canada, yet the voice of agriculture is growing ever weaker. Today only 4 per cent of Canadians make their living from the soil. Agriculture has to depend on a smaller and smaller political force and a smaller group speaking on its behalf, so the nation has to be concerned about the issue.

● (1540)

Senator Frith: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator Molgat: Certainly.

Senator Frith: Concerning the 4 per cent who earn their living from the soil, that is not limited to those who are growing just cereal grains. It means people who grow grain to feed beef, and so on, who actually make a living from a farm.

Senator Molgat: It is 4 per cent of Canadians who are now directly on the farm. There are many more, of course, in agriculture-related industries, be it packing plants, farm machinery companies, and so on. The 4 per cent applies to those who actually make their living from the soil. Yet that 4 per cent has been doing a tremendous job for Canadians in producing very low cost food. If we look at the figures, we find that in 1952 Canadians were spending 21.6 per cent of their income on food. In 1982, 30 years later, they were spending only 14.6 per cent. So the farming industry has been doing a great job for Canadians. From an export standpoint, farm exports have been one of the major elements in Canada's international trade. Therefore it is an extremely important industry for Canada.

Looking at the long term, we have all been impressed by and concerned about the pictures we have seen on television and the stories coming out of Africa. I refer to the Ethiopian disaster, the problems of the Sahel and so on. This may sound an exaggeration, but if in Canada we are not careful, then some years in the future we could experience difficulties in feeding ourselves if we do not take care of our soil resources.

It is estimated that the good soils in western Canada, the organic soils, took some 10,000 years to develop. Following the ice age, and so on, the organic soils developed over a period of approximately 10,000 years. The west has been settled for only 100 years and we have lost 50 per cent of the organic material in our soil. So it is urgent that we reverse the process. That really is the objective of the report, "Soil at Risk" and of the recommendations contained in that report. Its objective is to mobilize public opinion across this country, and to mobilize governments at all levels to focus on this question. Some of that will take money, but a great deal can be done without any great expenditure, by simply reversing the process, by reversing some of our farming techniques.

The committee therefore has been concerned about getting the story across. As I have mentioned, the chairman and other members of the committee have travelled across the country making speeches. At the first printing of the report, which was in June, 1984, 15,000 copies were printed, and those were soon depleted. A second printing of 10,000 copies was authorized by the Senate in December, 1984 and, I am told, we are now down to 700 copies, out of a total of 25,000. Therefore I hope that the Senate will consider a motion to print—

Senator Doody: An arrangement has already been made to print a further 10,000 copies.

Senator Molgat: It is a continuing demand, which comes from many directions. I have received one request from a Canadian group of educators who will be attending a conference in Bangalore, India, in August, 1985, entitled "Science and Technology, Education and Future Human Needs". That group has requested copies so that they can show other nations the concern that Canada has for these questions.

The proposal now is that we refer the report back to committee. I know that the committee at present is involved with many activities such as studying the fishing industry and the submissions by the Minister of Finance. However, it is important to have the report referred back to that committee in order that we can hear from the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that he is prepared to discuss with members of the committee action he has already undertaken and to discuss also where we go from here. Therefore I hope that honourable senators will do whatever they can to ensure distribution of this report in those areas where they think it can be helpful. In this matter we need the help of both provincial and municipal governments. In my view, it represents a greater challenge for Canada than the acid rain question. As a nation, we stand to lose a great deal more, in the long run, if we do not move immediately in this field.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I am sure, will appreciate the remarks of Senator Molgat and the importance of this report. I join with Senator Molgat and others who have spoken on this matter in saying that we appreciate the fine work undertaken by the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry in connection with this study. Senator Sparrow has shown a great deal of initiative and has been instrumental in producing an excellent report with the help of the committee members and officials. The Senate is sometimes criticized by those who do not understand how it works, but I believe that some of its best efforts are demonstrated in the work of its committees. The work of the Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee is on a par with the excellent work undertaken by other Senate committees.

Certainly our land and soil resources are of vital importance to Canadians, and the preservation of the quality and productivity of our soil is essential not only to our industrial life and economic prosperity, but also to the very existence of this country as a nation. When dealing with agriculture, I believe we have to use a criterion somewhat different from that which we use in dealing with other industries. Agriculture is a major and basic industry, and from time to time Canadian farmers have great difficulty in dealing with their problems. One of the great challenges to Canadian agriculture is to be productive and efficient on what is really a very limited quantity of land in the northern hemisphere and far north, where the growing season is often very short and the variety of crops that we can grow is quite restricted. For that reason we need to take special care.

One of the disturbing aspects of this problem over the years is the way that urban growth has often encroached on our best agricultural soil, because our cities are not constructed in mountainous regions or in areas where the topography is difficult. Very often it is easier to build cities where the topography is level, the soil is good and rocks are few. More bucks can be made in a development area having that kind of soil than by going the hard route and trying to construct houses and develop cities on inferior soil.

Senator Molgat pointed out that the number of Canadians engaged in agriculture is really quite small, and the percentage is getting smaller all the time. At a meeting of the committee this morning, officials of the Farm Credit Corporation produced figures showing that the number of economically efficient farms in Canada is down to 220,000. Of that figure, according to their submission, 40,000 are in danger of economic collapse, with the present state of the market, and the heavy debt load that farmers have to carry. A few years ago the experts said that the way for agriculture to go, in order to be efficient, was to increase input, increase the size of the unit, and increase capitalization. But no one forecast the increase in interest rates and the tremendously huge food surpluses in the United States, or that food prices would often go down while costs of production would continue to increase. Yet, these innovative farmers are able to increase their production, very often under more and more difficult economic circumstances.

● (1550)

This is a very important subject. It is easy to get up and say, "Well, you know, the farmers are not looking after their own farms. The farms will blow away, they are eroded." A farmer knows what to do on his farm; he is the person most concerned with protecting that soil; he knows that good soil is necessary for his living this year and next year. However, sometimes, because of the economy, he cannot afford to undertake the kind of conservation measures that he knows he really should be undertaking, but he needs an income that particular year, so he has to use that income simply to survive that year.

Sometimes those practices—and I think the farmers themselves will agree—are not the best, but he has to adopt them for economic reasons over which the individual farmer certainly has no control. The need to have a large cash flow dictates his farming practices.

The federal government has a responsibility in the field of agriculture, very obviously. We share that responsibility under our Constitution with provincial governments. They have their ministers of agriculture, we have our Minister of Agriculture, and, I might add, our Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, who is a type of minister of agriculture, I guess, as well as being a minister of trade and so on. It is a shared responsibility. I am not a lawyer, but I suppose if you looked at it from a legal standpoint perhaps the provinces have a greater amount of muscle and a more direct input into what happens on an individual farm, or farms that are totally within a province. Therefore, it is necessary, in my judgment, for provinces to act in concert with the federal government, and it is to be hoped that everybody concerned will go in the right direction.

I think what is necessary is for individual farmers to be encouraged to undertake the particular practices on their own farms that are the most beneficial from a soil standpoint and from a long-term productivity standpoint. I think that, in a sense, every single farm in this country should be looked at as an experimental farm or as a demonstration farm, which might be a better phrase; that those who have knowledge of what practices are best to follow from a conservation point of view should inform the producers what is best to do in that respect. Sometimes, perhaps, we should use an individual farm to demonstrate what can be done. Sometimes that might take a little incentive, a little seed money. There may be a part of the farm that should be in barley or legumes on a permanent basis, and perhaps some help could be provided by way of purchasing seed, or on a short-term basis perhaps even some money could be provided to help the producer put a particular acreage in a particular crop, which would be money very well invested for all the people of Canada.

There is in Saskatchewan and Alberta a development that I find very, very troublesome. I suppose I can be considered to be criticizing governments from a political standpoint, but nevertheless I think it is something we should question. There are many acres of farmland that are owned by provincial governments and they are leased out, and have been over the years. Most of the leases are pasture leases for livestock, for beef and sheep production, but mainly beef production, of course. The revenue to provincial governments is small. Provincial governments like revenue. Then they can say that their practice of hoping to sell the land can be justified or supported or enforced because they do not think government should be in the business of owning land. You can take that point of view, that the individual farmer should own his land and have title. I am glad to own land and to have title to it, and I can understand the motivation for that.

What is happening is that there seems to be some pressure, certainly some encouragement, by provincial authorities, for ranchers or farmers with grazing leases to purchase those leases, and they purchase them perhaps for $100 an acre, which is $16,000 for a quarter section, which I guess at current interest rates is $2,000 a year that that quarter section will have to earn in order to support the purchase price or the interest on the purchase price. Grazing leases are not expensive, and I don't want to quote a figure because I do not have a precise figure, but often a quarter section would raise 10 head of beef cattle, perhaps 15 head of beef cattle, and that is all. It might be said that the cows represent $25 a head for the summer. If it is 12 head, that amounts to $300, so the grazing lease might be $300, $400 or $500.

However, when the farmer owns it,—perhaps the neighbours want to buy it too, the kids want to farm in the future so the farmer says, “Yes, I’ll buy”—the cost could well be $2,000 a year to service it. How are you going to pay for it? The farmer says, “Well, I’ve got a big four-wheel tractor, I’ve got a big cultivator, a deep-tillage machine, I’ll go out and break it. I will take it out of grass production and put it into production of grain, because it is only from grain that I can make enough revenue to service the purchase of that land.” That is what is happening. Hundreds and hundreds of thousands of acres, if the statistics were looked at, in the last two, three or four years in the prairie provinces, virgin prairie, have been torn up and broken, as the word is, and put into the production of grain, usually wheat. The farmer feels, and really knows, that he can make a greater income from the production of grain.

The question we have to ask ourselves is this. From the standpoint of soil conservation, over the long term is that the best way to use that soil? I hope that the Standing Committee on Agriculture, of which I was an active member in former days, will hear not only the federal Minister of Agriculture, which is important, but will also hear the provincial ministers of agriculture, because they are really going to have to put in whatever the conservation practices they agree are necessary. Perhaps consensus could be reached on this subject, even if a consensus often is not reached on some other subjects. I think that as a country we can make progress in conserving our soil, making the best possible use of our soil, and making certain that these vast resources, important to Canada, are preserved and conserved for future generations.

I would like to add my congratulations to Senator Sparrow and the committee on a good job well done, and I believe that this continuing study is beneficial.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DAY OF GREECE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose, pursuant to Notice of Inquiry of Wednesday, March 13, 1985:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the National Day of Greece, and to the contribution of Ancient Greece to conservative thought.

He said: Honourable senators, it was from listening to my elders and betters in the Senate that I learned that on national days those of us with more recent ethnic origins than some of you made some reference to the history of their land, and I hope you will indulge me if I speak of Greece, since yesterday was the anniversary of the beginning of the War of Independence in 1821. Napoleon said that Greek history was a succession of village wars described by brilliant writers. This is true. One of these brilliant writers, Thucydides, wrote 25 centuries ago that his book was a possession forever. This contention of his, arrogant though it may sound, has remained unchallenged. That is why we can learn so much from the ancient Greeks. Other ancient nations have histories as glorious as Greek history, but Greek writers told us about theirs brilliantly. It is for this reason that Pitt the Elder said to the headmaster of Eton, “Teach my son Thucydides’ history, the manual of statesmen.” The son in question, as you all know, of course, was Pitt the Younger, who became Prime Minister at 24 and went on to defeat Napoleon, and he was very fond of quoting the ancient Greek classics.

[Senator Argue.]

● (1600)

I will also remind you that when Harold MacMillan, later to become Prime Minister of Great Britain and now sitting in the House of Lords where he is making very fine speeches at last report, was found wounded in the trenches in World War I he was reading an ancient Greek text—a habit I commend to wounded senators.

Last year I spoke to you about some ancient Greek parallels to modern liberalism. I had some delightful commentary on the part of Senator Flynn. I am sorry he is not here so that I would get some more commentary this time, but perhaps he will walk in.

In the spirit of bipartisanship today I shall give you some ancient Greek precedents to modern conservatism. First, I should like to deal with control of the media. There is not anything that the Greeks had not invented before. Ancient Greek conservatives in Homeric times really did control the media. They called them bards in those days. They fed them well, they blinded them and told them what to write.

A conservative legislator in an allied nation says he wants to buy CBS so as to write Dan Rathers’ script. I see a strong line of thought descending from Homer to this legislator’s thinking. But there is more. In the sixth century B.C. one of the predecessors of those who run “the big blue machine” decided to get an ancient Greek conservative called Pisistratus elected, so he took a chariot to which he appended some wings, he painted it gold, found a very beautiful lady that he put beside the candidate and toured him about Attica and, of course, he was elected.

Then we have the classic case of Thersites who is the first democrat, according to Anthony Andrews, the former regius professor of classics. In the The Iliad second rhapsody, line 188, Homer, one of those blinded bards, who was told what to write, and did, tells us how Ulysses dealt with Thersites. Ulysses, as we read in the text from Homer, was a kind of minister of defence. We are told—and I read my translation: “Stand to your post, he went around telling the various ministers, and bid your people also keep their places. You do not yet know the full mind of the King; he was consulting us but we were not all at the council today to hear what he had to say. See to it lest he be angry and do us a mischief for the pride of kings is great and the hand of God is with them."

But when Ulysses came against any member of the ordinary people who dared to make a noise, he rebuked him, saying: "Hold your peace and listen to better men than yourself, new boy. You are nobody in council. We cannot all be kings. It is not well that there should be many masters. One man must be supreme—one to whom God has given the sacred trust of sovereignty over all of us."

The rest took their seats and kept to their own several places, Homer tells us, but this fellow Thersites, who was of the common people, still went on wagging his unbridled tongue—a man of many words, and those unseemly; a monger of sedition, a railer against all who were in authority. His head ran up to a point, but there was little hair on the top of it. Remember the pointed heads that were so criticized by conservatives south of the border. Achilles and Ulysses, two of the ministers of the King at the time, he was called Agamemnon, hated Thersites worst of all, for it was with them that he was most wont to wrangle with a shrill squeaky voice. Those of you who occasionally watch the televised proceedings of the House of Commons might have seen how some of the Conservative members object to shrill voices.

Thersites went on railing and Ulysses at once went up to him and rebuked him sternly. "Check your glib tongue, Thersites," said he, "and babble not a word further. Chide not with princes when you are low in the opinion polls or you will be faced with extinction."

Senator Murray is in that tradition in his remarks to the Gazette. Ulysses, as I said earlier, was the minister of defence. He was a Conservative, of course, being one of the kings of the time, and he was given to controversial travel that all of you have heard about and he associated with some dubious characters, but he had a very good chief of staff. When they were travelling in the neighbourhood of the Sirens, who were topless ladies, his chief of staff tied Ulysses to a mast and would not release him when Ulysses wanted to consort with these insufficiently clad ladies. So he stayed, so to speak, in his post.

What I wanted to recite to you are excerpts from a speech from an author in the fifth century who was a Conservative whose name we do not know, alas, because it merits to be known and whom classicists have dubbed the "Old Oligarch," and I will give you some of these excerpts and you will see that the ancient Greeks said it all.

One of my colleagues in the Senate said, "you do remember that in ancient Athens only taxpayers voted and women did not," and my colleague approved of this. I wish he would say so publicly and not just to me. I will not reveal his name.

Here are some of the excerpts from the "Old Oligarch":

Let me tell you that here in Athens the ordinary people have been given more privileges than the rich . . . And the ordinary people have put expensive tax burdens on the rich . . . It is no wonder that the Wicked and the Cunning rule . . . Moreover the ordinary people act as if anything that is proposed to favour the better folk is, by definition, harmful to ordinary people . . . for they are more interested in power than in the sound management of the state . . .

And these lazy layabouts—the ordinary people—will not even keep in their place . . . Indeed, you cannot tell them apart from the better folk . . . Why, they dress as well, they own things of equal quality with the better folk . . . and they think that they have the right to be heard on an equal basis with the rich . . .

Things are better done in Sparta . . .

This was a conservative society south of the border from Athens.

There the better folk prevail and the others, natives, or immigrants, don't have a thing to say . . .

Would you believe that we spend money to subsidize spectacles so that the ignorant rabble can be entertained . . . And they expect to be paid while they serve the state and sing, or dance or even when they serve in the armed forces so that these lazy layabouts get richer and businessmen get poorer . . .

As for the provinces,—

These were the dependencies of Athens—

they are despised by the people who rule here at the centre, especially when the provincial governments are in the hands of rich conservative men . . . The ordinary people here at the centre like nothing more than to take the money of the provinces, making them work and keeping them powerless . . .

And the central tribunals in Athens always take decisions that go against the interest of sound conservative provincial governments . . .

And that is how the provinces have become enslaved by the centre . . .

And let us not forget that our populace has now become of mixed blood through marriages with people who have come here from all over the world so that the populace is no longer of pure blood . . .

And we have poured money like water to build public buildings . . . and athletic parks, and public baths with dressing rooms if you please, for ordinary people . . .

And if one dare criticize them they are liable to start a libel action against us . . .

The rich expect to be treated with injustice, to be ripped off . . .

We have more statutory holidays here and lower hours of work than anywhere else . . . And all kinds of decisions are taken by the ordinary people and their representatives, and the rich have to pay . . . And we don't even get respect . . . as we used to.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

• (1610)

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I rise to congratulate my countryman for bringing to our attention the conservative theories of ancient Greece. I presume many of you must have heard his treatise on the liberal aspects of ancient Greece.

Prior to his speech today, I did point out to him that it was Greece that introduced democracy to the world, but it was a very limited democracy where only free men were allowed to vote. When I say "free men," in the Greek interpretation this meant a taxpayer. I do not recall that women of that period were allowed to vote.

This democracy, which we have copied in the western world, has been somewhat altered, if not improved upon, in my opinion, in adopting these great Greek ethics.

I also pointed out to him, and I do so again, that there are some differences between ancient Greece and present-day Greece. As a youngster of 16 or 18 years, when I was asked to speak to a Greek organization in western Canada, the subject of my speech was the following: "We know who your forefathers are, but who are you?" This, perhaps, applies a little more subtly and a little more expectantly to what is going on today in modern Greece.

I congratulate my countryman on what I consider, and what Graeme Greene always refers to, as an entertainment because, indeed, no one has entertained us as well in this chamber as has Senator Gigantès. I am delighted with what he had to say today. However, I think he takes his text, if I may say so, from the Oracle of Delphi. The Oracle of Delphi spoke in what we refer to as split tongues. Never did they say anything directly; always they said something that was ambiguous—it had a double meaning and a double interpretation. My learned friend, a journalist, was able to capitalize on that to the extent that he was able to point out to us the interpretation of those things that he believes to have been conservative. In other words, he took a very liberal view of the situation.

I would go so far as to make one other observation. My honourable friend spoke of Ulysses, the great leader of Greece, the great fighter, the great liberator, the man of many tasks, concerning whom, I might add, people like Tennyson have written poems which will go down as long as people read the English language.

Senator Frith: James Joyce, too, but in a different mode.

Senator Barootes: Yes. I was speaking of the perfect poet of England, Lord Alfred Tennyson.

Senator Frith: I know about him too.

Senator Barootes: As Tennyson said in his poem Ulysses:

To follow knowledge like a sinking star,

Beyond the utmost bound of human thought.

As Senator Gigantès was speaking of the dictatorship, the autocracy, the oligarchness of British and Canadian and other rulers, I thought that indeed Ulysses and others who were oligarchs did a great deal of good in their day, apparently, although the liberal interpretation of what they did is perhaps infamous. In my reading of history, which is a conservative reading, I admit, we, in our time, have also had a Ulysses to whom most of my friend's subjugations and comments would apply. It was only a little more than a year ago that our oligarch decided to resign. "Ulysses" was present in Canadian history very recently. He may have accomplished a great deal for Canada, no doubt, but also he had the mind, the intellect, and the strength of character to insist that what he wanted to be done should be done. There are some people who have made valuable contributions to history in that way.

Honourable senators, I rise to speak extemporaneously today because it is the day after our national independence declaration in Greece. Kolokotronis was the great leader who threw off the yoke of the Turk; but I did not hear a word about the throwing off of the yoke of the Turk. I must draw to your attention that yesterday was the anniversary of the day that the Greeks, who had been under Turkish rule for several centuries, rose in revolt again to obtain, for that proud nation, independence.

If we do nothing else, honourable senators, we should keep in mind that that nation which gave us democracy, which gave us the arts, which gave us the very alphabet we use, and gave us letters, and which wrote for us the Bible which many of us revere, had been under subjugation for many years. Today we can celebrate the anniversary of the day of its independence and hope that it continues to enjoy that independence through time immemorial.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES
REFERRED TO STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the calendar year 1984 (Sessional Paper No. 331-299) be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE RESEARCH—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether it is a fact, as reported, that Caspar Weinberger, at the meeting of NATO ministers yesterday, proposed that Canada and other countries share in the research on the strategic defence initiative; and if that is the case, can we be told whether Canada has accepted that invitation?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that it is correct that at the NATO meeting in Luxembourg yesterday the United States invited all the members of NATO to take part in the activities that are going on with respect to that research project.

I can also say that the Government of Canada has not accepted that invitation, and if it does so at all it will only be after it has been given cabinet consideration. I have no information I can give my honourable friend at the present as to what our reaction will be.

Senator MacEachen: I wonder if the Leader of the Government could throw any light on the confusion which seemed to have prevailed yesterday, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs was unaware that this offer had been made. It certainly did not help the image of the minister, or of Canada, to have this situation develop in the way it did. Is it due to the simple fact that Mr. Weinberger had given no notice and that it was impossible for Mr. Nielsen to communicate with his colleague in the time available, or does it reflect a further downgrading of the importance of the Department of External Affairs within the government power structure; and does it represent that Mr. Nielsen is now the lead minister on foreign policy, and not Mr. Clark?

Senator Roblin: I am glad to give my honourable friend the positive reassurance that it in no way represents any change in the responsibilities, function, character or status of the Department of External Affairs. Nor does it in any way derogate from the responsibility of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to be our spokesman and the minister in charge of diplomatic matters of this sort. What happened—and I might just as well be completely candid about it—

Senator Frith: He lost the phone number.

Senator Roblin: No, it was not even that. He did not even pick up the phone, as far as I can tell.

The problem was, as I saw it, that because of some lapse, which has not been satisfactorily explained to me, at any rate, the people who were in Luxembourg did not apprise the Secretary of State for External Affairs of the invitation when it was issued. He found that the information was conveyed to him in a rather dilatory way, and for that I think one has to acknowledge the truth of the matter.

Senator MacEachen: The leader has told us that a decision will not be made until there has been an opportunity for the Cabinet to consider the matter, and that is understandable.

Is there any intention to secure the views of the House of Commons or the Senate on this question, or to determine whether it might be useful to have some parliamentary input into this decision? I ask that because it has been reported that the question was put to the Danish Parliament, and it turned the invitation down flatly. Is the matter going to be put before any legislative body in Canada?

Senator Roblin: When the Cabinet has decided what attitude it wishes to take on this matter, that subject may very well be important to consider. If the government decides not to take any part in it—and it does not matter whether it does or does not—it may still be a matter in which Parliament is interested. I think it would be useful if my honourable friend were to put an inquiry on the order paper with respect to this matter. That would provide us with an opportunity to debate it next week.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCREASE IN CANADIAN FORCES CONTINGENT IN WESTERN EUROPE—BUDGETARY PROVISION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): On a matter that is somewhat but not directly related, may I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he is now able to tell me whether the additional deployment of Canadian ground forces in Europe, costing $100 million or more, has been provided for in the main estimates for next year, or whether supplementary estimates will be required to cover that amount?

I asked this question last week. I wonder if I could get an answer today or tomorrow before the Senate adjourns for the week.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend what is going on: The department has been asked to do what it can to find the funding for this within its current budgetary limits, without in any way downgrading or failing to discharge its other responsibilities.

With a budget comprising so many billions of dollars, there is always a chance that, with careful scrutiny, funds can be found that are not otherwise required. I have no reason to believe that that process has reached its conclusion yet. If it turns out that there are not sufficient funds, then other steps will have to be taken.

TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL—RESUMPTION OF "ATLANTIC LIMITED" SERVICE

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. There has been an announcement made that the "Atlantic Limited" passenger rail service will resume between Montreal and Halifax, through Saint John. It has been announced that the service will commence this spring or early summer. Will it commence on schedule?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think my honourable friend is referring to the train that takes a shortcut through the State of Maine in order to trace the journey from St. John's, (sic) New Brunswick, to Montreal.

We expect that that will be on schedule. There is currently a problem in connection with the number of United States customs officers required to handle the train when it resumes its passage through the State of Maine, but it is anticipated that those difficulties will be appropriately dealt with.

Senator Corbin: I thank the leader for that information.

I have been led to understand that the situation is fraught with a number of complications, not only with regard to budget cuts and person years on the part of the Americans at the two border points but also with regard to other matters.

[Senator Roblin.]

In asking the question I should, at the same time, refer with a great deal of respect to the efforts put forth last year by one of our deceased colleagues, the late Senator Dan Riley in this respect. He should be given full credit for some of the initiatives now under way to reinstate the "Atlantic Limited."

• (1410)

However, in view of the fact that there are these problems with the Americans, I am not quite sure that they will be solved in time to allow the service to proceed on schedule. A number of New Brunswick regions have asked that the train use an all-Canadian route on its way to Halifax or to Montreal. Would it not be a good opportunity to look at a Canadian solution rather than a shortcut route through the State of Maine which has the effect of depriving a number of Canadian citizens of a first-rate passenger train service on Canadian soil?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend is inferring that it would be much better if the previous administration had never cancelled the "Atlantic Limited," I would be inclined to agree with him. I think it was a mistake and I am glad that we have an opportunity to remedy that error. As for the route that the train should take, I think you will find that there are a number of Canadians who like it the way it is rather than the other way around. I have to leave that to the discretion of my colleague, the Minister of Transport, who has taken all the pros and cons into consideration and has ascertained local preferences and arrived at what he thinks is the best decision.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I beg to disagree with the Leader of the Government. I do not live in the past. I live very much for the potentialities, for the goodwill and for the options of the present and the future. I reject out of hand that the decision of the past was in error. That begs to be re-examined. It certainly does in the context of the day. However, there has been a proposal put forth, the new decision announced by the new Minister of Transport, and I seriously suggest that if you are to deal with the past, he is falling into the traps of the past. A number of Canadian citizens are asking for a Canadian solution to a serious transportation problem in New Brunswick, especially where the train service is not that good and never has been since Confederation, for that matter.

I would ask the Leader of the Government to use his good offices to attempt to convince the Minister of Transport that the Canadian route is the much better one—the one from Halifax, through Moncton, through Edmundston, to Quebec City. There is a first-rate roadbed, one, indeed, which was the object of very expensive upgrading by the previous government, and it is being referred to by CN and VIA Rail officials as strictly a freight route, and that is a lot of slush as far as I am concerned. It is a first-rate roadbed. It would allow the rapid movement of passenger trains from the Atlantic region to central Canada. I am simply asking the Leader of the Government to use his good offices to bring this to the attention of the Minister of Transport.

JUSTICE

CONVICTION OF ERNST ZUNDEL

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, yesterday I intended to ask a question, but I thought it would be somewhat difficult to frame it. I am going to ask it today, but the circumstances are somewhat different because 24 hours have elapsed between yesterday and today. But it is still going to be difficult to phrase my question because it has to do with the Zundel trial and the guilty verdict which resulted. I heard on the news last night that the government was considering the possibility of his immediate deportation.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, before I ask my question, I should like, with the permission of the Leader of the Government in the Senate and my colleagues, to make some preliminary remarks.

I followed the Zundel trial with keen interest and was, of course, thrilled with the verdict and, more particularly, with the remarks made by the presiding judge.

The fact that here in Canada there are still people who worship Hitler is a matter of serious concern to all. Zundel was found guilty of publishing and distributing hate literature for which he received a sentence of 15 months in jail. As of Monday, he is appealing that verdict.

Honourable senators, I say freely that the jury was correct in its findings and that I am glad he was sentenced to 15 months imprisonment for publishing hate literature. That should not be allowed in our country in the name of free speech.

Honourable senators, free speech is one thing, but to sow the seeds of hatred is another. Zundel has been in this country for 27 years and, yet, has never sought citizenship. He worships Hitler, a tyrant who practically destroyed the world because, in his day, unlike the situation in Canada, there was no Senate to protect the citizens of Germany. There are still, in our midst, worshippers of that man.

I would ask the Leader of the Government if he will support any move made by the government of the day to prosecute the likes of Zundel and to deport the convicted Zundel.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can assure my honourable friend that if other residents of Canada are prima facie guilty of the kinds of misdemeanours and crimes of which my honourable friend speaks, they too will receive the attention of the law officers of the Crown and of the courts. That, I think, goes without saying.

With respect to the particular case in question, in view of the fact that it is under appeal, it would be inappropriate for me to say anything more at the present time. We will have to wait until the appeal is decided before any further consideration is given insofar as the government is concerned.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, my question applies not only to the question of appeal, but to the deportation of Zundel, regardless of the outcome of the appeal. In my estimation, that man should be deported regardless of the decision of the court of appeal.

He has been a resident in this country for 27 years, and for that period of time he has led a group that is unCanadian. I plead for his deportation.

Senator Roblin: I sympathize with the emotion that prompts my honourable friend to speak, but I am obliged to say that we do live under the rule of law, and it is necessary for the legal processes to be completed before any further consideration is given to his suggestion.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate relative to the Cape Breton Development Corporation—a corporation which, to my mind, is a very important corporation. Whatever happens to that corporation has a bearing on the very lives of all men, women and children on Cape Breton Island, and the future of Cape Breton Island itself.

I have learned, either in a dream or from the papers, or maybe a messenger told me, or maybe it was an elevator operator—I have no other way of finding out—that a president has been appointed to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I think the name was Derek Rance, an individual from West Vancouver.

Is there some way in which the Leader of the Government could notify me and all members of this chamber as to who this individual is, and what his qualifications are?

Let's know something about him. If something came to my office in connection with this appointment, I have not seen it, and I have no other way of finding out. I would very much appreciate knowing who Derek Rance is and what his qualifications are, and what the future of the Cape Breton Development Corporation may be with him in charge.

An Hon. Senator: He is a good Tory!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot vouch for the gentleman's politics, any more than I could vouch for his name. My honourable friend and I are in the same situation. I shall have to find out. It is a reasonable question. I shall find out his name and his qualifications, and the reasons why he was appointed to that post.

I do think it indicates that some special measures are going to be considered with respect to Cape Breton which would help improve the very sad economic plight of that community. I assure my honourable friend that I shall give him as much information as I can.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: A supplementary. Would the Leader of the Government, when he is considering the question posed by Senator Muir, attempt to determine what the duties and responsibilities of the new president will be?

Senator Roblin: Is my honourable friend asking for his terms of reference or job description? If those are available, I shall provide them.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while the Leader of the Government is making these inquiries, will he also—

Senator Flynn: You are all fighting to get attention.

Senator MacEachen: —will he also tell us whether the new president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation is a former associate of the Prime Minister's in the Iron Ore Company of Canada?

Senator Roblin: I trust that his being a former associate of the Prime Minister's will be considered no bar in terms of the recognition of his abilities. If that were the case, I myself might be in some difficulty.

TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL—RESUMPTION OF "ATLANTIC LIMITED" SERVICE

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to the question posed by Senator Corbin and particularly the answer given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate to that question.

I am standing in for the late Honourable Dan Riley today. If he were here, he would ask Honourable Senator Roblin to check his "blues" very carefully today, because in Senator Roblin's answer to the question posed by Senator Corbin, he referred to "St. John's, New Brunswick." This is a very sensitive matter in New Brunswick, particularly for all people—

Senator Doody: I feel very flattered.

Senator McElman: —particularly for all people who live in Saint John.

Not only is there no apostrophe in the name of that city, as there is in the name of that lovable city of St. John's, Newfoundland, but the people of Saint John are very determined that it shall be spelled "S-a-i-n-t" and not "St."

So, if the honourable senator would check his "blues" carefully, we New Brunswickers would appreciate it.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I want to tell my honourable friend that I most certainly will do that. I confess that I have been led astray by my colleague (Senator Doody) who sits beside me in some of these instances.

Senator Doody: Show me your friends and I will tell you what you are.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, if I may trespass for a moment on the time of the house, I should like to point out to my friend Senator McElman that while what he says is true today, in earlier times "St. John's" was used. I can show him covers from my stamp collection which record it in that way.

Senator Doody: Time for an inquiry!

Senator McElman: Senator Hicks may have been around in those times; I wasn't.

[Senator Roblin.]

• (1430)

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I wish to refer to the question asked by Senator Muir concerning the appointment of Derek Rance of West Vancouver as the new president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I understand that Derek Rance—a good friend of the Prime Minister, which, of course, is a recommendation—is a former president of the Quintette Coal Company in British Columbia, a company which seems to have fallen on hard times. I am wondering whether the possibility that Derek Rance is unemployed had something to do with his appointment as the new President of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think I have to reject the implication of my honourable friend's question. It is an unfortunate question.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has told us, then, that that is not the case, that the Quintette Coal Company is in good business condition. If that is so, why are its principals considering selling it?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I made no statement about the Quintette Coal Company—none at all. I talked about the gentleman whose name my honourable friend is bandying about.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government seems to think there is no connection between the fate of the company and its former president. That is a curious disconnection.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend can make all the allegations he likes, but he had better be prepared to prove them.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary—Senator Flynn: Who is going to get the last word on that?

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I did not raise this question for honourable senators to bandy it around playing politics. I am truly and sincerely concerned about what will happen to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I have no way of knowing. The previous government was laggard in appointing both the president and the board of directors. At one time there was only one member of the board of directors, and he used to have his board meetings each morning in the bathroom when he was shaving. He was the only one on the board of directors for a long period. I wondered who reported to whom and who was responsible for what. So I would like to have this situation put on a straight and narrow track. I do not care what this man's politics are. I want to know who he is, is he qualified, and when does he start? That would be interesting to know, since I am from that area. As all honourable senators know, parliamentarians in this place and in the other place, for 22 years—even from the time the Cape Breton Development Corporation was first formed—have been interested in the welfare of the people of Cape Breton, and this has a great bearing on it.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I will do my best to oblige my honourable friend.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CANADIAN POTATOES—UNITED STATES IMPORT DUTY

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question on a different topic for the government leader. I should like to know what the Canadian government is doing, or intends to do, to counter a proposal to reintroduce a 36 per cent U.S. duty on the importation of Canadian potatoes into that country, as is currently being advocated rather forcefully by an American congressman.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am well acquainted with Congresswoman Snow, who is one of the persons who is advocating this punitive tariff on Canadian potatoes. I can tell my honourable friend that thanks to the good rapport which has been established between the Canadian and U.S. governments, in many instances we have been successful in fending off both non-tariff barriers and tariff barriers to trade which have been proposed by a protectionist interest in that country. I sincerely hope we will be successful in this respect.

Senator Corbin: I am rather encouraged by the comments of the Leader of the Government. However, in December 1984, barely four months ago, the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Block, announced a four-point program to deal with what the Americans perceive to be the unfair importation of Canadian potatoes, especially those from the province of Quebec. One of Secretary Block's commitments was to arrange a meeting with our Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable John Wise. I would like to know whether or not such a meeting has taken place, and if so, when and where, and if not, why not. I should also like to know whether Mr. Wise has at least been informed of the willingness of his U.S. counterpart to sit down with him to attempt to resolve this conflict.

Senator Roblin: I think my colleague has been notably successful in dealing with agricultural problems. I am sure that he will be successful in dealing with this one. As to the specific question of whether or not the meeting has been held, I shall endeavour to find out for my honourable friend.

Senator Corbin: I thank the Honourable Leader of the Government, and I appreciate his good relationship with Congresswoman Snow. However, there is another person, by the name of Senator Mitchell, from the State of Maine who does not share the same views. Recently he has been rather aggressive. Furthermore, I would like to draw to the attention of the government leader that the full process of challenging and appealing for the removal of the 36 per cent duty on Canadian potatoes imported into the United States, begun last year, is not yet completed, as the State of Maine potato industry is currently challenging in court the ruling of the International Trade Commission of the United States that the duty shall be removed. In view of this current pressure by the aforementioned U.S. senator in calling on President Reagan to use his powers under the trade laws to impose limits on Canadian potato imports on an "urgent basis", what is the Canadian government and Minister of Agriculture doing or saying to counter such a potential threat, which would cause deep, lasting and serious harm to the potato industry of eastern Canada?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is treading a well-worn path because he has been on this subject of potatoes in New Brunswick for some time, and so have other people before him over the past several years. There is no new problem. If Senator Mitchell is nearly as zealous as Congresswoman Snow is in dealing with the interests of the people of Maine, they are well served, because these two congresspersons have been very active and aggressive in trying to secure special treatment for their particular interests. Such action underlines one of the great problems in dealing in matters of trade with the United States. While you may have the ear of the administration in respect of certain matters, the influence of congressmen is very weighty and important and it is necessary to take that into account in dealing with these matters. Very often they become decisive factors, so I do not overlook the risks involved in that situation.

However, I am a little more optimistic than my honourable friend about the future of the Maine potato industry. They have succeeded in setting up in that state a plant that will use potatoes to make frozen potato chips. If I am informed correctly, to make these potato chips requires a kind of potato different from that being grown in Maine at present and which competes so much with the New Brunswick potato. The intention is to convert about 50 per cent of the potato acreage of that state to this special type of potato. I hope that they succeed in their endeavour because it will reduce some of the irritants between the two countries.

Having said that, I can tell my honourable friend that the Minister of Agriculture and his colleague, the Minister for International Trade, will be vigilant to do all that Canadians can do to present the merits of their case, not only to the administration but to the Congress of the United States.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I hate to be a bore but could I get an assurance from the Leader of the Government that he will specifically inquire as to whether or not a meeting has been demanded between the two agricultural counterparts in an attempt to resolve this matter, that he will take my concerns to the Minister of Agriculture and that he will find out at the same time whether approaches have been made on the matter? The proposal was launched four months ago and I am completely in the dark whether or not serious attempts have been made to even arrange a meeting.

● (1440)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is simply repeating his first question.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I may have missed the purport of the honourable gentleman's answer. Would he mind repeating it to me again?

Senator Roblin: It will be in Hansard tomorrow and the record will show that I have undertaken to find out if the meeting has taken place.

JOURNALIST MEMBERS

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I should like to make the following comment: I read a few days ago that another journalist had been called to the Senate. The article listed the names of a number of senators who had practised this noble trade. I will not repeat their names for fear of overlooking some of them. However, the author of the article failed to include the name of Senator Eymard Corbin, a former editor of Le Madawaska, a weekly published in Edmundston, New Brunswick.

HEALTH

ILL EFFECTS OF SMOKING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Bosa calling the attention of the Senate to the ill effects of smoking to smokers and non-smokers alike.—
(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have been encouraged to say a few words on this order by the fact that Senator Macquarrie sent me a note the other day saying that he intends to intervene on this subject. I always like to listen to Senator Macquarrie, so I think I will get my remarks out of the way so we can all enjoy an address from Senator Macquarrie.

This inquiry was launched by Senator Bosa, who did a thorough review of the question of the ill effects of smoking for both smokers and non-smokers, and he dealt with it from the point of view of a convert and, to some extent, of a proselytizer. It will be remembered that he was encouraging other honourable senators to enjoy the redemption that he has enjoyed since he stopped smoking. I do not mean to say anything about that, because I was a smoker for some time and I found, as did Mark Twain, that it was very easy to give it up; I did so at least 15 times. I finally decided to give it up completely, but if there are others who want to smoke, that is fine with me, and I do not consider it a moral question in any way.

Senator Flynn: If they do not smoke near you!

Senator Frith: That is right.

I do not want to interfere with their right to smoke, provided they do not interfere with my right not to smoke, and that of course is a problem that we now have with the question of smoking. I really am not interested in going into any potential moral aspects, except to the extent that that aspect deals with the morality of not having concern for others who may be affected as a result of one's own actions.

I should like to add two points, honourable senators. The first is that there has been considerable evolution in this social problem, this social phenomenon, recently, in the sense that it seems that the momentum has shifted to some extent from smokers standing up for their rights to non-smokers standing up for their rights. So there is that clash. There must be a solution.

One of the solutions being found is one that brings me to the first of my two points, namely that the trend is now, as honourable senators will know, moving towards regulation, towards laws and towards not just voluntary restraints but restraints that are given the sanction of law.

There have been two recent cases—this will lead me, I think, quickly into my last point—both of them, I think, before the Public Service Staff Relations Board. One was launched on the claim that smoking in the work place subjected the applicant to imminent danger. That case was heard but was dismissed on the basis of there not being sufficient evidence of imminent danger.

There is now another case, that of Peter Wilson, which was brought before the same board. He has the backing of his union, and he did get the benefit of expert testimony, which was not brought in the previous case which was thrown out on the basis that there was not imminent danger. I am citing the facts in the case of Wilson from Maclean's magazine. The case started in January of this year when Wilson, a Health Ministry finance clerk in Toronto, and an ex-smoker, filed a complaint with the PSAC charging that the federal government was exposing him to a dangerous substance. That is a different test, exposing him to a dangerous substance. The other was a question of imminent danger. The dangerous substance was tobacco smoke. The basis of the complaint was the federal employees' 1983 collective agreement, which binds the federal government to adhere to Dangerous Substances Safety Standards drafted in 1973 to regulate workplace safety. That article goes on to state:

The hearing will determine whether the federal government is culpable in allowing other employees to smoke in the workplace. A ruling against the government would affect 200,000 civil servants and could mean redesigning millions of square feet of offices to provide nonsmokers with "separate ventilated rooms." Except for an outright smoking ban, the only alternative would be to replace existing ventilation systems to accommodate smokers. And Dr. James Repace, a physicist with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency who testified on Wilson's behalf, estimated that it would require "220 air exchanges per hour" to rid a workplace of tobacco tar and nicotine at a capital cost of "about $30,000 per smoker."

Wilson's case is supported by a book—

And we have Senator Bosa's information on this also:

—soon to be released by the NSRA, which charges that almost all urban nonsmokers have measurable amounts of tobacco nicotine in their body fluids. Said the book: "It is misleading to discuss the health consequences of tobacco addiction in terms of smokers and nonsmokers. In every real sense, all Canadians are smokers."

So, honourable senators, it seems to me that we should give some thought to the fact that this trend is coming and that it could result in regulations.

● (1450)

I see that Senator Kelly has resumed his seat. I am speaking on Order Number 4. Honourable senators, I am going to say something very appreciative with respect to Senator Kelly in just a moment.

Senator Doody: So don't leave your seat.

Senator Frith: What I have to say will not be what Senator Doody sometimes describes as one of my "slow curves".

Senator Doody: One of your long, slow curves.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it looks as though in many workplaces we are coming to this question of whether we are going to protect the rights, if we want to call them that, of nonsmokers against the ill effects of tobacco smoke. It looks as though it might come to orders and regulations which, in turn, will lead to very heavy expenses.

We should also be concerned with what happens to the workplaces of those employed in the federal government.

But I should like to talk about the Senate in these terms. Our tradition, as Senator Roblin as often said—and I think we have stuck to that as much as we could during my time here—is to avoid as much as possible rule-making. The rules of the Senate are about one-tenth the size of the rules of the House of Commons. We try to regulate ourselves in accordance with our own wishes. The tradition has been, for example, that the Speaker intervenes only when asked to do so. He is there to see that the rules are obeyed, but encourages senators to obey them themselves and to enforce them themselves.

So, it would be very much in our tradition, both in terms of looking ahead and in terms of regulating these matters ourselves on a non-black letter law basis, if we decided, without making any rule to that effect, voluntarily that we extend the non-smoking rule that applies in the Senate—although it is an unwritten one—to our committee meetings.

If all senators who smoke agree not to smoke during committee meetings of the Senate, or analogous meetings—for example caucus meetings—then we will solve the problem as far as the Senate is concerned, consistent with good Senate practice and good senatorial behaviour.

It is in that connection that I cite the voluntary restraint that my friend Senator Kelly has shown. He is a pipe smoker of long standing and obviously enjoys smoking his pipe. Because he knows of my attitude towards smoking, and the fact that I do have an allergy that has developed from tobacco smoke—

Senator Doody: Since you gave it up.

Senator Frith: I agree with that. I think there is definitely some connection. In fact, I would not be surprised if it is psychosomatic in the sense that when one makes a final decision to not smoke, to some extent one hypnotizes oneself to dislike smoking. I think that it has, in fact, a psychosomatic allergic effect.

In any event, Senator Kelly simply refrains from smoking when I am at a meeting, and I appreciate that very much. It is that sort of civilized, Christian and senatorial behaviour that should present to us what we might call the "Kelly solution" to any of these problems in committee meetings—that is, that smokers in the Senate voluntarily not smoke during meetings of Senate committees.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, although Senator Frith's speech was so brief as to be a mere puff rather than a good smoke—

Senator Frith: It was meant to be a treatment rather than a treat.

Senator Macquarrie: It was a treat of course. In any event, I reserve my gasps on this subject until a later date and, therefore, ask to have the privilege of adjourning the debate.

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, debate adjourned.

HUMAN RIGHTS

MEETING OF EXPERTS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to have leave to make a few announcements which I believe to be of interest to all honourable senators.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity granted me to bring to the attention of honourable senators some important events that I believe will interest all of us.

Earlier this month some honourable senators and members of the other place re-established the Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki Group as it existed in previous Parliaments since 1977. That move was prompted by the forthcoming meeting of Experts on Human Rights to be held in Ottawa beginning on May 7. This parliamentary group is involved in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe process, particularly compliance of the signatory states with the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Final Act. Non-governmental organizations concerned with the fate of human rights and fundamental freedoms, especially in eastern Europe, are in contact with our group. Recently, one of those organizations and its representatives communicated to me its commemoration of the 67th anniversary of the Declaration of the Independent Byelorussian Democratic Republic. The Russian Revolution of 1917 brought about a revival of national consciousness of Byelorussians and a national council proclaimed the independence of that nation on March 25, 1918. However, this independence was short lived being suppressed by force by the U.S.S.R. government only a year later.

● (1500)

Many people of Byelorussian origin, now loyal Canadians, who immigrated to this country before World War I or who came as political refugees or displaced persons after World War II, have commemorated this important event in the history of their fatherland. I believe this commemoration teaches Canadians how precious the possession of independence is, how easily it is lost and how difficult it is to regain it. I believe that we should be grateful to them for that lesson.

It is hoped that the forthcoming meeting on human rights in Ottawa will give serious and full attention to the plight of human rights in Byelorussia and other European countries. It is also hoped that the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs, who will be visiting the U.S.S.R. in the next few days, will express to that government the concern of Canadians about the present state of human rights and fundamental freedoms in many of the countries under Soviet domination or influence.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 28, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE LATE HON. LOUIS-PHILIPPE BEAUBIEN

TRIBUTES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we commence the business on our agenda this afternoon, I should like to report to the Senate that news has been received of the death of Senator Louis-Philippe Beaubien. I know that it is expected of me to bring this sad event to the notice of honourable senators.

I am conscious of the fact that some senators—such as Senators Croll, Molson, and Walker, none of whom is here today—were particularly close friends of the late Senator Beaubien. I took steps to ensure that their offices were notified, as well as the offices of other senators who I thought would wish to receive that notification.

I wish to say a few words in tribute to the late Senator Beaubien. He was a man of most attractive personality; he was kindly; he was reserved, in a cultivated sense; and he represented a distinguished and patrician family that had its roots in French-speaking Canada. His father was a member of this chamber.

The late Senator Beaubien was a member of this chamber for almost 25 years, having been appointed in 1960. During most of that time his special interest was the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. He attended the meetings of that committee with great regularity, took part in its discussions, and was extremely well-informed on the economic life of our country. I am sure that all who witnessed his activities in that committee will join me in paying tribute to his work as one of the outstanding members of that important, indeed prestigious, Senate committee.

Before the late Senator Beaubien was summoned to the Senate, he was prominent in business circles, particularly financial circles, where he made a reputation for himself as a man of probity. During the Second World War, he served overseas in England, Sicily and Italy for four years. He was discharged from the service with the rank of major.

He was, I must report, a stalwart supporter of the party to which I belong and was very efficacious in helping to organize the financial resources needed to respond to the necessities which beset any political party. He did so in such a pleasant and unobtrusive manner that I assure you he was a most effective advocate, indeed.

The late Senator Beaubien had a marked political sense; he knew which way was up in the political issues of this country; he understood his own province; he had an incisive mind; he was able to bring sound judgment to the affairs which faced him.

In a profession such as ours—if one can call politics a profession—where substantial egos are easily found, the late Senator Beaubien was a humble man in the best sense of that word, one who would always comport himself with modesty. His record is one which graces this chamber. It could well stand as a testimony to him.

I am privileged to offer this tribute to the life and work of the late Honourable Senator Louis-Philippe Beaubien. I am sure all members of this house join with me in expressing a very sincere word of sympathy to the son and daughter he has left behind.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I learned of Senator Beaubien's death just a few moments ago. I subscribe entirely to everything Senator Roblin has said. As one member of the small group towards which the late Senator Beaubien drifted—and he was welcomed—I must offer a few observations.

As Senator Roblin has stated, the late Senator Beaubien was a great personal friend of Senators Walker and Molson, and I am sure both will miss him considerably. However, this chamber will miss him as well, not for the éclat with which he functioned, but for the sound sense he so often brought to this chamber and, more particularly, to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in my early years as a senator.

The name Beaubien has been associated with the Senate for many years, not only in Conservative ranks but on the other side as well. I believe an uncle or a cousin of Senator Beaubien's was, for many years, the Liberal Whip in the Senate. For a long time, the Senate roll at the door of this chamber had the name Beaubien proudly fitted on it, but, as of this day, it is no longer there.

The family, not only in Quebec but in the whole of Canada, has deep and solid roots. It is to be hoped that a younger generation of Beaubiens, of whatever branch, will eventually succeed their predecessors.

To Senator Beaubien's children, I convey my deepest sympathy.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I was very sad when I heard the news of the death of our colleague, Senator Beaubien.

I have known him since he came to the Senate in 1960, and since then, we have been great friends.

Louis Beaubien followed the family tradition in business, mainly in finance, and in politics. Senator Roblin mentioned his father, but we can go further back to his grandfather, Louis Beaubien, who was the President of the National Assembly and Minister of Agriculture and had quite a successful career in business and finance. I believe that Louis Beaubien, the grandfather, was the founder of Outremont and he was, in fact, responsible for the development of Outremont.

The father, as I mentioned earlier, was a member of the Senate for nearly thirty years and perhaps even longer. Appointed in 1915, he played a very active role in the Conservative Party and, like his father, in business. He was a lawyer like his grandfather was. However, our Louis Beaubien did not become a lawyer. He was very active in business, especially in the financial sector, before being appointed to the Senate.

His military service during the last war was mentioned, when he served in Sicily and Italy.

In the family tradition, Louis was representative of the old school of Montreal, which pioneered, as it were, in bilingualism owing to the fact that both the grandfather and the father married English-speaking wives. The family tradition continued, as in Louis' family where everyone was always fully bilingual. He was fluent in both French and English. Louis was that rare species: a real gentleman. I would even say that he was one of the last members of the old school of the last "belle époque" of Montreal society I was alluding to earlier. We all have very pleasant memories of our relations with Louis Beaubien in the Senate. He was not what you would call aggressive. Certainly not like me, I would think. He had nothing but kind words for everyone, which is not always the case with me. I am sure his memory will remain unsullied in the hearts of all his colleagues. We want to tell his son Charles and his daughter Margot how sorry we are about Louis' death, how much we sympathize with them and that we will keep our memories of him in our hearts, our memories of him as an excellent senator, a great gentleman and a prince among men.

[English]

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, a stranger reading the biography of Senator Louis Beaubien in the Parliamentary Guide would get a picture of a man who was interested in the financial and business world. Senator Beaubien served in the Canadian Army from 1940 to 1945 in Canada, the United Kingdom and Italy. From the biography, it is evident that this was a successful man and one who served his country well. However, the Parliamentary Guide cannot give any indication of the kind of man Louis Beaubien was. But I can tell you what kind of man he was, for he and I have been good and indeed close friends for almost 25 years.

I was summoned to the Senate in June of 1960 and he in November of that year. Our offices were not far apart. Over all of those years, when the Senate was sitting, it was indeed rare that we did not see each other daily quite apart from meeting in the Senate chamber. Indeed, we had been planning a joint celebration to mark our respective 25th anniversaries.

Yes, honourable senators, I knew Louis Beaubien. I knew him to be a man of high character, a man who was honest, upright and honourable in all of his dealings. He was a man of great integrity and one who never spoke a harsh word against anyone. He liked people and as a result he was liked and well liked by all who knew him or who had anything to do with him. His character and his personality were such that he made friends easily and kept them.

Louis Beaubien had a great love for the Senate. He was very happy here. He was proud of the fact that his father had been a senator before him.

Honourable senators, personally I shall miss my old friend, and I am sure there are many who will miss him. He had a good life. Now may his good soul rest in peace.

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, allow me to say a few words on behalf of the opposition.

Honourable senators, you will appreciate that very little time has been left to me to add anything to the sentiments already expressed by the senators who spoke before me.

I must say however that we all fully agree with the remarks made by our colleagues.

I should like to say more about one aspect of Senator Beaubien's life which has been mentioned. I would emphasize the fact that, in a lifetime, one is given the opportunity now and then to get to know and work with somebody who adds a pleasing dimension to one's life, a certain enjoyment which makes it easier to cope with everyday life. Senator Beaubien was such a man, for it was always a pleasure to meet him to exchange views on various issues or simply to greet him. We will no longer have the experience and pleasure of seeing Senator Beaubien at his desk, of enjoying his company and his presence. He had a very appropriate name—he was "beau" and one was always "bien" in the presence of our former colleague.

[English]

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few words to the tributes paid to the late Senator Louis-Philippe Beaubien. He and I had apartments in the same building and occasionally entertained each other. I do not know what is the French equivalent of a Victorian gentleman, but if there is one, then Louis-Philippe Beaubien certainly deserves that accolade. He was everything that previous speakers have referred to. He was a joy to meet, a very pleasant and impressive person, and the Senate will be the poorer for his passing.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of those honourable senators who have spoken before me. When I came to the Senate as a «new boy», to quote my honourable friend, Senator

Godfrey, I was fortunate to be placed on the same committee as Senator Beaubien. While at times I believe he had doubts about me because of my political affiliation, that in no way affected our friendship. I wish to say how much I appreciated knowing him. He was a gentleman of the old school, and I extend my deepest sympathy to his son and daughter.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Lowell Murray, Chairman of Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Thursday, March 28, 1985

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-23, intituled: "An Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, March 26, 1985, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

LOWELL MURRAY
Chairman.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, before we vote on this motion I should like to say a few words about this bill, especially on one particular aspect of it. In doing so I should like to pay tribute to Senator Stewart. About a month ago, I proposed a motion to the effect that clauses which enabled regulations to be made under a bill be considered by the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I had observed on several occasions that senators were generalists and not specialists, and that clauses of this kind usually went through without anybody noticing them particularly, or paying any attention. I must say that if it had not been for Senator Stewart the section I am going to refer to and speak about now would have had the same treatment. However, he drew to our attention the enabling clause in the bill, to which I should now like to refer and on which I wish to comment.

Before I do that, I should like to refer to other clauses in the bill. On page 2, clause 3(1)(b) provides that, in effect, the government guarantees 85 per cent of the loans made under the bill—or such other percentage as is provided by an appropriation Act or other Act of Parliament.

In other words, if the government decided to change that 85 per cent, instead of going through the lengthy process of having to amend the bill in the usual fashion, they could use a much simpler process of using an appropriation act, which would permit at least some debate in Parliament, some observation, some consideration.

The next clause I should like to refer to is on page 4 and is clause 3(4)(b). This deals with the fee which is to be charged; it is a fee of 1 per cent of the loan. It says:

(b) the bank has, at the time the loan is submitted for registration or at such other time as is prescribed, paid to the Minister a fee of one per cent of the amount of the loan or such other fee as is prescribed or calculated in the manner prescribed.

When we get to the enabling sections, the sections which permit regulations to be passed, they have been amended—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The clause should be read with the «unless» that goes with the main clause at the bottom of the previous page. Perhaps you should read that so that we know what the «unless» is about.

Senator Godfrey: The clause I have read in effect provides for the one per cent fee, which had not been provided for before. Incidentally, that fee is to be paid to the government. Originally, as the bill was first submitted, it was to be paid by the bank; then there was an amendment before the committee of the other place which allowed the bank to recover the fee to be paid from the borrower.

The relevant clause I want to talk about, and the reason I am on my feet now, is clause 5, which refers to paragraph 7(1)(m), which is the enabling clause, and says that the government may by regulation prescribe for the purposes of paragraph 3(4)(b), the fee, or the method of calculating the fee, payable to the Minister and the time at which the fee is payable.

● (1420)

The effect of that is that by regulation the government can raise the fee to more than 1 per cent. I drew to the attention of Mr. Bissonnette when he appeared before the committee yesterday the government directive, with which everybody is now familiar and which was originally issued by the Honourable John Turner in 1971 when he was the Minister of Justice, and confirmed by cabinet directive on April 18, 1981. That directive provided in part:

In the preparation of proposals for legislation, departments and agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:

(1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.

2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought.

The powers that should not be included are listed. The relevant one here is, «(g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services.» Senator Flynn and I had an argument in the committee yesterday as to whether or not this was a fee for services or whether it was something more. In fact, Senator Flynn was so protective of the witness that he did not want him to answer any of my questions. He wanted to answer them himself.

Senator Flynn: Not your questions, never.

Senator Argue: You are asking for trouble, Senator Godfrey.

Senator Godfrey: I would like to read an excerpt from the committee meeting held yesterday. Senator Stewart had asked a question of Mr. Bissonnette, to which he replied in French. In that connection, I wanted to confirm my recollection of what I heard him say, so I asked my secretary to get a short paragraph translated into English.

Senator Flynn: It would make no difference because you would not understand anyway.

Senator Godfrey: I can tell you that I had a little problem which astounded me. She went to Mr. Belzile, the editor of French Debates, and asked if he would mind translating the short paragraph into English so that I could speak intelligently and answer Senator Flynn in the chamber this afternoon. Mr. Belzile said that he was too busy. She then went to Mr.

[Senator Godfrey.]

Griffith who is not totally fluent in French but was co-operative and produced a translation which he will not certify as being as good as the translation Mr. Belzile might have come up with. I think there should be a service in the Senate whereby a senator can have a brief passage translated into English or French for the purposes of debate. I phoned Mr. Greene about it, and he said that there was no provision for obtaining such translations. There should be somebody designated to translate short passages when required, and should be instructed to give priority to this kind of request.

In any event, Senator Stewart asked his question in English:

What is the real purpose of this charge, which becomes a kind of revenue for the government? Is it to pay the clerical costs of registering the loan?

Mr. Bissonnette replied by saying, according to my translation:

This 1 per cent, Senator Stewart, is meant to offset the losses. Then if you think they are going to lend $900 million next year, the 1 per cent could represent $9 million. In fact, the $9 million that we would have to use to offset the losses that we anticipate could be, as I said earlier, 5 per cent.

The losses in the past have averaged 7 per cent, but by providing that banks are now responsible for 15 per cent of the losses, they felt they might be more cautious and that therefore the losses might be reduced to 5 per cent. Therefore, this provision, in effect, takes care of more than one-fifth of the loan, because of the 15 per cent provision that the bank has to pay. It is quite a substantial item.

I do not think, in view of Mr. Bissonnette's reply as to the purpose of this loan, that anybody can seriously argue that this is a service fee. Therefore, I would suggest that it falls into the category of something that should not be done by regulation.

What are the alternatives besides an ordinary amending act? What Mr. Bissonnette could have done, and provided in the bill, was to follow the same procedure for changing the 85 per cent, that is, by an appropriation bill. The reality of the situation is that having regard to the time the bill came to us yesterday and the fact that the bill has to be passed by the end of March, there is no way that you are going to get an amendment adopted at this time.

However, there is another procedure that could have been followed. There are times when exceptions should be made, and it is perfectly legitimate to make changes by regulation, but when it is done in this manner the government should provide for, at least, some input by Parliament. The kind of input I have in mind is by providing for either an affirmative or negative resolution.

In that respect I would like to refer to the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which was published in July 1980. I would like to read paragraph 24 on page 9 of that report into the record because I think it is important for future reference. It states:

Your Committee has taken note of the procedures used for this purpose in the United Kingdom and in the Commonwealth of Australia, which are summarized in Appendix III to this Report. It considers that a power in the Houses, soberly used, to disallow subordinate legislation, is essential in Canada and that on far more occasions than at present Parliament should be called upon to affirm a subordinate law before it can have legal life. Your Committee recommends that all subordinate legislation not subject to a statutory affirmative procedure—(5) should be subject to being disallowed on resolution of either House and that the Executive be barred from re-making any statutory instrument so disallowed for a period of six months from its disallowance. Your Committee further recommends that if any resolution for disallowance of a statutory instrument is moved, and is not withdrawn, the statutory instrument should be deemed to have been disallowed if a debate on the resolution does not take place and culminate in a vote within a fixed number of sitting days.

I would like to refer to paragraph 25 on page 10 of the report which states:

Clearly, many statutory instruments are wholly non-controversial and unobjectionable and affirmation would be granted without demur. But the opportunity would exist for Parliament to exercise its sovereign powers.

Paragraph 26 states:

It is not possible to specify all those cases in which affirmation would be possible and desirable, although its virtue in cases of subordinate laws made under skeletal statutes is obvious. Affirmation would also be highly desirable in cases where the exercise of enabling powers may . . .

(b) impose or increase taxation, fees or charges;—

That is the exact situation in this case.

Paragraph 29, subparagraph 6 states in part:

Your Committee favours a minimum number of five signatures for a motion for disallowance in either House.

Later on the committee members had changed their minds and thought that possibly 15 or 20 signatures should be required so that it would be more difficult to move a motion for disallowance and they would not be faced with frivolous motions by a few members. The purpose for my rising today is to point out that if the government is going to do this kind of thing—and there may be legitimate reasons for having this flexibility—it should have at least included, as it did in tax treaty bills which we have dealt with, a negative resolution procedure. Honourable senators may recall that, in certain tax treaty bills, there was a provision that by regulation the government could increase taxation. We found fault with the actual negative resolution procedure provided for, and pointed that out, and those clauses were later amended and in some cases dropped from those bills and from a number of energy bills.

● (1430)

I raised this subject during the committee meeting yesterday and asked whether we should make some comments in the report. I was told that that would take a long time to prepare, so I agreed that we report the bill without amendment, but I said that I would draw to the attention of the Senate these comments in the hope that we could give the government some kind of warning for the future.

I think it is unfortunate that in a case such as this, when the minister did consult with banks and small businesses, the Senate was not consulted. In other words, the bill was referred to the Senate at the last minute. In one respect, we can take part of the blame because we did not pre-study the bill. Had we pre-studied the bill a month ago, and if Senator Stewart, in his diligent fashion, had spotted this objectionable clause, we could have taken that up with the minister and might have had an opportunity of persuading him to include some kind of negative resolution procedure in the bill.

I hope we will see those types of clauses in future bills when the government wants this kind of power.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have always had much admiration for Senate Godfrey and his outstanding performance as Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

He is still doing a good job, even though he no longer is joint chairman of the committee. I am concerned however when I see him draw conclusions from the principles he is attempting to apply and which he put forward today concerning the right granted to the minister to set the fee payable when a loan is registered.

In my opinion, he is making a mountain out of a molehill. And his mountain brought forth a mouse.

Like any other, this fee must be paid for services rendered. It amounts to a premium in exchange for the government guarantee given to banks on loans they make under this act. It is an insurance premium, a fee which is payable. It is not a tax. If it is a tax, I do not understand anything anymore.

Senator Godfrey maintains that the public cannot be expected to pay. Such is not the case. The public wants to borrow, so we say pay a 1 per cent fee. The minister may change the percentage according to the circumstances.

The same principle applies when a company is incorporated. We tell management that the cost is $200. It has always been possible to change the fee schedule through regulations. I am not trying to make it tough for Parliament—nor even for such a prestigious man as Senator Godfrey—with respect to a change in the fee schedule applicable to such loans.

I am very much in favour of principles, but if they are to be interpreted so as to apply to a minor consideration like this one, we will never see the end of it. We are talking about a premium, a fee, not a tax. However much I admire the zeal of Senator Godfrey, I would suggest that, in these circumstances, it is untimely.

[English]

Senator Godfrey: My response is that that is the usual reaction of over-reacting.

Senator Flynn: Are you speaking for the second time?

Senator Godfrey: Will that close the debate?

Senator Flynn: No, but I have had enough just hearing you once.

Senator Godfrey: I just wanted to point out that $9 million a year is involved, and that is not peanuts.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SIXTH, SEVENTH, EIGHTH AND NINTH REPORTS OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the committee's sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth reports approving budgets of the following committees:

Energy and Natural Resources;

National Finance;

Youth;

Banking, Trade and Commerce.

He said: Honourable senators, these budgets have been approved by the committee. The reports contain the substance of the budgets, the budgets themselves, and pursuant to rule 83(A) will appear in today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate. So, anyone interested in the detail can look at the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate tomorrow.

(For text of reports see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Notices of Motions

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is at this time that we are accustomed to hearing a motion that the Senate adjourn until next week.

Perhaps it would be convenient for honourable senators if I were to consult with them now with respect to the plans for the immediate future, as I see them.

I should start by saying that the cause of our concern is a bill respecting the Canadian Commercial Bank, which is yet to be processed and dealt with in the House of Commons. It is the earnest hope of the government that Parliament will be able to dispose of that bill so that Royal Assent may be given tomorrow.

Among other things—and I do not wish to enter into a debate now—the question of some certainty with respect to this matter seems to be rather important, and it would be enhanced if Parliament were to give its decision before the week is out so that Royal Assent, currently scheduled for approximately 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, could take place.

There are some problems. To the best of my understanding, the bill itself will be introduced in the House of Commons this afternoon—it has probably been introduced already in the House of Commons, or if not, it will be shortly—for first and second reading. I have been informed that there is general agreement in the House of Commons to give it second reading this afternoon. It will then be referred to the Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons at approximately 12 noon tomorrow, and after Committee of the Whole and third reading, it will be referred to the Senate.

One can see that if the House of Commons takes longer than we hope in dealing with this in committee of the whole, we may be faced with certain problems. I propose that we look at that side of the question when we know more about what is going to happen. I may be able to obtain some information later today as to how long we may expect the bill to be in committee of the whole in the other place. I have stressed to the managers of the other place the great importance of giving the Senate a reasonable opportunity to consider this legislation. Although the managers in the other place are not in a position to give me assurance on the matter, because two other parties have their rights, nevertheless, I know they are impressed with the need to consider our position here if this bill is to receive the kind of treatment they wish. I am hopeful that, shortly after 12 o'clock and certainly before 2 o'clock, it will be ready for us.

Our proposal is that we follow the rules of the Senate, which provide that, unless we decide something differently, the house will re-convene at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, shortly after which we will give consideration to this bill.

However, there is the problem of the committee stage. I hope I am allowed by the Leader of the Opposition to say that he suggested to me it would be worthwhile considering having a committee of the whole stage in the Senate, as they are doing in the House of Commons. That, of course, is well within our tradition. If we do have a committee of the whole stage, we can expect the minister or her representatives—but, certainly, I hope the minister will be here, as she has a right to be—to sit on the floor of the Senate and deal with the questions which senators will have.

My proposal, therefore, is that we consider this bill as soon as we can tomorrow afternoon. I will do my utmost to get it here at a reasonable time. There will then be second reading, with leave, during which I hope to give a pretty extensive explanation of what we are being asked to do. Following that, there will be examination by committee of the whole so that if any questions remain in the minds of honourable senators, as there may well be, they will have some opportunity to have the information they desire.

Among other things, I think it would be helpful if we were to receive the copy of the House of Commons bill as soon as it is deposited in that place, because it not only provides the legislative authority being sought, but attached to it is an explanation of the bill. In other words, they have outlined the principal features of the arrangement that is being put in place. I think it would be a good thing if honourable senators had the opportunity to look at that arrangement overnight so that, when we consider the matter tomorrow morning, we do not come to it completely ignorant as to what the substance of this matter is. It is quite a complicated affair and will require close attention.

I would ask the officials of this house to make sure that, just as soon as they receive the bill from the other place after its presentation there, they distribute it to every senator so that we will have the evening, if we like, to look it over and to frame the questions that will be bothering us.

I hope I am not being too optimistic in thinking that we will find the time necessary to do our duty in respect to this matter. Nobody dislikes more than I—and heaven knows I have protested about it in the past, as Senator Frith will bear witness—these particular situations we get into from time to time when we feel cramped in our ability to give due consideration to legislation. I am most conscious of that feeling and I can only pledge to do my best to provide the largest amount of time available.

If we do not receive the bill until 5 o'clock tomorrow, which, of course, is always possible, then we will have to take counsel together to consider what to do next because that remains unclear. It may be that we would have to make some different arrangements for Royal Assent. I will leave that matter open. I do not think we should deal with it now because the situation may never arise. If I am able to make my point and the House of Commons does give us the bill at a reasonable time, then, if we have two or three hours, that might be considered adequate under the circumstances—and I stress the last phrase—to deal with this urgent and difficult matter.

I should like to consult with the Senate on this matter to get some feeling of the opinion of my colleagues.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has suggested that we postpone detailed discussion of what arrangement might be feasible until we know more about what is happening in the other place and, particularly, when the bill may come to the Senate.

I have two comments to make. One is that it would certainly be useful to have a committee of the whole in the Senate because it would substitute for a standing committee hearing that might normally take place, and would permit senators to ask questions on this very important matter. We have no intention of delaying unduly the consideration of the bill, but there are questions to be asked and they could be most effectively answered by the minister in committee of the whole.

The second comment I would make is that, depending upon the time the bill comes to the Senate, it may be necessary to keep in mind that the time of Royal Assent can be adjusted so that we are not rushed in giving complete consideration to the bill by a pre-determined time for Royal Assent. It would be no great problem if Royal Assent were delayed into the evening or later if, indeed, the Senate wished to take that amount of time to deal with the bill.

I appreciate the necessity of receiving as much information as possible today so that we can be prepared to deal with the bill tomorrow and to ensure that our actions do not add to whatever uncertainty exists with respect to this problem.

Hon. John. M. Godfrey Honourable senators, while I have no objections to the procedure outlined by Senator Roblin, I would add one further suggestion. Since we are all going to be here tomorrow morning, why should we not refer the subject matter of this bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for pre-study? That would not be in substitution for what has been suggested. It would mean, however, that we would be more knowledgeable about the bill before the committee of the whole. It would not be necessary to have the minister in attendance at the committee meeting for a pre-study. If we asked questions of the officials, we would possibly save time in the afternoon and we would be more knowledgeable about the bill so we could handle it in a more efficient fashion in committee of the whole.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Although I have never known it to happen before, is there anything to prevent the committee of the whole doing a pre-study?

Perhaps we could sit tomorrow at 10 o'clock to hear the officials because, I assume, the minister will be in the other place, and they will be working on the bill tomorrow morning. Am I right about that?

Senator Roblin: Yes.

Senator Frith: The minister would want to be in the other place. I am not pressing for this. I do not want to get into a big argument, but it is possible, since most senators will not have made any plans for tomorrow morning and no committees would be sitting, that the committee of the whole might sit and we could have some officials here and then, when the minister comes, at least the officials will have softened us up.

Senator Roblin: That is an idea that might be given some consideration. I have to tell my honourable friend that I would much regret not being at the committee meeting myself because I am one of those who has a prior obligation for the whole of tomorrow morning. From my own personal point of view, I would have to delegate my responsibility.

I would just ask the Leader of the Opposition on this point whether he thinks the committee of the whole procedure, where we would have the minister and officials who can help her, would be adequate or whether he has some other view on the matter.

Senator MacEachen: Other suggestions have been made, and each of them, of course, has merit. I believe, if the bill comes at a reasonable time in the afternoon, we ought to be able to complete the process tomorrow. If the Leader of the Government wishes to suggest another alternative, I would also consider that.

Senator Roblin: I am satisfied with that.

If we have what might be considered as a consensus with one or two different voices being heard, I will follow that course, and I repeat that I will do my very best to see that we get the bill at a reasonable time so we can do our job properly.

NATIONAL SOIL CONSERVATION

NOTICE OF MOTION TO URGE GOVERNMENT TO SET ASIDE SPECIAL WEEK

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I give notice that, on Tuesday next, on behalf of the Honourable Senator Sparrow, I shall move:

That the Senate urge the Government to declare a special week for soil conservation in 1985 and every year thereafter;

That it be called National Soil Conservation Week;

That it be declared for the week May 12-19 in 1985, in conjunction with the Manitoba Soil Stewardship Week; and

That it be declared at a suitable period in subsequent years.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CANADIAN HOG PRODUCTION—UNITED STATES IMPORT DUTY

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate arising out of the decision yesterday by the U.S. Department of Commerce to the effect that Canada subsidizes hog production, in consequence of which there has been imposed a tariff of 5.3 cents a pound, based on dressed weight, on future shipments of pork from Canada into the United States. According to the news story, this amounts to, approximately, a 10 per cent tariff on the live weight of hogs shipped into the U.S.

My question is twofold. I would appreciate knowing the position of the government with respect to how this occurred, particularly in light of the recent apparently happy occasion on which the President of the United States and the Prime Minister met in Quebec City.

The tariff countervail that has been imposed is a very high one and represents a great surprise and a great disappointment to Canadian hog producers. I am interested in knowing the background to this and what steps are being taken to remedy the situation between now and the date in June on which this matter goes before the International Trade Commission for determination as to whether or not it will be a permanent tariff.

The second part of my question relates to a news story that I heard on CBC Radio this morning to the effect that the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Alberta, Mr.

[Senator Roblin.]

LeRoy Fjordbotten, has taken the position that Alberta production should not be subject to this countervail, the ground being, I assume, that the Province of Alberta has not been making the payments to the hog producers which prompted the countervail, at least in part. He has indicated that steps are being taken by the Government of Alberta to have hog production from Alberta excluded from this very harsh measure.

I should like to know whether or not the Government of Canada supports the position of the Government of Alberta and whether or not any meetings or discussions have taken place between the two levels of government in that connection.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has asked a question on a very complicated matter and one which really lends itself more to investigation by way of inquiry than in Question Period.

At the risk of giving a rather extended answer, I shall try to give my honourable friend some information.

It is perfectly true that the American system provides a mechanism by which producers who feel their markets are threatened by the subsidized imports from another country can ventilate their concerns. There is nothing that the President of the United States can do about that. It is part of the laws of that country.

There are two steps, as I understand the process: first, to find out whether actual damage has occurred; and second, to try to identify the rationale for the charge and whether or not it is something that should result in tariff action.

Those procedures, I am afraid, take place daily in the United States. They are of very great concern and worry, not only to the honourable senator who raised the question, but to the hog industry, in this particular case, and to the government itself.

The effect of this tariff would be a very substantial and noticeable reduction in Canadian hog prices. The information I have is that it would reduce domestic hog prices by about $3.50 per hundredweight, if the level of duty suggested were upheld in a final determination. So, it is a serious matter.

The question is, where do we stand? A preliminary determination has been made—a preliminary determination, not a final one—and on the basis of that preliminary determination, a provisional duty has been set, and that is what is worrying everybody. And they have a right to be worried. As a result of that, at a certain period of time exporters of Canadian hogs into the United States will have to post a bond with respect to this extra duty, which is held in escrow in case, in the final determination which will take place at some time in the future, the initial American opinion is upheld. If the opinion is not upheld, the duty is refunded to those concerned. We are midway in this process. We have the preliminary finding but not the final finding.

Officials of the Canadian Embassy in Washington are meeting today, as a matter of fact, with the authorities of the U.S. Department of Commerce in connection with this matter. They have already been told what the problem is, and the problem is one of allegations of subsidy. There is alleged to be a subsidy of 2.6 cents a pound resulting from the federal Agricultural Stabilization Plan in this field; there is a subsidy of 0.1 cent a pound for the federal Record of Performance Program; there is—

Senator Argue: Oh boy!

Senator Roblin: I agree, Senator Argue. There is a 0.1 cent a pound subsidy in respect of the federal Hog Carcass Grading Settlement Program. The largest item, I think, is the aggregate of the provincial stabilization programs, amounting to 2.5 cents.

That is of particular interest to my honourable friend, because it differs from province to province. As Senator Argue will understand, the provinces have widely differing support systems. The amount of 2.5 cents a pound represents the average.

When the Americans look at these things, they do not look at them on an individual province basis; rather, they look at the whole picture for the nation. They do not distinguish between the provinces in terms of the source of the product. It is simply the case that the product «comes from Canada.»

If the Province of Alberta is innocent in respect of the subsidy question, the producers and the Government of Alberta have every right to exercise every influence they can in having the Americans recognize their special position in this regard, and I encourage them to do so. Whether or not the government can persuade the American government to do the same is a very different question. So far as I know, that has never been done. So, the outlook isn't bright. What we have to do is to try to work with the Department of Agriculture to prove that these alleged subsidies do not exist; or alternatively, if they do, that they are not in fact any worse than the subsidies that exist in the United States. In that way we can at least reduce the size of the alleged subsidy with which we are being credited.

That is a long answer. It does not satisfy my friend I am sure, because I cannot provide him with a positive statement; but that is the state of the art at the present time.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, I want to thank the Leader of the Government for his thorough answer. I would ask him to determine whether there is further information as to whether or not the federal government has agreed to assist the Government of Alberta in connection with this.

I appreciate his comment to the effect that that is likely unprecedented. While I am not certain that it is unprecedented, I am aware of no occasion on which it has occurred.

By way of supplementary, I would ask him whether or not there are any initiatives planned on the part of the Government of Canada to attempt to address the disparate programs with respect to the production of agricultural commodities in the various provinces with a view to making them uniform.

The tripartite beef stabilization legislation which is before the House of Commons is such an attempt, but we know from the background information on that that it will relate only to a few of the provinces. It would be helpful for honourable senators to know whether or not there was any initiative in place or being considered by the Government of Canada to attempt to eliminate those different programs.

Senator Roblin: I am sure that the government will consider very sympathetically any representations it receives from the Government of Alberta. I have to warn my honourable friend, however, that the chances of getting that view accepted by the Americans, in my opinion, is problematical.

On the question of a uniform policy on hog subsidies, I am in agreement with my honourable friend. I think there should be a national policy. The provincial policies should be subsumed within the national policy. That has been the thrust not only of this administration but of the previous administration. We have reached a certain stage. I believe there are two provinces—I will not name them—that are recalcitrant or do not wish to come into this plan, and persuasion is the only tool available in order to bring about uniformity. But the point is not lost on the Minister of Agriculture and it is one that he continues to work on.

● (1500)

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to make a comment, followed by a supplementary question. We are perhaps starting down a dangerous and slippery road. This opens up the possibility of a sort of food trade war or subsidy war between Canada and the United States. It is one that we cannot win because our treasury is not as large as that of the United States. If we look into the subsidies paid in the United States, any alleged subsidies that we pay in Canada would be dwarfed by the billions of dollars of subsidies that go to food production in the United States.

I would ask the Leader of the Government to pass on to the relevant ministers in Cabinet my concern that we should be very careful before we in Canada go down the road of paying the large western grain transportation subsidy to the producers. It seems to me that if the grain producers of western Canada start to receive that subsidy in their mail boxes that would be a signal to the United States to undertake some drastic counteraction. To follow that course would pose a serious danger to Canada.

I agree with the Leader of the Government that it is important that subsidies across the country, whatever they may be, should be uniform and there should not be the huge variation from province to province. Will the government endeavour to work out some kind of marketing system in Canada in relation to hogs which, under the GATT, would allow us to be protected from this kind of retaliatory action by the United States?

That question raises the whole matter of national marketing boards, and I know that is a difficult subject. It is something that I am not always enthusiastic about. I am enthusiastic about it in the grain business in light of particular circumstances, but it is much more difficult in connection with the production of hogs or perishable commodities, something that is consumed in Canada to a much greater extent. Nonetheless I would ask the Leader of the Government to see whether a study has been made, can be made or will be made to see whether or not a system could be developed in Canada that would give us the protection of GATT, rather than leave us wide open to this kind of retaliatory action by the United States.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, GATT already provides for the sort of thing mentioned by my honourable friend, but in a reverse way. He will know that we have invoked certain rules with respect to beef imports from the European Community, and I believe that they, fully authorized under GATT, are saying «If you are going to do that to our beef, we will do it to your maple sugar,» or some other products of that kind. That question is now being negotiated with other people. Our recourse against the United States is the same thing. In retaliation, we could impose some restrictions against goods which they export into our country. But that has to be the counsel of despair. That is no way to settle any of these matters.

Senator Argue: That is not what I had in mind.

Senator Roblin: I know. I have to speak with caution, because I am not an expert on the GATT. So far as I understand the GATT, that is the only protective device we have. The real solution is what the late Winston Churchill used to say: «Jaw, jaw is better than war, war». We have to talk to the Americans and try to expose the reasonableness of the position we are taking. That is why having a friend in the U.S. President is no bad thing.

Senator Argue: The question of «jaw, jaw,» opens up every kind of possibility. I suppose that Canada would have the biggest jaw in history, if it came to «jaw, jaw.» But the American jaw might be smaller and tougher and a lot more powerful. I do not want to get into a discussion of what can or cannot be done in GATT. There is, of course, an appeal to GATT if you believe that whatever action has been taken is not in keeping with GATT. That course might or might not be pursued. However, I am not talking about that. I believe there are marketing systems possible that would allow us to have some control over our hog industry in this country and at the same time would allow us to avoid that kind of retaliatory action. The officials in the department will, I am sure, know what my jargon is all about, and will provide an answer. Perhaps there is no way that we can do it except by rigid control over sow numbers on a given farm, individual production, and so on. But there may be some other way that is a little less onerous.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not wish to continue this discussion either, but I would like to come back to my point that negotiation is the way to go. For example, recently the American government imposed an embargo on millions of dollars worth of Canadian food exports because of the sugar content. It was caught in the net, with a lot of other prohibitions against imports of sugar. Now that their attention has been drawn to the specific weight of this measure on Canada—it is very serious—there are some indications that they recognize the unfairness of the situation. That is being done not by threatening to invoke powers, which are really useless in the hands of a smaller power, but by appealing to the sweet voice of reason. You do not always win on that, but it's worth trying.

JUSTICE

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Le Moyné: My question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Considering that the issue of capital punishment continues to be of concern to us, that Mr. Bill Domm is very enthusiastic about it in the other place, and that he happens to be a parliamentary secretary, might we conclude that his actions reflect the official and ultimate policy of the government in this respect?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I believe the honourable senator will find that Mr. Domm is acting in his private capacity as a member of Parliament.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CANADIAN POTATOES—UNITED STATES IMPORT DUTY

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: The Leader of the Government in the Senate has given a very clear explanation of the problems faced by Canada's pork producers. Many of his remarks apply to the problems and threats confronting eastern Canada potato producers.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate referred directly to the various subsidies paid in this country by the federal government or by the provinces.

According to a statement allegedly made by American politicians, some provinces heavily subsidize potato production in Canada. Those potatoes are then marketed in the United States at reduced prices. Quebec is one of the provinces singled out by our American colleagues. Indeed, it has been said that provincial subsidies promote overproduction in Quebec, with the result that the American market is being flooded as never before.

Yesterday I did refer to the meeting which U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Block would like to arrange with his Canadian federal counterpart, the Hon. John Wise. Given today's admission by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, would the federal Minister of Agriculture not be well advised to meet with his provincial colleagues in an attempt to make them realize that our foreign markets can be seriously damaged by some subsidies which, in my opinion, are unwarranted and unjustified? That is the point of view expressed by the producers of New Brunswick.

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that the Minister of Agriculture meets regularly and consistently with his colleagues in the provinces and matters of that sort are among the items that are discussed.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he intends to make a statement this afternoon in this chamber about the new federal-provincial energy agreement, in particular the petroleum and gas revenue tax, and how it will affect the consumers of Canada in paying for their home heating fuel and gas and gasoline expenses.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I thank my honourable friend for raising that point, because I had intended to report to the house that a statement will be made on the Western Accord, in the other place. I think it is probably being made right now, and arrangements will be made to have that statement made available to all members of the Senate so that they may have a chance to examine it.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

MARKETING OF DWARF WHEAT

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question which is really for the distinguished minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Honourable Charles Mayer, but since I cannot address the question to him here, I address it through the government leader in the Senate.

It has to do with the whole question of the production and movement of dwarf wheat on the prairies. These wheats produce a greater yield than normal high quality wheats; they have been, and are, a temptation for some producers to get into the business of producing dwarf wheats; they have come into the country illegally; it is illegal, as I understand it, to market them through the ordinary channels and to suggest that they are ordinary spring wheats that are licensed.

There is a report in the Globe and Mail that steps are being taken to set up a system whereby these dwarf wheats can be marketed by producers, and that the Canadian Wheat Board is going to endeavour to set up a special bin system for the handling of dwarf wheats. This disturbs me very greatly. I suggest that it is a system to legalize the illegal, to legalize wrongdoing, and really to make it lawful for a group of farmers whose judgment is certainly misplaced, to put it mildly, to effectively sabotage the best marketing system and the best grading system in the world.

I am asking the government leader why this step has been taken, why the minister in charge did not endeavour to prevent the marketing of this kind of grain, and what steps will be taken to outlaw and prevent this kind of procedure in the future.

I think our customers will be very greatly upset that we are starting to put in our system now grades of wheat of inferior milling quality that can gum up our system, and that can damage our reputation in the world. We are going into a very difficult marketing period for western Canadian grain. In my view, we will be able to sell all of the high quality wheat that we can produce in western Canada—and that is lots—because it carries a premium and our customers and the world want our premium wheat. I think this new kind of system is a very serious threat, and I would ask the minister to respond, or I would ask that these words be taken to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board for a comment from him.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend knows a good deal about this problem, in view of his former capacity. As he knows, not a bushel of this substandard wheat, if you want to call it that, has been grown under the auspices of the present government. It is to come. There is, I think, about 600,000 acres of this grain being planted or intended to be planted in western Canada.

Now, what is the problem? The problem is exactly as stated by my honourable colleague, namely, that you do not want to mix this kind of wheat with our regular crop because it is of a different quality. It is not suitable for milling in the same sense that our wheat is. It is suitable for milling in other forms of bread production than Canada No. 1 Northern, and it is suitable for certain types of feed operations as well. It is not a useless product. A great many farmers think it is a good product, because a great many of them are growing it.

The question is: Can you tolerate that in a system which has devoted many years to establishing its reputation for quality and uniformity, and all the things that go to make Canadian wheat the world quality product that it is? That is the problem. The minister thinks it can be done by a special allocation of storage services for this particular grain. After all, we manage to keep umpteen grades of wheat in separate storage containers; we keep different grains separated in the storage system, so at least from the point of view of theory, if you want to use that expression, there is no reason why we cannot do the same with this grain. My honourable friend suggests it is inadvisable to do this. The minister is investigating the possibilities, and I think I would be prepared to allow him to complete his studies in this matter.

Senator Argue: As I understand it, it is not a question of studies, it is a question now of having come to some conclusions. I do not expect the Leader of the Government in the Senate to have the figures, but from what I read it is not 600,000 acres, it is closer to two million acres, and to provide special bins is really to give this wheat a blessing, because if it is a special bin, then it is there to go out to be milled into flour in all parts of the world. Up until now those producers who were producing unlicensed grains had to accept a feed grade only, and therefore a lower price. This new system is a bonus for wrongdoing, and I think it is a very dangerous practice.

Senator Roblin: I doubt that one could call it wrongdoing. It may not be what the minister likes, but there is no law that says you cannot do it. It is not wrongdoing. If the Canadian Wheat Board, who are the prime movers in this, who have to make it work, think it is a practical proposition I would be inclined to think it probably is. After all, we now sell wheat of umpteen different grades and we have no trouble in keeping them apart or distinguishing them, and our customers have no trouble in knowing what they are buying, so it follows, in my mind, that to add another variety to that mix is a possibility. My honourable friend does not think it is desirable. He is entitled to that opinion.

Senator Argue: No, I surely do not think it is desirable. It is apparently being done. I think it is wrongdoing, because it is an unlicensed variety; it was brought into the country illegally; it was bootlegged into the country. Some producers who are out to sabotage the Wheat Board system take it to the elevators, I read, and pretend it is good quality wheat, and the elevator managers are unable to judge it on sight. Therefore, these people, who are practising something that I think is very wrong and very improper, are able to get away with it, or there is danger that they might get away with it. This new system is being undertaken. There may be a way out. I hope there will be in the future, so that everybody will agree to stop this activity. However, I know the mentality of some of the types who are doing it. They are doing it to sabotage the Wheat Board system. They are part and parcel of a determined, small minority that says, «To heck with the Wheat Board, and the Wheat Board can do nothing right.» I think this is a very dangerous practice. There is the question of H.Y.320 which is a high production wheat and can be easily identified. I think that is fine but to condone marketing of semi-dwarf into our export system is a mistake.

● (1520)

Senator Roblin: I have to deal with the question of sabotaging the Wheat Board system. Bringing the item within the ambit of the Wheat Board system, surely, is not sabotaging it.

Senator Argue: I said the individuals who are producing this are the type of people who hate the Canadian Wheat Board, have been vocal against it and would do everything possible to undermine it. Some of my honourable friends' colleagues in the government of the province of Alberta have exactly the same attitude.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ADOPTION OF INDIAN CHILDREN

Question No. 5 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Andrew Thompson:

4th December—With respect to the approximately 5,580 Indian children who, between 1961 and 1984, were adopted from their home reserves (mostly in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and the Northwest Territories) by non-Indian families across Canada and similarly a large number in the United States, what steps have been and are being taken by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to ensure that these children are informed, when they come of age, about their rights and benefits, such as their trust accounts held by the Indian Affairs Department?

Reply by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

Adoption of all children whether Indian or non-Indian is a provincial responsibility. In view of this, all information regarding adoptions provided to the Department of Indian Affairs & Northern Development by various child welfare agencies is supplied on the understanding that it will be kept strictly confidential. Under these circumstances, officials of the Department are not in a position, themselves, to contact an adopted child regarding his or her Indian status and any rights and benefits available to him or her unless the child concerned or the adoptive parents have initially contacted the Department. However, each province has been provided with a list of those children who have reached the age of majority and not yet contacted the Department regarding their entitlement to be registered. During the past two years, provincial welfare officials have been approaching these children, advising them of their Indian status and suggesting that they contact the Department regarding their rights and benefits as well as any funds that may be held in trust for them.

In addition, Provincial Welfare officials are now providing all non-Indian adoptive parents with the booklet entitled: «Adoption and the Indian Child». This booklet, which is a departmental publication, explains the special rights and benefits associated with Indian status and band membership that an adopted Indian child is entitled to and how to make application for these rights and benefits upon attaining the age of majority.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2. p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, March 29, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Renaude Lapointe, the Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 2nd April, 1985, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS— SENATE REPRESENTATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before Question Period is called, I have been informed by Senator Marchand that his request to be included in the delegation respecting the forthcoming constitutional conference of first ministers on aboriginal rights has met with success.

Hon. Len Marchand: Senator Watt will also attend that conference.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I am sure all honourable senators are pleased that we will be represented in that way.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Now that we have reached Orders of the Day, I have to tell honourable senators that I have an unsatisfactory statement to make.

It appears that the Committee of the Whole in the other place has adjourned until the Honourable Sinclair Stevens makes a statement. At the conclusion of that statement, the House of Commons will go into Committee of the Whole again to consider the bill respecting the Canadian Commercial Bank situation.

So, honourable senators, that leaves us in a very unhappy position. I can tell honourable senators that I will monitor the situation and consult with honourable senators as to what our ultimate decision on this matter ought to be.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I was watching the proceedings in the other place, including the proceedings of Committee of the Whole. For whatever additional benefit it might be, I did catch what Mr. Deans and the Honourable Herb Gray said when the Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn mentioned that the Honourable Sinclair Stevens would be making a statement. Each of them said that they would like to hear that statement, that they would agree to sit through the lunch hour and still endeavour to meet their undertaking to complete passage of the bank bill by 3 o'clock. That is supplementary to what the Leader of the Government has said.

Senator Roblin: I am pleased to hear that.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-37, respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have been given the responsibility of making a relatively short introduction to this bill. The introduction is short, not because the bill is unimportant but because the facts that lie behind it and the arrangement to which it gives effect have very recently and forcibly been brought to the attention of all honourable senators.

In addition to the bill itself, with which I will deal shortly, there have been circulated to honourable senators an addendum and a sessional paper which sets out in detail the arrangement that has been reached between the parties involved in this particular matter. I do not intend to deal with that arrangement at any great length, because the minister who is in charge of the matter in the other place is available and will be here when we proceed to the Committee of the Whole stage to deal with the details of that agreement which may require the attention of senators.

I merely want to record the reasons the government has considered it necessary to bring in a piece of legislation of this kind and to give a brief overview of some of the important matters related to it.

As honourable senators know, a regional bank in western Canada has run into financial trouble. It has been, up to the present time, quite a successful regional bank, but recent events have brought it to a state where it felt it was unable to carry on business without some rearrangement of its affairs. That matter was brought to the attention of the Inspector General of Banks in recent days and has given rise to the measure that is before us now.

The problems the bank ran into, I believe, can be put under two main heads, the first being the catastrophic decline in real estate values in western Canada, which no one anticipated and which has, indeed, adversely affected a good many others besides this bank. The losses that were involved in dealing with loans made in respect of real estate in western Canada have been serious and have added greatly to the problem the bank faces. Second, it has also had some difficulty with loans made in the energy industry, some in Canada and some in the United States. The last class of loan was the one which provoked the crisis, because it has been a very recent development in the loan situation in the energy sector in the United States which has brought the bank to its present pass, and I think that is the main reason it is in trouble today.

Let me tell you briefly what the bank does. It is not your regular retail bank; it is a wholesale bank. Most of its shareholders are corporate entities. It started out almost entirely as the child of many pension funds across Canada, and those investors are still the major shareholders in this company, although there are some, what one might call, retail shareholders as well, but they are not the more important element in the shareholding arrangement.

The bank itself has depositors, some of whom are retail depositors, and their interests have to be considered. One of the principal motivating factors stems from the fact that the bank's loans have been made largely to small independent entrepreneurs, the great majority of whom are in western Canada. If the loans that had been extended to these customers of the bank were called—which is what one would expect would happen if the bank went into liquidation—it would indeed have a very unhappy, even tragic, effect on the economy of this region.

I should also say that it is in the national interest that the Canadian banking system be considered a sound one. Foreign interests, who are perhaps not so familiar with the structure of our banking system as we are, would be liable to be more alarmed about the state of the Canadian banking system than the mere fact of this bank's going into liquidation would justify. The financial world is one big bowl of jelly, and we know how susceptible they are to what they perceive to be adverse reactions to the banking system of any country.

The shareholders represent another group to be affected by what we do. The shareholders, unfortunately, cannot be preserved whole in this case. Part of the arrangements, as honourable senators will know from having read the addendum to the bill, call for a dilution of their interests. It probably will be as much as three-quarters. They will be left with about one quarter of the interest that they formerly had.

Those who will be protected to a much greater extent are the depositors. This agreement, of course, preserves the depositors whole. If that were not the case, there would be a call made on the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation of a considerable amount of money, an amount, I am told, in excess of the $75 million for which that corporation has accepted responsibility under the present arrangements. Because the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation is not going to be called upon to support the depositors, which would otherwise be the case, it will receive some advantage. The real beneficiaries, however, I think, are those who have received loans from this bank. Those people will now be able to repay and discharge those loans in a regular way, following their normal course of business, rather than having to run the risk of having them called because the bank is broke.

Those are the main factors that I think the Senate ought to consider in dealing with this piece of legislation. The deal, of course, is set out in the material that has been distributed. In effect, it means that the Government of Canada is making itself responsible for relieving the bank portfolio of about $60 million worth of its debts, those which are considered to be very doubtful debts. It is also undertaking to take up to $13 million in debentures that this bank has outstanding. Those two amounts, added together, come to $73 million.

There are some other expenses in connection with interest and other charges, which are estimated to be something up to $2 million, though perhaps not as high as that. The amount of money referred to in the bill, $75 million, reflects the obligations which the Government of Canada thinks it has taken upon itself.

In addition to that, the Government of Alberta has accepted responsibility for another large purchase of the assets of this bank which are in poor condition, amounting to some $60 million, and it has also undertaken to buy $13 million worth of debentures.

Incidentally, the Province of British Columbia has also come in, buying $13 million worth of these debentures.

The Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation has made itself responsible for $75 million. As I explained a moment ago, this may not be a bad thing for that corporation because it would otherwise have a liability to the depositors of the bank which would exceed that amount of money. As well, six of the largest banks in the country have agreed to take $60 million worth of the questionable assets of this bank. All in all, we come to a grand total of some $255 million in financial assistance for the Canadian Commercial Bank.

What everyone will want to know is what the chances are of getting the money back. The Inspector General of Banks has reviewed the position that this bank will be in after these loans and reliefs have been given to it, and he is of the opinion, and we hope he is right—and he will be here this afternoon to answer questions that honourable senators may have of him—that there is a good chance that the bank will be able to repay these moneys in due course. While no interest is being charged on those moneys—and that is certainly a considerable factor in itself—it looks as though those who are putting up money with respect to the unsatisfactory loans that this bank has made stand a reasonable chance—and I go no further than that—of getting that money back over the term. So while no one can have any great pleasure in recommending this kind of rescue operation, all things being considered it seems to me to be the thing that we ought to do, and there seems to be a reasonable chance of the public treasury getting back all or at least a substantial portion of its financial contribution in due course.

● (1530)

Therefore, honourable senators, I submit this matter to your attention, and if the bill receives second reading, I shall propose that we invite the Minister of State (Finance), who is responsible for this bill in the other place, together with the Inspector General of Banks and one of the minister's advisers, to join us here and make themselves available for a Committee of the Whole consideration of this particular piece of legislation.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the basic principles of the bill, and the reasons for it, have been outlined by the Leader of the Government. Let us start by accepting that we all support the principle that we must maintain confidence in our financial institutions, that the situation of this bank had reached crisis proportions, and therefore prompt and decisive action was required. That leaves us, as senators, with the obligation, as a consequence of and in support of that principle and the wish to implement it, to ensure that some injustices are not done under its cloak.

So, as senators, we should carefully consider the questions we will ask, because as the Leader of the Government has said, we will have an opportunity to discuss those questions and to obtain the best evidence available, namely, that of the Minister of State (Finance).

Honourable senators, let us approach the matter on a chronological basis, and in that respect I suggest three heads. The first is: What was the problem presented to the government, and how was it described? Had it not been a bank and had the officials appeared before their own bank manager, how would they have described the problem? What were the assets and liabilities? What was the nature of them? And what was the net afterwards?

Secondly, we should look at the matter under the heading of the action that was taken. Reference has been made to a memorandum of agreement. The bill, after all, is really nothing more than the authority to implement that agreement.

The third, and probably the most important, question is: How do all of the players come out of it, and, particularly, who gets hurt and how badly, after the action has been taken? Above all, how does the federal taxpayer come out of it? That, honourable senators, appears to me to be our main concern.

With respect to the first question, as to how the problem was presented, without having the minister before us we do not know the details. We would like to know what were the assets and liabilities, the net, and the nature of the assets and liabilities as they were presented. Until we receive answers to those questions, we cannot obtain answers to other questions.

We would also like to know what the government's responsibility was. Did those who are paid by the federal taxpayer, such as the Inspector General of Banks and other departmental officials—those who are paid to prevent this sort of thing happening—have their eye on the ball, and was it sufficiently on the ball and on the ball soon enough? We also want to know the makeup of the bank's creditors, as between the depositors, debenture holders, shareholders and others.

Under the third heading they refer to the action taken. We have the Memorandum of Agreement where the government is given the power to enter into that agreement and other agreements on the basis of the bill before us. Have there been bank rescues before? How do they compare with this one? Was the government ever a participant with taxpayers' money in a bank rescue? If not, what is different about this one to justify it?

What is the net effect of, for example, the warrants that give the right to purchase for a period of 10 years after the group has been paid out? It is said that they will be able to buy in on these warrants at a very reasonable price. What is a reasonable price? What are the shares worth now as compared to what they might be worth at the time the options or warrants are taken up? Also under the third heading, how do all the players come out? First, there are the depositors. We know a bit about their situation and we can find out more from the minister. Second, there are the shareholders. There will be a dilution of some 75 per cent for the shareholders. Certainly, to the extent that they are Canadian taxpayers, they should be our concern. Nevertheless, under the capitalist system the person who risks his or her capital for gain is expected to bear the loss when things do not turn out well. So the shareholders should only be our concern in the final analysis of what the result is to taxpayers as a whole. Then there are the debenture holders. If I read the document correctly, the debenture holders were asked to take a position less strict than they were entitled to in order to help in this operation, and they refused to do so. As a result, we will want to learn from the minister about this $13 million difference between $73 million and $60 million that is being set aside for the purpose of taking a subsidiary position on these debentures.

We must also consider the bank group. If we are to be concerned about how the taxpayers come out of this, we must also be concerned about how the banks will come out of it. Can the banks get hurt? If so, it will be a bit of an anomaly, since banks operate on the basis—and I am not making a pejorative judgment, that is their role, that is the rule of their game—of never getting hurt. Such thinking is the reason for such famous sayings as, “A bank only loans money when it is sure that you do not need it and that there is no way that they are going to get hurt.” That is their job as bankers, but in this case have they decided that they are not going to protect themselves? Or are they, as they say, shooting craps with the other players rather than taking a preferred position? I would particularly like to know whether or not they are placed in a better position than Canada, which means the taxpayers, as described in the agreement. What others are involved and how do they come out?

Finally, and most importantly for us, how do the taxpayers come out? Senator Roblin said that he has some information that there is, I suppose, an informed estimate that there is a good chance that taxpayers will come out of this situation satisfactorily; if the bank survives and if the bank makes enough profit from its 50 per cent to stay alive to pay back eventually everything that has been advanced. How do the taxpayers come out now, and how do they come out later? Is there a possibility that we may have to be here on another occasion because the bank might not succeed? I am sure that we will get some evidence on that, and I agree that all we can ask for is the best evidence and the best opinion that we can get.

I would add one other comment. It is ironic that when we were sitting on the other side we were frequently criticized—

● (1540)

Senator Doody: A bit of nostalgia.

Senator Frith: Yes, a bit of nostalgia. We are usually treated to a bit of nostalgia during Question Period. When the government supporters do not find answers to our questions, they, themselves, turn to nostalgia and remind us of events that took place when the Liberal Party was in government. It is in that context that I say, as a closing comment, that there is something ironic about the fact that we are now agreeing that a rescue operation is necessary when, for the many years we were in government, the very idea of a rescue mission was, per se, an anathema.

Honourable senators, I think, as Senator Roblin has said, we should move quickly into Committee of the Whole. Senator Roblin and I have raised questions that must receive answers. We need more information before passing this bill.

We support the principle of the bill but wish to be assured that no unjustified pain is being inflicted on some of the players, particularly the taxpayers of Canada, under the cloak of what is admitted to be a desirable project.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak now, I shall close the debate on second reading.

[Senator Frith.]

I believe the honourable gentleman who has just spoken has raised the sort of questions which ought to be raised. I do hope he will be able to obtain satisfactory answers to his questions.

I can deal with a few of those questions, and I shall try to do so in the order in which they were raised. The first question was with respect to timing, and when the government found out that something was wrong. The Honourable Senator Frith asked whether the watchdog of the government delivered the goods, or whether he was a little late on the uptake. The Inspector General of Banks will be here and will have to defend himself in that regard. He has given what seems to me to be a reasoned defence of his part in this operation. I think my honourable friend would be quite in order in asking him to explain to the Senate exactly how this situation came about.

The question of who loses and who gains is important. We should be able to clarify that position as much as possible. I will give honourable senators my interpretation now. Insofar as the banks are concerned, they are putting up $60 million on which they will receive no interest. The banks will receive warrants to buy shares in this bank at a later date, as will the government, if those shares are worth anything. If they turn out to be worth something, then the banks and the government will receive some recompense for the interest forgone. The banks and the government accept the same terms. The Canadian Commercial Bank has agreed to pay 50 per cent of its pre-tax profits to those who have advanced the money. The banks and the Government of Canada share in that alike. So, there is no special position being offered to the Canadian banks in this matter at all; they are on all fours with the government itself.

I have been told as a result of previous inquiries that it was no small thing to get them to accept that obligation, although I share the view of those who think that that is what they ought to do. I certainly have no qualms in agreeing with that line of thought myself. So, the banks and the government are on equal footing when it comes to the risks they share or the losses they might suffer.

Nobody can be sure that this bank will succeed, but the best advice we have is that it can. If that should be the case, over a period of years the banks and the government will recover the moneys they have put in, and if they are able to dispose of their warrants in the marketplace in return for a reasonable sum of money, they will receive something on account of the forgone interest. Whether that amount will be as much as the interest would have been, we will see; it might even be greater. Nobody really knows the answer to that.

The urgency of the matter is underlined by the statement made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada who played a leading role in putting these arrangements together. His opinion, which I think is a valuable one, indicated that if the government were going to do anything, it had better act fast, or not at all. That is why we are here today.

Regarding bail outs, I have to confess that, although I am in the position of recommending something that could be described uncharitably as a bail out, and charitably as a sound financial move to protect Canadian interests—

Senator Frith: A humane rescue!

Senator Roblin:—depending on how one looks at it, it still causes me some qualms to be in the position of recommending that today.

Senator MacEachen: The life of a minister is not an easy one.

Senator Roblin: I hope that the bail out is as successful as the one we undertook for Chrysler.

I must say to my honourable friend that I bear with patience the arrows that he has hurled at me in a rather genteel fashion this afternoon. On the question of bail outs, I do not think much of them either, but needs must when the devil drives, and that is the position in which we find ourselves today.

I thank my honourable colleagues for the attention they have given to this matter.

If the bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, that this bill be now referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Heath Macquarrie in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Barbara Jean McDougall, P.C., Minister of State (Finance), was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is now in Committee of the Whole to take into consideration Bill C-37, respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank.

We welcome the presence of the Minister of State (Finance) and ask if she has an opening statement. If not, we shall proceed to questions from honourable senators.

● (1550)

Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to go right to questions. I am sure that honourable senators will agree, and I will be happy to answer any questions they have.

The Chairman: It is the usual custom, honourable senators, that we postpone consideration of the short title, and if I have your agreement on that we shall proceed immediately to clause 2.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, before I ask the minister a few questions, may I welcome her once again to this body and assure her that we will not detain her as long today as we did on the last occasion. There is an assurance that when proper procedures are followed the Senate moves very rapidly, indeed. That is what I believe will happen today.

I have followed the minister's public statements on this particular situation, and I readily understand the emphasis which she has placed not only on the impact of any failure or liquidation on depositors and shareholders, but also the impact that the failure or liquidation of the regional bank would have psychologically not only on the banking system within Canada but also on the perception abroad of the stability of Canadian financial institutions. I believe that in the circumstances it was necessary to act in order to avoid not only the domestic upheaval or the domestic uncertainty, but also the international uncertainty and the impact that that would have on currency and confidence.

I notice that the minister in her statement mentioned that the government had considered a number of options and while it had rejected others it had decided to preserve the bank by putting together this particular package which is now before the Senate for approval. Presumably, the reasons which she gave against liquidation are the reasons she would recite now if asked, but I wonder whether any other options were considered, other than the present course and the liquidation of the bank, such as a merger or any other alternative solution.

My second question has to do with the information that even though the bank itself sounded the alarm bells about the middle of March of 1985, the Inspector General of Banks had been following the matter for a considerable time. In fact, the minister herself has stated in the other place that the Office of the Inspector General of Banks was aware that the bank's financial position had been weakening gradually, and believed that the problems could be contained as the recovery in western Canada gained momentum since the economic situation, though difficult, was stabilizing. We do know that the situation developed gradually. We do know that it did not come upon the Inspector General of Banks overnight. What interests me is what happened in that period of time as the situation gradually developed, and the financial situation of the bank became more precarious and as the hopes prevailed that the economic situation would improve to the point where the bank would be put on a sound footing.

In that interval did the Inspector General of Banks or the Governor of the Bank of Canada, or the minister just observe this situation, or were any steps taken to support this bank's profit situation short of coming to Parliament with this rescue package? It is obvious that the public disclosure of a crisis within the bank is not sought by the government, and certainly not by the Minister of Finance, and certainly not by the Governor of the Bank and not by the Inspector General. The last thing they want to see happen is what has happened in this particular case. We have gone public and we have shown that the bank is in very bad shape, indeed.

What I want to know is this: Did anything happen prior to this public package to support the bank? Were any steps taken by the Governor of the Bank of Canada or by the government itself through, for example, rearrangement of deposits with this commercial bank? Does the government have deposits with this bank? Did it enlarge its deposits? Did it remove the reserve requirements so that the bank might be helped in some way? That is one step about which I would like to ask whether, first of all, it had been considered and, secondly, whether it would have been applicable in this case to do something in that time.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, perhaps if I could deal with the latter part of the question first. We are all agreed that public disclosure of financial crises is what one would have liked to avoid and we made an effort to move as rapidly as we could in order to meet this situation. When we did go public, we came with not just a problem but with a solution which, in a case like this, is the only way that one can deal with the matter publicly. It is the only responsible action that I think we could have taken.

In terms of the other options, one can consider liquidation, which is the worst option; one can consider mergers, in which case you discuss with potential buyers, or acquirers, or merger partners the possibility of proceeding along this route. The other option is simply for some kind of expanded government role either through expanding the deposit base or whatever.

I spoke with officials of the Office of the Inspector General, with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and with the chartered banks in an effort to get the best possible advice on the best route to go, and we were in constant touch with—

Senator Frith: With whom did you speak?

Mrs. McDougall: I spoke with the Inspector General's Office and the Governor of the Bank, and then I spoke with one major chartered bank to ask if they would co-operate with the Inspector General's Office in the matter of an early examination. From there on I was not in direct touch with the banks but there was an ongoing conversation with them. I spoke with the Treasurer of Alberta in an effort to find out to what extent they were interested in co-operating and what route they felt was appropriate. Therefore, there were a number of conversations going on at the same time.

• (1600)

The management of the bank, who had some discussion with the Inspector General, had some thoughts of their own. We dwelt on all these possibilities and came out at the other end with what we thought was the most appropriate restructuring of the bank.

Did I miss anything?

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator MacEachen: I wanted to ask whether the government had any of its funds on deposit with this bank, because it normally spreads its deposits among the chartered banks according to a formula. Perhaps the practice does not apply in this case because it is, as the Leader of the Government said, a wholesale bank. I wanted to know whether it did have any money on deposit and why it would not have put some money on deposit in order, through certain arrangements, to help the profit situation of the bank.

Mrs. McDougall: We had no money directly on deposit outside of the normal banking arrangements of which this bank would be a very minor part. I believe there were some crown corporations with deposits in this bank.

If this were a liquidity problem, under the law the bank would have the support of the Bank of Canada, but we had no reason to believe at any early stage that a massive infusion of deposits would be necessary.

When the problem arose—and I will go through the history of the problem later if you choose to ask about it—more than an infusion of deposits was required.

Senator MacEachen: I would have thought that, if the situation developed gradually, if there were a sense of precariousness as to the future of the bank or as to its profitability, one of the steps that might have been taken, short of going public, might have been to increase the deposits of the government with the bank, which would have been a source of funds for the bank and, under certain circumstances, would have helped the profit situation of the bank. All I want to know is whether that was considered at all. It may not have been considered. Why was it not considered, and, if it was, why was it deemed inappropriate?

Mrs. McDougall: I guess it was not. Even when we say there was a gradual deterioration, there was an appearance of stability in the situation. However, the situation was volatile in fiscal 1984 which ended on October 31. The bank was profitable in the first and third quarters and unprofitable in the second and fourth. It made a marginal profit in the first quarter of 1985. Therefore, indications were that there was stability and there was an equity base within the bank.

Despite the knowledge of some weakness within the institution, the immediate problem was triggered by a very sharp deterioration in the bank's agency in California, most of whose business is in the oil service sector and in the oil-rich sector.

I am prepared to table this article which I will now read to you from the Wall Street Journal. The article mentions exploration and production and talks about the drilling industry in the United States. It says that "the pulse is weakening." When the article was written on February 14, 1985, it says that 2,175 drilling rigs were operating in the U.S., down 612 from December, and 299 from February, and that 400 more rigs could be idle by spring.

I am sure honourable senators will appreciate that, if you are financing an oil rig, it is a performing loan as long as that rig is operating. However, as soon as the rig stops operating, there is no return on that loan, and the value of the rig declines precipitously. This situation did arise fairly suddenly. There were indications in early 1985 of a weakness in oil prices, which triggered a lack of renewal of those drilling contracts, and that rendered the rigs non-performing.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, perhaps this can be explored later.

It is a fact that the Government of Canada distributes deposits among the chartered banks. It is a source of funds for the banks, which is cheaper than sources of funds elsewhere. I wonder why, in these circumstances, the government did not increase or make deposits at this bank to provide a source of funds, although, perhaps, it would have cost the other chartered banks something and the Bank of Canada. I think this is a technique that has been considered in the past. I just wondered if it had been considered in this case. I am really looking for information to find out whether it would be equitable in the present circumstances, or is there some reason why it would be inappropriate?

Mrs. McDougall: I can only try to say this some other way. There was no reason for the government to take any particular action in terms of this institution until very recently, by which time infusion of deposits would not have been an appropriate route to go. Corporate restructuring was necessary.

Senator MacEachen: I understand the government decided to act when the crisis occurred rather than to take steps to avert the crisis. I think there are steps that might have been taken to avoid a public crisis on this point.

I also want to know whether this bank was in possession of any income debentures or term preferred shares. Did it have any of these financial instruments? If, as is stated, it was in a non-profit situation, then certainly these would not have been of much, if any, value to the bank in terms of tax deferral. I wonder whether that avenue was explored as a way of helping the bank.

Mrs. McDougall: I am not sure I understand the question. The bank has an issue of preferred shares outstanding as part of its capital structure. Are you referring to some other preferred shares? Are you suggesting that they should have issued more preferred shares as part of the capital restructuring? I am not sure what you are suggesting.

● (1610)

Senator MacEachen: I am referring to the common way by which banks have their taxes reduced, or abated or diminished, that being through the technique of term preferred shares. I am wondering whether this bank had term preferred shares and to what extent. Having said that, I realize they could not defer very many taxes if they were in a loss position.

Why couldn't the purchase of these term preferred shares by the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation have been used as a technique in this case to provide some help to the bank?

I'll leave that thought with the minister. I should like to get some information on the point, either now or later.

Mrs. McDougall: Let me clarify the point. Because of the very modest profit position of the bank, tax avoidance or an alternative tax structure was not really an issue. Because its earnings were modest, it did not have a high proportion of earnings out of which to pay additional preferred dividends.

Senator MacEachen: We are like ships in the night, I am afraid, and I do not think we are hitting on the same subject. I will not press the point further. I shall leave the thought with the minister. I hope we can get some information on the point later.

There are one or two other points that I want to raise. In connection with the first, I wish to refer to a statement made by the minister in the other place in which she said that the bank had begun efforts to diversify its loan portfolio and the location of its operations. She went on to say that the bank had worked hard to expand funding sources so that a smaller percentage of its liabilities was in the form of highly liquid money market-bought deposits. It is in that context that my question occurred to me. If the bank was working hard to expand its funding sources, an increase in government deposits might have given it a lower-cost funding source.

But quite apart from that, you tell me that it worked hard to expand its funding sources, and I want to know what steps this bank took to expand its funding sources so that a smaller percentage of its liabilities were in the form of highly liquid money market-bought deposits.

Mrs. McDougall: The bank's efforts to expand actually began with the move into California—a move which, as hindsight suggests, was a bad business decision, possibly. It also opened branches in Vancouver, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, and is seeking agency arrangements to attract retail deposits as well as wholesale deposits. Until very recently, it had been almost entirely in the wholesale market.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the minister spoke approvingly of these steps, as a result of which I wondered what they were. They were regarded by the market, presumably, as beneficial steps.

I take it that the minister has answered that question to the extent that she wishes to.

Mrs. McDougall: I can give you a little bit more information on that.

Senator MacEachen: If you could, I would be glad to hear it. Before I sit down, let me put one other point on the record. It has to do with these warrants.

We are told that there is no way that these warrants can be exercised until the bank has been restored to a profitable position. The minister went on to say that these warrants serve a couple of useful purposes, one being that the execution thereof should yield a return to the members of the support group for its participation in the restructuring package.

I should like to know in what circumstances these warrants will yield a rate of return to the restructuring group. The participants in that group have an entitlement, through these warrants, to buy shares at 25 cents a share. Does their return come at such a time as those shares will have increased in value? Is that how the participants in this restructuring package get recompensed?

To that, I add one other point, and that is with respect to the interest. We have noted from the documents that have been made public in connection with this proposal that the moneys involved are being advanced interest free. If these moneys were not allocated to this rescue operation, they could be invested in alternative undertakings, earning interest income for the participants in this operation. There is income lost, and that is a cost. We are never going to recoup any of that lost income.

Assuming that the principal is paid back, what will the taxpayers have to bear in the way of what will amount to an outright contribution as a result of the moneys being advanced interest free? This represents income lost to the governments and the banks participating in this restructuring package. I would be interested in knowing the amount involved, both to the governments and to the banks.

Even if we come up in roses, the taxpayer is going to bear a loss as a result of what amounts to a substantial outright grant to this institution.

Mrs. McDougall: A warrant, as you know, is an option to purchase stock, and as such it can be either sold or exercised, and if sold, it would be at a price that provides a return. This was the route taken to provide a return on the participation certificates rather than interest. The Canadian Commercial Bank will be reinvesting 50 per cent of its earnings and paying out 50 per cent to the participants in the support package. The issue of warrants will permit the participants in the support package to earn a return through the sale of the warrants or through their exercise.

Under the Bank Act, as honourable senators are aware, banks cannot own stock in another bank. Therefore, one assumes that the warrants will be sold, thereby providing a cash return to the holders of the warrants. The buyers would then exercise the warrants, thereby providing equity to the bank. So, there are two purposes achieved in the process.

It is not a measureable return at this stage. As has been indicated, we have some confidence in the bank's viability over the longer term. We recognize that we are putting in equity and we are prepared to take a return in the form of warrants.

• (1620)

Senator MacEachen: It is true that there is no interest to the government and the banks. So that is lost. The minister is saying, as I understand it, that there are warrants, and those warrants constitute a right to buy shares at 25 cents a share. Am I right in saying that the only way in which anyone can get a return is if those shares go up in value? Is that correct?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, that is correct.

Senator MacEachen: Have the officials made any calculations to show what share evaluation would compensate for the lost income through the interest-free support? Where would the shares have to go so that the government, when the scenario is completed, would at least be in a break-even situation?

[Senator MacEachen.]

Mrs. McDougall: It will depend. If this were a loan in the conventional sense, it would depend on the term of the loan and the interest rate that it would bear. You would have to offset that against the value of the equity to the bank and the proceeds of the sale of the warrants. It is a difficult thing to compute. We have made some rough estimates of the present value of the package, which would be just under 50 per cent of the value of the loan. That is a straight discounting process. It makes a lot of assumptions about time, interest rates, and so on, and it does not take into account any return from the sale of the warrants. We can proceed under any number of assumptions and come up with any number of models. This is a very rough estimate, using some broadly based targets. But it might give you some sense of what the numbers are.

Senator MacEachen: What is the number? With the best assumptions you have made, what is the magnitude of the present value, so to speak, of the interest forgone?

Mrs. McDougall: On our $60 million participation it would be somewhere approaching $30 million.

Senator Frith: That would have been the interest otherwise.

Senator MacEachen: So $30 million will become an outright contribution, roughly—I know how difficult it is—over and above the capital that is infused. Had that money been put elsewhere, it would have earned $30 million. If the rescue is necessary, then it is necessary. We acknowledge its necessity, and it will cost $30 million unless that sum is earned by the Canadian government through the sale of its warrants. Am I right? I want to know if I am right. The warrants will only make a return if the shares go up and the bank becomes more profitable. If the shares become more valuable, then the government gets a return. But if the bank slides along and gives a mediocre performance, then we say goodbye to the $60 million, or a good part of it. I think we ought to know that.

Mrs. McDougall: There is obviously an immediate cost to the taxpayer. God never said that doing right came cheap.

Senator MacEachen: But God does not do business with the Minister of Finance. We all know that.

Mrs. McDougall: Oh yes He does. Times have changed.

Senator Frith: I think, after being here, He does business with her.

Mrs. McDougall: One can also compute the potential fallout of a liquidation in terms of lost businesses, lost jobs and lost taxes. There are a lot of hypothetical numbers that one could put into the value of this package versus the value of having the bank insolvent. This is now a solvent bank which has, among its supporters, the federal government, provincial governments and six other chartered banks. So I think it would be a place which the public would regard as being secure and solvent and a place in which to do business. As we get a recovery, which we hope will be the case, particularly in western Canada—because, despite the diversification, that is still where the major assets are—we have the confidence that this bank is viable and can continue as a going concern, playing a key role in that middle market in western Canada.

Senator MacEachen: I am pleased that the minister is convinced that this bank will prosper and will become viable and a healthy participant in the Canadian financial system. That is our hope also, and it is with that expectation and accepting that possibility that we are supporting this measure. We have given second reading to the bill and will support it on third reading. It would be very unfortunate if this regional bank, with deep roots in the Canadian west, failed. However, we are taking a risk. The minister will understand that to some extent it is an act of faith, and we will only know whether our faith has been justified as times goes on. There are no guarantees.

Mrs. McDougall: There are no guarantees. I guess the reason why we moved very quickly with the support was to resolve the risk issue in this bank. This bank, because of this action, is now a solvent institution. I want to make that clear and get that into the record. By coming up with a solution to the problem, this bank is a solvent institution.

Senator Frith: So long as the bill is passed.

Senator Godfrey: In connection with the calculation of 50 per cent, given in reply to Senator MacEachen, what is your best guesstimate of the number of years it will take to repay this money, and on what basis?

Mrs. McDougall: We came up with varying terms of from 10 to 15 years and varying interest rates; and what came out of that was about 50 per cent.

Senator Godfrey: In the Memorandum of Intent there is the following statement, to which you referred indirectly:

It is recognized that the rights provided for in this paragraph may not be granted under present legislation. In such event, all parties will adopt such means as they are advised may be available to achieve the same objective.

Is that what you are referring to with regard to banks not being able to hold shares? Why would you not have provided for that in the bill?

Mrs. McDougall: We do not especially want them to own the stock. The objective—and the banks understood this—was that the warrants themselves and the sale of the warrants would be returned to the bank, not the exercise of the warrants and an equity participation directly.

● (1630)

Senator Godfrey: Several years ago there was quite a bit of publicity about the connection of Mr. Leonard Rosenberg to this bank which resulted in Mr. Howard Eaton being bounced out. My recollection is that there were some loans from the bank to Mr. Rosenberg's companies. Was that a significant amount, and how much would it represent? Is that one of the reasons the bank is in difficulty?

Mrs. McDougall: There was a loan. Obviously, this is a very complex series of happenings. Mr. Rosenberg's companies, with which he and—I do not like to use the word "associates" because they were not associates in the legal sense—the people around him were associated had some loans from the Canadian Commercial Bank. Because of the alertness of the Supertendent of Insurance in working with the Inspector General of Banks, it was brought to the attention of the management and the board of directors of the CCB that the Inspector General was not pleased. This was going on at the same time as the Greymac-Seaway business was starting to come out. Mr. Rosenberg had been appointed by Mr. Eaton to the board of CCB. Mr. Rosenberg's loan was repaid and he was off the board, I believe, in October or late 1982. Mr. Eaton was forced to resign as CEO and from the board in January 1983. So these people are gone and that affair is really not related to this event, except that the turn-around in the economy started about the same time.

Senator Frith: I think it might be worthwhile if I told you two things. First, I watched some of the proceedings in the other place. I know the answers to some of the questions I am about to ask you and what you will say about them, but I think they should be on the record here because I think it has to show we asked these questions.

Senator MacEachen: She may give a better answer here.

Senator Frith: I will not comment on that until I hear the answers. I think you should also understand the form in which I intend to ask the questions. First, I shall ask you about the problem as it was presented to the government, as though they had walked into your office and as if you were their bank manager and they said that they were in trouble and you asked them to tell you about it. Then I want to ask you some questions on the action that you took, which refers to the bill before us and the agreement. Last, how do all the players come out of the action that has been taken, especially as to who, if anyone, gets hurt, how badly and, particularly, how it involves the taxpayers, who should be our principal concern? Some of these questions you have already answered here.

So, on the problem and how it was presented, what general picture did they present to you with regard to their assets, liabilities, and the net trouble situation? Also, what is the nature of their assets and liabilities?

Mrs. McDougall: You will forgive me if I refer to some of my financial notes.

Senator Frith: Of course.

Mrs. McDougall: I want to get the numbers right.

Senator Frith: I should say also that the type of answer I would like is one from a layman's point of view, as if he were reading it in the paper.

Mrs. McDougall: The CEO of the bank had a scheduled meeting with the Inspector General on March 14 which came about as a result of notification from the California Regulators on February 20 that there was some concern about the oil service related loans.

Senator Frith: Roughly, what percentage of the assets were they?

Mrs. McDougall: A very modest percentage of the assets came through the agency in California. It was about $115 million, of which, it became clear afterwards, $85 million would have to be written off totally. The bank has total assets of approximately $3 billion. So it is a modest amount relative to the total assets. After February 20 the regulator and the bank arranged a meeting on March 14 to discuss the situation and review the bank's portfolio in total. By that time it had become clear, because things were changing very quickly—and I commend this article in the New York Times to you because it explains what happened in that whole industry—

Senator Frith: Would you identify the article please?

Mrs. McDougall: I do not have it at hand but I shall do so later. In any event, when the CEO of the bank arrived in the office of the Inspector General he presented the person he met there with a more serious problem than had been envisaged when the meeting was arranged. I was notified later that day—

Senator Frith: Which day was that?

Mrs. McDougall: That was March 14—as they went through the situation together. What became clear was that the bank's common equity—and I am going from memory here—was around $91 million, which meant that a write-down of this magnitude in a hurry would wipe out their equity and reduce their capital base drastically. They looked at the rest of the loan portfolio, particularly western Canada. Where there are problem loans, you can nurse them along on a going-concern basis. However, once you have triggered a particular problem then you are out of a liquidity problem and into a solvency problem. So, we felt we had to make the bank viable. This is as a result of conversations and very serious work over the following week. It became clear that there were problem loans—when I say problem loans, I include some that are non-performing at all and some that are partially performing—of about $544 million, with a face value of, if you took all these things into account, $289 million, leaving a gap of $255 million. That is how the number was arrived at for the support package. There was no point in going in and giving half an estimate. It was a case of turning the bank into a viable functioning operation with as clean a balance sheet as we could give it in terms of its assets and liabilities.

Senator Frith: What is the nature of the loan portfolio?

Mrs. McDougall: Some of that can be found in the annual report. On page 10 of the CCB's annual report of October 31, 1984 it shows that their loans were: commercial mortgages, 5.8 per cent; sovereign risk loans, 0.4 per cent; commercial and industrial loans, 27.6 per cent; energy, 8.0 per cent; real estate 11.6 per cent; construction, 10.5 per cent; others 1.8 per cent.

Senator Frith: Thank you. Are you satisfied that the government officials, particularly the departmental officials who are paid not to let this kind of thing happen, had their eye on the ball? Is there anything that they could have done earlier to prevent this situation from developing?

• (1640)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I believe that my officials and the Inspector General of Banks acted properly; that they monitored the situation carefully; and that they understand the banking business extraordinarily well. I am quite prepared to express my confidence in them. I take their advice on issues such as this.

A former mayor of Toronto, Allan Lamport, once said, when asked about one of his officials, "You don't hire a watchdog and then do your own barking." I am quite satisfied with the behaviour of my officials.

Senator Frith: You understand that I was not inviting you to criticize your advisors or indicate that you did not have confidence in them. Although there is nothing we can do about it, we should know what took place in this case and, to continue the metaphor, we should know that they not only had their eye on the ball, but hit it just as soon as they were able to.

Mrs. McDougall: I believe that the actions taken were appropriate. There is never any guarantee of that. I do not like to use the word "confidence" in this context, but we have taken action that we think has ensured some confidence in the system.

We have been through an economic situation which is unprecedented in this country. We have seen balance sheets in the corporate sector deteriorate rapidly. The financial institutions have accommodated that extraordinarily well. The officials have been aware of the problems that the private sector has been seized with and have acted appropriately.

From my experience in the private sector and the public sector, I do not think that this situation was foreseeable to the extent that it would become a serious matter, or that other action could have been taken.

Senator Frith: To switch the metaphor—and I take this from a comment made by my colleague, the Honourable Senator MacEachen—you do not hire a watchdog and do your own barking, but in this case the watchdog you hired did bark soon enough.

Mrs. McDougall: Yes.

Senator Frith: I now come to my next heading, which covers the action which was taken. We have the Memorandum of Intent in front of us. You covered the options available with Senator MacEachen.

Have there been any bank rescues in the past? I do not necessarily mean rescues in which the government was involved, but previous—I apologize; I am getting ahead of myself. There is one question I wanted to get on the record under the previous heading.

We talked about the bank's customers. What was the make-up of its creditors as amongst bondholders, shareholders and depositors?

Mrs. McDougall: The bondholders held approximately $49 million. They were subordinated debentures. The preferred shares had a book value at the end of the fiscal year of $30 million; the common shares had a book value of $49 million, plus contributive surplus and retained earnings of approximately $26 million.

Senator Frith: The debentures were subordinated to the preferred stock?

Mrs. McDougall: No, subordinated to the depositors.

Senator Frith: As far as CDIC coverage is concerned, am I correct that there was approximately $2.8 billion, of which $400 million, was covered, leaving $2.4 billion not covered. Why was that? Is that because that is the exact statutory percentage?

Mrs. McDougall: No. The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation covers individual depositors to the extent of $60,000. There was a large proportion not covered because this was a wholesale bank, a business bank.

Senator Frith: It was a matter of qualification, not percentage. The depositors who qualified constituted a small portion; in other words, there was a group of depositors, large depositors, who were not individual depositors covered by the CDIC?

Mrs. McDougall: When I say "individual" I mean individual accounts. So, if one has $500,000 in a bank, one is covered to the extent of $60,000 with the remaining $440,000 being uninsured.

Senator Frith: Can the Inspector General of Banks advise you whether some rumours I have heard from friends in the banking industry are true, that part of the problem was that the bank was buying expensive money and loaning it out to risky accounts? Was that bank, as they say in banking terms, buying expensive money in order to get its capital and then risking it?

Mrs. McDougall: This bank is in the middle market. It paid more for money than did the six big chartered banks. It is like any other credit rating system; you have to pay up a bit if you do not have a good reputation. This bank had a good reputation, but was not one of the big banks.

Senator Frith: I suppose that gets us into the question of quantity discounts, too.

Mrs. McDougall: It would have to pay up a bit, and on the other side, after paying up for deposits, it had to charge more. That is the demand and supply of pricing.

Senator Frith: I now come to my next heading. Were there any previous bank rescues?

Mrs. McDougall: The only one with which I am familiar in terms of using the word "rescue" is the disappearance of the Unity Bank into the Provincial Bank. That was a very small bank that was established to serve multicultural businesses, and so forth. That was merged with the Provincial Bank.

Last fall the Bank of British Columbia faced some difficulties but was able to resolve them. They came to us with a restructuring plan and new management. We made some concessions to that bank. That was not a rescue, but you should probably be aware that that bank came to us and told us what they were going to do to resolve their difficulties.

Senator Frith: The impression is given that normally banks close ranks in cases of this kind and do not require financial participation by the government. This is the first time that has happened, is that not correct?

Mrs. McDougall: This is the first one, to my knowledge. We are dealing with what I believe to be a unique situation in that this bank was stabilizing itself as well as it could, given the problems in western Canada, but was tipped over the edge by something that happened in California.

The financial industry, as you are aware, is very jittery right now. The banks in Ohio have triggered some nervousness about the U.S. dollar, and the rumour of problems in the Texas banks has had an impact on the U.S. dollar as well. That was simply a rumour. Therefore, there is a jitteriness in the system that I do not think has been seen in your lifetime or mine. I think it was important to tell the people of Canada that the government was prepared to put its faith in this institution. I think it was important that the banks be there because that is the litmus test—when the private sector thinks that this is a good thing. I believe that the Province of Alberta wanted to indicate its public support and participation as well. Under all those circumstances and given all those players, it was appropriate that this bank survive as a viable operation on its own. These things are always a matter of judgment.

• (1650)

Senator Frith: Quite. So there was a considerable psychological dimension?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes.

Senator Frith: Senator MacEachen talked to you about the warrants, and I want you to explain something that you explained in the other place but which I would like to put on the record here, namely, what appears to be an advantage under section 26 for the banks in that they are themselves the definers of their bad debts. In fact, the Memorandum of Intent uses the word "doubtful" and of that they become the judge. Any of us who have had to argue with income tax officials as to whether a debt was a bad debt or not, and had to accept more or less either their or the Tax Appeal Board's or the Federal Court's interpretation would consider it unusual to allow the taxpayer to decide when a debt is bad or doubtful for write-off purposes. Would you explain that to us? Was it just something to sweeten the deal?

Mrs. McDougall: No, it was not. Essentially, what the banks were purchasing was a package of problem loans. Under section 26 of the Bank Act allowance is made to write off problem loans before taxes and to make some allowance on the book or some provision for non-performing loans. This is not done totally at the bank's discretion. The bank and its auditors work out what appears to be a realistic assessment of the extent of the problem within the problem loan. It is then subject to the approval of the Inspector General of Banks. Therefore, this is in the act already, and it is in the Memorandum of Intent simply to make clear that what is being purchased is a portfolio of bad loans and not something else.

It is also worth putting on the record that had the Canadian Commercial Bank been viable and had not had this package but still had these bad loans, they would have had the right also, under this section, to make use of that provision before calculating their taxes.

Senator Frith: You have taken into account the words that Canada assures the banks that such deductions for purposes of section 26 of the Income Tax Act will be deemed to be within the reasonable requirements of the bank? You say there is still room for some judgment by the Inspector General of Banks?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes. It is simply to indicate that when the bank buys this portfolio it will be clear that that is what they are buying, and that the income tax people are not going to say to them that this is not a package of bad loans but a debenture. This makes it very clear what they are buying and the Inspector General will be involved in this assessment in the normal way.

Senator Frith: The third point I want to raise is as to how the players come out. You talked about the depositors. We have discussed the shareholders and a dilution of 75 per cent of share value for them. But they are, if I can use the expression, to some extent crap shooters here because they have taken the risk and they are losing in this case. They may get back in the game if things turn out rosy and they can pick up their 75 per cent and still make something on it.

Am I right that the debenture holders refused to modify their position? Is that what the other $13 million beyond the $60 million is for, making up the $73 million?

Mrs. McDougall: There was a real process problem around the debenture holders. As you are aware, these negotiations were going on all weekend and each of the debenture holders has a separate contract—this is not a question of a single issue; I have forgotten how many there were, about 11 or 12—which meant that every debenture holder had to be contacted and would have to get some decision out of his board before Monday morning at 9 o'clock. The process of dealing with this became very difficult. There were one or two who were reluctant, and given the process problems, it was not possible to get an agreement with the debenture holders. Most of them indicated a willingness to participate and to help out in any way they could, but the logistics became impossible.

Senator Frith: You have already told us that the bank group are not in any way ahead of the taxpayers. They are not in any way ahead of Canada, as they are described in the Agreement. They are partners in the risk. Is that correct?

Mrs. McDougall: That is correct.

Senator Frith: Have I covered all the players then except the taxpayers? Have I covered all the players that are concerned—the depositors, the shareholders, the debenture holders, the bank group, the bank itself, and I think you covered the position with regard to the taxpayers—that they are at risk for the amount that is being put in?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes.

Senator Frith: They are writing off the interest unless their rights under the warrants put them in a position that, at least, either indemnifies them partly against that or brings them even or might even make them some money. Is that a fair summary?

Mrs. McDougall: I think that that is correct. You will notice that the payments to the participants in the support package begin as soon as the bank is registering a profit—50 per cent of the earnings will come back. Hopefully, there will be some early evidence that the return, however modest, is under way.

Senator Frith: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Turner: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a few questions, and she can send me the answers. I was born and raised in the city of Toronto and I remember as a young boy my mother and father always instructed me never to make an investment unless you consulted your priest, your minister, your bank manager, your lawyer and your doctor. That was the community spirit in the years 1901 and 1902. My dad came from Ireland with $50 in his pocket and he worked hard and eventually met my mother. My mother was an orphan. Her mother died the day she was born. Her father died 10 days after in a flu epidemic. Naturally, my mother had a guardian who lived in the city of Whitby, just east of Toronto. Her guardian told her to call him if she ever made an investment. When she inherited her mother and father's estate, she called the guardian and also went to her conservative lawyer and he said that he thought the investment was so good in the Home bank that he put $25,000 himself into it. As you know, the bank at Oakwood and St. Clair went broke and my dad lost his savings; my mother lost her estate.

I was just in a buggy at the time and my mother wheeled me from Dovercourt and Bloor to Oakwood and St. Clair and we arrived a half hour after the bank closed. So this is my experience with a company going broke.

● (1700)

As a former employee of CN, I have a lot of money invested in CN pension funds. On behalf of all the employees of Air Canada and CN, who have money invested in those pension funds, I should like to ask you a few questions.

1. Are the funds of Air Canada and Canadian National pension funds completely protected in this newly-arranged Government of Canada and Canadian Commercial Bank deal? If not, why not?

2. How many dollars from the Air Canada pension fund were originally involved in the deal of capital funding for the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Mrs. McDougall: Do you want the amount from Air Canada?

Senator Turner: Yes, Air Canada.

3. How many dollars from the Canadian National pension fund were originally involved in the deal of capital funding for the Canadian Commercial Bank?

4. If this newly-arranged Government of Canada and Canadian Commercial Bank deal does not work out, will the employees and management members of Air Canada and Canadian National pension funds be advised of the total amount of the dollars lost in this deal?

5. Were the employees and management members of Air Canada and Canadian National pension funds advised of the type and the amounts of investment that were being made on their behalf in the Canadian Commercial Bank of western Canada?

6. What was the name or names of the management officials who authorized the Air Canada and the Canadian National pension funds, to make the Canadian Commercial Bank investment, and on what date was the investment made?

7. Are there any other employees' pension funds involved in the financing of the Canadian Commercial Bank?

8. Could the pension funds be identified?

9. On what date were all these pension funds invested in the Canadian Commercial Bank?

My final question is:

10. Each week, in the financial papers and newspapers of Canada, there is a list of banks, trust companies and insurance companies and the rate of interest that they are paying that particular week on the investments that people can make. There is always a bank listed called "Canadian Commercial Bank" which paid one-half of 1 per cent more interest to its investors. Is this the same bank? Is this one of the reasons it has run into financial problems?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I can answer all of the honourable senator's questions. I was interested in the fact that his family came from Whitby because my family home is in Brooklin, close to Whitby, and that diverted my attention and caused me to miss the first two questions. I can understand the honourable senator's concern regarding pension funds.

I have before me the number of shares. The Air Canada pension fund owned 448,000 shares as of February 28, 1985; and CN owned 413,000 shares as of that date. I would have no way of knowing what they paid for that stock or when they bought it. I do not know the book value of the investment.

I would like to assure the honourable senator that these are very large pension funds in terms of their total assets, of which this would form a very small portion.

Pension funds have to meet the requirements of the Pension Benefits Standards Act and of the pension investment legislation which requires certain tests of assets on a portfolio basis in terms of earnings, coverage, dividends, payout, and a number of other things. On balance, you will find a very good quality portfolio in all of these pension funds. There is quite a long list of these pension funds.

Senator Turner: If the minister were to undertake to send me a letter in response to my questions, I would be satisfied with that. It would also save time.

Mrs. McDougall: I just want to assure the honourable senator that the pension fund is safe because there is a combined benefit plan.

Senator Frith: I have heard that the minister is prepared to provide ongoing information to members in the other place regarding this matter even after the bill is passed; is that correct?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, it is. I was very anxious to have a full discussion of this matter in Parliament. Obviously, we want people to know that this does not happen every day and why it happened.

Senator Frith: Obviously, people want to know that such things as pension funds are safe.

Mrs. McDougall: Yes. However, in the interests of time and so on, it was agreed that, following passage of the bill, the inquiry would take place before the Finance Committee of the other place.

Senator Frith: If the Senate decided it would also like some further information, would the minister be prepared to co-operate with the Senate and its committee and provide it with that further information?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, I have always co-operated with Senate committees.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it would be ungallant of me to make any comment.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1, the short title, carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

---

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-37, respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

29 March 1985

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald E. Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 29th day of March, 1985, at 5.20 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be

Sir,

Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate

Ottawa

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Gerald E. Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Acting Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that Her Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under her Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Gerald E. Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, her Deputy, to do in Her Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during Her Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk Assistant of the Senate.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (Bill C-23, Chapter 8)

An Act respecting the provision of financial assistance to the Canadian Commercial Bank (Bill C-37, Chapter 9)

The Honourable Marcel Danis, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1985 (Bill C-34, Chapter 10)

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1986 (Bill C-35, Chapter 11)

To which bills I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the said bills.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 2, 1985, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 2, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-38, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ROYAL ASSENT

ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. A few weeks ago I asked him a question regarding Royal Assent. Honourable senators will recall the suggestions put forward two years ago by Senator Frith when he delivered a long and learned speech. I am wondering if anything has been done about it. I notice, in the second report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, the following recommendation:

Your Committee recommends that the declaration of Royal Assent by written message be adopted in Canada and that the Government embark on the necessary discussions to achieve this change. Notwithstanding this recommendation, provision should be made for the use of the present practice should that be the pleasure of Her Excellency on the advice of Her Ministers.

My question to the Leader of the Government is simply this: Is he now prepared to push this thing?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have been given very strong impetus in that direction by my colleague, Senator Flynn, who has a proprietary interest in this matter so far as the Senate is concerned. I should think that when the House of Commons has completed its study and tendered its advice as to changing the various rules, it might be advisable to take the whole of those recommendations under advisement to see which of them might be suitable for adoption by the Senate. The one to which my honourable friend has referred is certainly one that should be near the top of the agenda.

RULES OF THE SENATE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should also like to ask a question of the chairman of the Standing Rules and Orders Committee. It is apropos the comment made by Senator Roblin about taking the whole of those recommendations under advisement. Last Thursday, when I spoke in the chamber, Senator Flynn replied to my speech and there were several things he said that I did not quite agree with and I wanted to make a two- or three-sentence comment but Senator Flynn pointed out that I could not speak a second time, although somebody was helpful enough to say that I could ask a question. In other words, I could give a speech if I pretended that I was asking a question. I was just not smart enough to respond to that suggestion at that particular moment.

In the report of the House of Commons committee chaired by the now Senator Lefebvre they made a recommendation that has been adopted by a change in their rules. I would like to read the section of the report that I think is relevant, and then I will ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, who has the power to initiate consideration by this committee of changes in the rules. This report was tabled on November 5, 1982, which is two years and five months ago, and if he is going to keep up with my record on adoption of two of my motions something has to be done within two years and nine months. It states:

Your Committee proposes that these speeches be limited to 20 minutes, but that an additional 10 minutes following each speech should be made available, if required, for questions or comments to the member who has just spoken. Your committee proposes that the amendments to the appropriate standing orders be as simple as possible, but that the new debating process be controlled by the Chair in accordance with the following guidelines.

Then the guidelines are set out. The actual rule they adopted states:

Following the speech of each Member a period not exceeding ten minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses thereto.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Question!

Senator Godfrey: I will now get to my question to Senator Molgat. Has your committee considered this rule—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on a point of order, just so that anyone reading Debates of the Senate will understand what just took place, what we have just heard I think can be called “brief explanatory remarks” under rule 20(4).

Senator Godfrey: My comments in asking this question are just as brief as the comments of other honourable senators on this side of the house when they ask questions.

Senator Frith: I am trying to be on your side.

Senator Godfrey: Good.

My question to Senator Molgat is: Has your committee considered amending our rules to permit this; and, if not, would you bring it up with your committee so that one does not have to go through the process of asking some kind of phony question in order to make a comment on a speech of another senator?

Senator Flynn: Wishful thinking!

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, in response to Senator Godfrey, to my knowledge the committee has not looked at that specific item. However, it could have done so prior to my becoming its chairman, which was only a few months ago. Certainly, we will be prepared to have a look at it. As Senator Godfrey indicates, this committee can initiate studies of its own. I think in the past it has normally waited for suggestions to come from the Senate. At times members of the committee have come forward and we have investigated things, but not that particular one so far. I certainly would be pleased to discuss it with members of the committee.

Senator Godfrey: I have another question for Senator Molgat. Referring to the same report and to one of the recommendations—and this is in connection with the old standing order 43 which existed in the House of Commons—it states:

Your Committee is of the opinion that Standing Order 43 is being misused, and that a substitute mechanism is required which would enable Members to raise matters of concern on a daily basis.

Later it stated:

Your Committee believes that a new Standing Order is required which would enable Members to make statements on current issues on a daily basis during the first 15 minutes of the sitting in a manner which would remove the objections arising from the present practice.

Under the new recommended procedure the 15 minutes preceding the question period would be reserved for Members other than Ministers to raise matters of concern for the purpose of placing them on record.

● (1410)

My question to Senator Molgat is: Has his committee considered introducing a similar rule for the Senate; and, if they have not, would they consider it? Perhaps in this way we would eliminate some of the speeches made under the guise of asking questions during Question Period.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, my reply to this question is the same as my reply to the previous question. I might point out that techniques or mechanisms in the Senate are very different. We have the inquiries system which is instantaneous and which is a mechanism the House of Commons has never had. However, we can certainly look into the matter.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a third question. It refers to the same report which, I remind you, is two years and five months old. On page 7:21, under the heading “Automatic Referral of Annual Reports,” it reads:

Your committee recommends that the powers of committees to initiate enquiries be granted through automatic referral of annual reports by departments,—

I know that last year the committee brought in a recommendation with regard to committees on their own initiative examining witnesses, which I blocked because I thought it was ineffectual and did not go far enough. I do not think anything has happened since then. Might I ask Senator Molgat whether or not his committee would consider the question of putting in place some device by which committees can initiate inquiries on their own initiative without having to get the approval of this chamber or, as is so often the case, the powers-that-be in this chamber?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I am sure that the committee will be reading Senator Godfrey’s questions. Undoubtedly, it will have a look at this question as well. Certainly, one thing we should do is invite Senator Godfrey to become a member of the committee, if there is a space available.

Some Hon. Senators: No!

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, of course, I would be delighted to attend any of the meetings of the committee when these matters are considered. I do not have to be a member to do that.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL—POLICY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is a question I intended to ask last week, but I did not find the time to do so. My question arises from the debate in the other place following the tabling of the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages in the House of Commons. I have also read parts of the report. However, on that particular day a question was asked of the Prime Minister by the honourable member for Ottawa-Vanier. I was proud of the answer the Prime Minister gave to the question. He stated that he had heard about the report and that he was anxious, when possible, to do what had to be done to rectify the situation. Then, a few minutes later, a member from my province of New Brunswick asked a question of the Solicitor General, after which I became puzzled. I am asking the Leader of the Government, as a member of cabinet, to verify the answer given by the Solicitor General.

My question relates to a decision taken by the previous Solicitor General to construct a prison in the federal riding of Northumberland-Miramichi, in the province of New Brunswick.

As I understand it, one of the rules for employment would be that 50 per cent of the employees could be unilingual English and the other 50 per cent would be bilingual, which means, naturally, in New Brunswick—and especially in that area—it would cover most French-speaking people, and a fair number of English-speaking people who have made an effort to become bilingual.

The answer given to the member from New Brunswick by the Solicitor General was that that rule had been changed and the proportion will now be 70 per cent unilingual English and 30 per cent bilingual.

One must take into consideration the fact that the institution is being constructed in the Miramichi riding of New Brunswick, the population of which consists of about 30 per cent French-speaking and 70 per cent English-speaking Canadians, and that the personnel would be hired from the neighbouring counties of Gloucester and Kent, which have an almost entirely French-speaking population.

Honourable senators, in view of an article in the Globe and Mail of March 22, which referred to the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages and which stated that French outside Quebec faces extinction, would the Leader of the Government remind the Solicitor General of the answer given in the other place by the Prime Minister regarding the whole question of bilingualism?

Senator Guay: And also Dan McKenzie.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my friend poses a problem for me because we do not, as a rule, refer to the proceedings in the other place in so direct a manner, so perhaps I may be allowed to skip over that part of his question.

However, the substance of the matter is: Who is setting the policy of the government with respect to the use of the French language in this country? There is no question that it is the Prime Minister who does so. I know he has given specific instructions that certain deficiencies exposed by this report must be remedied insofar as they fall within the federal sphere of jurisdiction. I hope that will be of some comfort to my honourable friend.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I did not quote text from the other house; I tried to paraphrase.

My more direct question is: In this particular case, will the Leader of the Government inquire of the Prime Minister and the cabinet if it is the Prime Minister's will that will prevail over that of the Solicitor General?

Senator Roblin: I believe I did answer the question directly. It is quite clear that the Prime Minister is the man who sets the policy of the government along with his colleagues, but when he makes a positive statement on the matter, I accept that as policy.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT POLICY—POSSIBLE CHANGES

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerns the report that appeared recently concerning immigration policy and immigration targets in this country.

It appears that some Conservative members of the other house would like us to make immigration policy subservient to economic policy and, in fact, there have been statements made to the effect that immigrants are not welcome in Canada unless they "create jobs and economic growth."

Is it also the view of the Leader of the Government in this house that the numbers of entrepreneurial immigrants should be increased at the expense of family reunification, refugees and other classes of immigrants to Canada?

● (1420)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think my honourable friend is referring to the report of a committee of the other place concerning this matter. I am afraid I must allow that committee the privilege of making any kind of report it wishes. That does not, however, mean that what it says constitutes policy.

Senator Marsden: I must say, I am very glad to hear that. I am wondering, also, whether the government has plans to call for a proper study.

The report of the committee of the other place indicates that there is very little understanding of the dynamics, economic or otherwise, of immigration—which is something, as I am sure you will agree, that has been crucial to the growth and development of this country.

I see that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has had to admit that there was no government study on the impact of the changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, changes which have resulted in people having to use up their severance pay before being eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. She was forced to make that admission after she made the changes in the regulations.

I am wondering whether you can assure us here that a study will be made of the impact of any changes in the immigration policy before changes are made in the policy itself.

Senator Roblin: If policy changes are made, then my honourable friend's question becomes pertinent. Since no changes have been made, it is not pertinent.

I think we must recognize that there has been a movement over the last few years to encourage committees of Parliament, whether of this chamber or the other, to be more active and energetic in examining various fields of public concern, and that is what is happening. The fact that my honourable friend may not like the answer arrived at by the committee really does not impugn the process.

Senator Marsden: I do not agree with the answer, but what concerns me is the fact that those recommendations appear to be based on opinion rather than on the many studies that have already been made in this country over generations in terms of what the real impacts of immigration are. In fact, there are studies available in the Library of Parliament to that effect.

My question is not as to whether a study will be made if the policy is changed; it is, rather, whether the government will ask the committee to look at the empirical basis for any recommendations it may make before the proposed changes in policy are made.

Senator Roblin: As the descendant of an immigrant myself, I naturally have some interest in this matter, but my honourable friend really cannot expect me to instruct or advise, or otherwise comment, on the procedure considered to be proper for and adopted by a committee of the other place. That is their business. My honourable friend may not like it, but it is their business.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate with regard to the very serious situation of the sugar beet industry in Manitoba.

I know my honourable friend is familiar with the industry. The situation right now is indeed very grave. Apparently, the costs of sugar production in Manitoba total something of the order of 18 cents a pound, with the world price for sugar being at about 4 cents a pound.

The sugar beet industry, as my honourable friend knows, is very important to Manitoba. There are some 27,000 acres seeded to sugar beet, producing close to $32 million in sugar beet products alone, plus all of the spin-offs. There is a sugar plant employing some 100 people.

Unless there is a favourable decision made by government very shortly, all of that is apt to be closed in the coming year.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us what the government is proposing to do and how soon it will announce any action it proposes to take? We are now reaching a critical time in the process.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The matter has been the subject of special concern by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, a fellow Manitoban and one who understands the importance of the subject as outlined by my honourable friend and as I understand it.

It is a very difficult problem. If sugar costs 18 cents a pound to produce and it can be imported for 4 cents a pound, one can understand the difficulties that arise, notwithstanding its importance in the overall economy of Manitoba. The minister to whom I have referred has had intensive conversations with the industry, particularly those who run the sugar plants, to see whether there is any way out of this very difficult situation.

I cannot tell my honourable friend that a decision has yet been reached. I can tell him that my colleague is straining every nerve to find good answers.

Senator Molgat: Perhaps the minister could indicate when an answer might come forward. As he knows, seeding will begin very soon in Manitoba and the farmers must make a decision almost within a matter of days as to what direction they will take.

Senator Roblin: That is the reason my colleague is so concerned about the matter.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION ON OVERSEAS DELEGATIONS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Honourable Joseph Clark, on his current tour of the Soviet Union, is accompanied only by a large contingent of Conservative Members of Parliament. It is my information that members of the parliamentary opposition parties were not invited to join the minister's tour.

My question to the Leader of the Government is: Is it the government's intention to project to the Soviets the impression that Canada's system of government is a one-party system?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I will say that no one in the Soviet Union could be under the slightest misapprehension as to whether or not Canada is a one-party state. All that is necessary is the most cursory examination of what takes place in this and the other chamber for anyone to understand that that is not the case.

Senator Grafstein: I have a supplementary question. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate not agree that this is a dramatic change in reducing the centrality of Parliament and its position on parliamentary delegations? I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would recommend to the government that such a practice be discontinued in the future.

Senator Roblin: I think I can leave the decision with respect to these matters to my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He takes the view that this is not a parliamentary delegation, but a government delegation.

Senator Grafstein: I have a further supplementary question. This is the second time—

Senator Flynn: Why don't you say "final"?

Senator Grafstein: This is the second time in the last month that the government has organized a visit to the Soviet Union in some form. First of all, the Prime Minister went by himself without any parliamentary representation in attendance, unlike the practice adopted by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom who was accompanied by the leaders of the other parties in parliament.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not this is a new pattern that the government is attempting to introduce in foreign affairs.

Senator Roblin: To the best of my recollection—and if I am wrong, I am sure there is someone here who can put me right—when the most recent death occurred in the leadership of the Soviet Union, I do not think the Leader of the Opposition was in attendance. I think it was the Prime Minister of Canada and, in my opinion, that was the way it ought to have been.

SHOOTING DOWN OF SOUTH KOREAN AIRCRAFT—SOVIET COMPENSATION FOR NEXT-OF-KIN OF CANADIAN VICTIMS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I also wish to ask a question respecting the visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Soviet Union. I recall to mind the incident of the shooting down of the Korean airliner in 1983, in which innocent lives were lost including Canadian lives, as a result of action taken by the Soviet Union, unprovoked action, in my estimation. The shock and disbelief at that time were evident throughout the world, including in Canada, and since that time the Canadian government has been pressing the Soviet Union to compensate the families of the innocent Canadian victims. I believe that effort should be continued and I hope it will be advanced during the visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday, in reply to a question, the Prime Minister said that the matter would be raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with the Soviet authorities in Moscow. However, the Prime Minister added that he was satisfied that the Soviet Union, in these circumstances, should begin the process of response favourably. I am not sure whether that was an expectation of the Prime Minister or whether the government has some information that the Soviet Union may have softened its attitude towards this question of compensation for the families of innocent Canadian victims. I would ask the Leader of the Government whether there is any information which he can share with us to the effect that the Soviet Union may, indeed, be now more receptive to the Canadian position than it had been hitherto.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think that the deep wounds that were caused by this incident are beginning to heal. I say that because I notice that the Soviet Union has now sent a team of athletes to South Korea, which was the major nation involved in this matter. I take that to be a gesture of reconciliation in respect to the matter, and I hope that that turns out to be the case.

However, my honourable friend did not ask me about that matter. He asked me whether or not the Canadian government had any indication that their request for compensation would be dealt with in a constructive way by the Soviet Union. I must take the question as notice.

● (1430)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I note that the Leader of the Government has mentioned that a certain healing process has set in since then, and no doubt certain healing has taken place. Canada, as we know, suspended certain flights; it suspended its negotiations with the Soviet Union for the use of Gander as a refuelling base, and other matters at that time. Since then, however, we have been taking some steps towards improving relations between the two countries. I relate that comment by the Leader of the Government to a statement made in the Soviet Union by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he said that they, the new Soviet leadership, may be looking for signals to send about bringing about better relations between Canada and the Soviet Union.

I wonder whether the minister will be making the point to the Soviet government that there could be no better signal sent to Canada than the Soviet Union wants to maintain good relations than to acknowledge and accept its responsibility to compensate the families of these innocent victims. That would be an excellent signal to send to Canada at this time. I wonder if the minister is making that point, because I think it is one that would be supported not only in this chamber but in the other place and by the people of Canada generally. I wonder if the minister will indeed be making the point in Moscow.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend raises a very good point and I am sure the minister will be reporting on this and other initiatives when he returns.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS— SENATE REPRESENTATION

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I should like to see if I can get back to a point of privilege after the Question Period, if the Senate will permit it.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If the question is addressed to me, although I am not the arbiter of the rules, my impression is that a point of privilege has to be raised immediately it becomes obvious, at the earliest opportunity. If my friend has a point of privilege, I suggest that he raise it at the earliest opportunity.

Senator Flynn: Right away.

Senator Adams: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government referred to this matter last Friday, March 29. Last week Senator Marchand asked if there could be seats for three senators at the Constitutional Conference of First Ministers on Aboriginal Rights which started this morning. Last Friday the Leader of the Government said that Senator Marchand and Senator Watt would be attending the conference this morning. However, Senator Watt was unable to get to Ottawa in time. He informed the Prime Minister's office that he could not make it in time and said that I could, in his name, attend the conference of first ministers this morning. I spoke to his secretary this morning and asked his office to contact the office of the Honourable David Crombie to say that Senator Watt could not get back to Ottawa in time and perhaps I could attend in his place. In the meantime, my secretary communicated with the minister's office. There are only four seats for the Liberals, two from the other place and two for senators. That seems to be the rule of the new government. I was wondering what answer the Leader of the Government could give on this.

Senator Roblin: I had a little difficulty following my honourable friend's point. Is it that he was refused a seat at the conference today in place of Senator Charlie Watt?

Senator Adams: Yes.

Senator Roblin: This needs to be verified, but I believe the procedure was that the Liberal Party in Parliament was allocated four seats, and it is really up to them to say who their four representatives should be.

So, if there is to be a change in the seating arising from the fact that somebody already designated will not attend, the first person to apply to would be the head of the Liberal delegation. It seems to be perfectly reasonable that if the Honourable Senator Watt cannot attend, the Honourable Senator Adams should attend.

Senator Adams: The minister's office has said that only four seats are available to the Liberal Party. During my telephone conversation with the minister's office, I told them that Senator Watt would not attend, but I have not received his observer's pass.

Senator Roblin: I advise my honourable friend to talk to the head of the Liberal delegation right away.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—AVAILABILITY OF BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Recently he wrote to all honourable senators to tell them that if they wanted copies of the background material to the recent Economic Summit he would make it available. I want to commend him on that action because that meant those of us interested in the material could receive it, yet it would not be a waste of the taxpayer's money by sending it to those who were not interested in having it.

I wonder if he would do the same for the recent summit that took place in Quebec City, known to some as the "Shamrock Summit". I was fortunate in that I was loaned one copy of that documentation, which I found most attractive. It contains interesting booklets, such as "La Délégation Canadienne", "La Richesse de notre Héritage Historique," and in particular, a glowing document entitled "The Right Honourable Brian Mulroney." That is a lovely piece of material.

So, I wonder if the leader would also make available to those honourable senators who want it the background documentation which was produced for the summit held in Quebec City.

[Senator Adams.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Any information available in respect of that matter will, of course, be made available to those honourable senators interested in receiving it. They simply have to let my office know and they will receive it.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill C-38, to amend the Customs Tariff.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Nurgitz: —to move the second reading of Bill C-38. This bill has important implications for the importation of what most Canadians consider to be obscene material and hate propaganda.

Honourable senators, there is an increasing fear that, as a result of a recent court decision, there could be a substantial flow of this kind of despicable material into the country, particularly material that depicts or describes what most Canadians consider to be degrading and dehumanizing. Canadians find particularly repugnant the growth in distribution of this kind of material involving children. This bill responds directly to the heightened awareness of all Canadians regarding this insidious child pornography.

In addition, honourable senators, the bill deals with the concern that the country could be flooded with material that most of us regard as being spiteful propaganda.

● (1440)

The Customs and Excise Branch of the Department of National Revenue has the administrative responsibility to ensure that such material does not enter this country. The legislative provision which enables National Revenue to carry out that duty is the tariff item referred to as 99201-1 of the Customs Tariff Act. As most honourable senators will be aware, on March 14, 1985, a Federal Court of Canada case known as Tom Luscher v. the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise was decided by the Federal Court of Appeal. That particular tariff item was considered by the court to be:

... not a reasonable limitation upon the freedoms guaranteed by section 2(B) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms

And accordingly the item was declared to be of no force or effect.

The government, of course, respects that ruling. No further appeal is being made. Nevertheless the ruling has created an appalling situation whereby the powers of the federal government to protect the interests and wishes of Canadians concerning the importation of obscene and hate material have been seriously curtailed.

At the urging of many interested groups, not the least of which are the opposition parties in the House of Commons, the government has decided to move swiftly and to bring in Bill C-38. As honourable senators will see, Bill C-38 would become effective from whatever day it receives Royal Assent but would automatically expire on June 30, 1986. So that provides a period of approximately 15 months in which the government will have to bring in more detailed legislation. This is indeed a stop-gap, a band aid, to stop the potential flow of this kind of material.

It is my understanding that, as a preliminary step, the Minister of National Revenue has instructed customs officials at Canadian points of entry to report to local police any shipments of a commercial nature which are suspected of contravening the Criminal Code. Let me be clear. The courts have not changed the laws relating to what is obscene or what is considered to be hate literature under the two particular sections of the Criminal Code. They deal only with the customs aspect and the question of importation. So, for example, those people who bring in such material could still be charged under the Criminal Code.

As I have already mentioned, the bill will expire on June 30, 1986. Its purpose is to head off any attempt, particularly by commercial interests, to flood the Canadian market with books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs, movie films, video tapes, audiotapes, and representation of any kind which depict or describe sexual and other activities in a manner that is violent, degrading and dehumanizing.

The bill would amend tariff item 99201-1 to meet the objections of the Federal Court of Appeal, by providing more specific and precise definitions of what the terms "obscene material" or "hate propaganda" would mean for the purpose of this item.

The part struck down by the Federal Court was the wording in the old tariff item, which bears the same number, which merely referred to:

books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs, or representations of any kind of a treasonable or seditious or of an immoral or indecent character.

That was the wording used, and I am highlighting for honourable senators the words "of an immoral or indecent character". The court held that it was vague, ambiguous, uncertain, and subject to discriminatory determination and an "unreasonable limit".

The proposed amendment in Bill C-38 says that if the particular item could be considered to be obscene under subsection 159(8) of the Criminal Code, or could be considered hate propaganda within the meaning of subsection 281.3 of the Criminal Code, then they are specific definitions.

Senator Flynn: Have you read them?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, I have—once.

Senator Flynn: I merely want to understand clearly what you are saying.

Senator Nurgitz: I thank the honourable senator for his question. I could have done without it. It's not my enemies I was worried about.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): At least there is some jurisprudence on those sections.

Senator Nurgitz: I might say with regard to obscene material, that there is a great deal of contradictory jurisprudence. In fact, much is made in the judgment on the Luscher case, of the differing opinions concerning the definition of "obscene material."

Honourable senators, we are confident, as a result of the legal opinion of the Department of Justice, that these amendments will have the desired result. I might indicate that with the co-operation of all parties in the other place, Bill C-38 received second and third reading today. I believe it was introduced yesterday. The bill would, I am sure, in the short run, deal effectively with the growing concern of our law enforcement agencies and other people in this country.

The government proposes to bring forward legislation which will define more precisely the types of material which are offensive to our society and which will give federal and provincial governments the necessary enforcement mechanism to deal with them. This legislation will follow some consultation which will take place between federal and provincial governments, particularly having regard to the Badgley report of last August, which deals with child abuse, and with the Fraser report, which I understand is near completion, if it is not yet completed, and which will be tabled within the next few months.

I urge all honourable senators to support this legislation. I urge its speedy passage and, since the bill contains only two clauses, I trust that it will not require committee examination. However, I cannot say. In any event, I urge support of this bill.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not intend to make a speech or to participate in the debate. However, I should like to ask the honourable senator a question. I understand that the bill has gone through all stages very rapidly in the other place and that it is hoped that the Senate will deal with it so that Royal Assent can be given tomorrow. That seems to me to be rather rapid passage, to say the least. I am not objecting, but I would like to know why the bill has to be passed so rapidly. I understand that the court's decision came down a month and a half ago, and Canada did not fall apart within that period. Why would we expect it to collapse or fall under the weight of imported material in the few days while we are away for Easter? I simply want to know why there is this urgency.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, in reply to the Leader of the Opposition, last year over 4,000 shipments of this kind—when I say "this kind," I am not sure whether it was material of the sexually explicit or the hate variety—were stopped at the border and refused entry under that customs tariff. That is 4,000 shipments for the year ended March 31. The Federal Court's judgment is now about two weeks old, and given that we might have to wait another month or two, during that time several thousand shipments of this kind of material could enter Canada. I do not know the quantity involved in each shipment that is stopped. But, as I say, my information is that 4,000 shipments were stopped in a week.

● (1450)

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the honourable senator. Why do you make reference to books in paragraph (b) "that are deemed to be obscene under subsection 159(8) of the Criminal Code" and the same thing in paragraph (c) under subsection 281.3(8)? What will happen if within the next couple of years those subsections are changed under the Criminal Code? Why do we not refer just to the Criminal Code and not mention the subsections? If those subsections are amended by just saying "under the Criminal Code," the situation would be covered, but the way it is worded we are held to those precise subsections. I suggest that the wording "under the Criminal Code" would be sufficient.

Senator Nurgitz: Perhaps it would, and that may not be a bad idea. I would like to point out to the honourable senator that this bill expires in a little over a year's time in any event. When the more appropriate legislation is introduced I hope it will be even more precise than this. Indeed it may not be necessary to refer to specific sections of the Criminal Code. What I am trying to impress upon honourable senators is that this is a short-term, roughly a 15-month bill, to deal with a critical problem.

Senator Denis: I suggest it should be made more precise this year.

Hon. Joan Neiman: I should like to put a question to Senator Nurgitz. I am curious to know who makes a decision as to what is considered obscene. Are the employees given a definition or guidelines as to what may be deemed obscene under paragraph (b) or that might constitute hate propaganda under paragraph (c)? The problem, as I see it, at the moment is that both those paragraphs have not been easy to deal with in the courts. In fact, we had a well-publicized case, which concluded in recent weeks, that did not avail itself of the provisions in the Criminal Code respecting the dissemination of hate propaganda in charging the person involved simply because that subsection on hate propaganda is so hard to define, much less to win a prosecution under. Therefore, I am curious as to how we are going to allow customs officials to make that decision when the courts and attorneys general have not been able to do so up until now.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, the Federal Court of Appeal was critical of that as well, that is, not so much with who makes the decision but with the fact that decisions are made without specific guidelines. I suppose that a customs officer in New Brunswick may give a different interpretation from that given by an officer in British Columbia.

Senator MacEachen: Or a more liberal one.

Senator Roblin: I doubt that.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

Senator Nurgitz: I am not sure. The Minister of National Revenue has undertaken that within two weeks from today he will distribute to all customs officers who could possibly have this situation arise within their jurisdiction a set of guidelines as to what is and what is not acceptable within, I suspect, the two areas. Perhaps those matters dealing with treason and sedition may speak for themselves, but I do not know with respect to obscenity and hate propaganda. The Minister of National Revenue has undertaken to make a distribution of guidelines immediately.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have another question which has to do with the materials which the honourable senator said were held up by officials in consequence of the section that had been struck down by the court. Once the court struck down this section, were these materials then permitted to come into Canada? Have they flooded in?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: So that we have had a major flood and what we are stopping now is the trickle.

Senator Nurgitz: If I may deal with floods and trickles, the gentleman whose name is Tom Luscher made a point on one book. I know that honourable senators will be familiar with this reading material so I can get you the name of it—

Senator Godfrey: Speak for yourself.

Senator Nurgitz: I have never heard of it. In any event he made a point out of one book. It was clear that he was not an importer. He purchased this book in the United States and was coming across with it near Vancouver and wanted to make a point out of this section.

Senator Frith: The book was for his own use.

Senator Nurgitz: That is clear. He was not a commercial importer. That was the trickle and the legislation, I hope, is aimed at the flood.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Nurgitz a question concerning paragraph (a). Under the new version of the tariff item 99201-1, obscene material and hate propaganda will be tied to the definitions provided in the Criminal Code. However, in this version of the tariff item, material of a treasonable or seditious character is not tied to the Criminal Code. I realize that the purpose of this bill is to deal with the particular situation brought on by the recent court decision, but in fact we are being asked to re-enact the prohibition against materials of a treasonable or seditious character.

My question is: Does this legislative arrangement mean that the customs officers applying paragraph (a) will be in a situation different under the law from those applying the prohibitions under paragraphs (b) and (c) in that (a) will not be tied to the Criminal Code explicitly whereas (b) and (c) will be so tied?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I am satisfied that references to "treason" and "sedition" would be far easier to determine. I should point out that what the bill is basically aiming at is covered by paragraphs (b) and (c) because in the old Customs Tariff the words after "treasonable or seditious"—which were not a problem—are "or of an immoral or indecent character." The question we then get into is community standards and a million other things which are so difficult to determine. I believe that in the Criminal Code there are definitions of the words "sedition" and "treason" but there are no definitions of the words "immoral" and "indecent."

Senator Stewart: The bill came to us so suddenly that I did not have an opportunity to look at the Criminal Code to check that point. The question I raise—I am not pressing it now—may well be a point that the government would like to consider when it gets around to a re-enactment of the tariff item after June 30, 1986. I wonder if it would not be desirable to tie in the prohibition of material of treasonable or seditious character with the Criminal Code in the same way as what is now being done with regard to obscene material and hate propaganda, so that customs officers would not feel free to put another interpretation on those words, "treasonable or seditious".

● (1500)

Senator Flynn: It will never happen.

Senator Nurgitz: I do not see anything wrong with Senator Stewart's suggestion.

A question was asked earlier about the case I mentioned earlier where material was allowed to come into the country. The judgment said that it was conceded—and I cannot find the name of the publication—that the appellant had no intention of circulating or selling the magazine, that he intended to use it in the privacy of his bedroom as a means of fantasy enhancement.

Senator Flynn: Exclusively in the bedroom?

Senator Nurgitz: It does not say "exclusively."

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I do not think that I should allow Senator Nurgitz to get away without further questions. In any event, the purpose of this bill is quite clear. The government wants to correct a situation created by a judgment of the Federal Court. I am interested in the fact that this bill will be in force for only 15 months. I wonder whether it was the government's idea that in 15 months the Supreme Court of Canada would not have time to strike it down.

Senator Nurgitz: The answer is no and I would add that no appeal is being taken on that case.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, am I correct in assuming that there will be no Royal Assent today?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is right.

Senator Frith: Therefore, we will have time tomorrow to complete the second reading and third reading. In that context I would like to move the adjournment of the debate, simply because we have not had time to prepare a response

Senator Flynn: A sober second thought.

Senator Frith: I will not say sober but, certainly, second thought.

In the meantime, if I am permitted, I would like to make a comment in that context. The sponsor of the bill has suggested that it need not go to committee. If so, we should give some thought to the kinds of questions that we would want considered if it were in committee. Some of those questions have already been raised today. Of course, there is always the possibility that hard on the great success the Honourable Barbara McDougall, Minister of State (Finance) had with us last week, we could invite her to come back tomorrow to deal with the bill in Committee of the Whole.

In any event, I wonder if the sponsor of the bill would give further thought to the line of questioning initiated by Senator Neiman—which is the sort of question we would consider in committee—and explain why there are three different forms in expressing the two subjects. Clause 1 refers to:

—printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind

(a) of a treasonable or seditious character;

(b) that are deemed to be obscene under subsection 159(8) of the Criminal Code; or

(c) that constitute hate propaganda within the meaning of subsection 281.3(8) of the Criminal Code.

There are three different descriptions. There is the straight statement first, that it must be "of a treasonable or seditious character." Second, where it is "deemed to be obscene," this raises the question of, deemed by whom? And, then, "that constitute hate propaganda" which raises the question of who decides whether in fact it constitutes hate propaganda. So, if it is agreed that we are going to pass this bill tomorrow, it would be reassuring to know that, though the bill is a band aid, as it is described by the sponsor, it is a band aid that will work in the meantime.

Senator Doody: On the questions raised by Senator Frith with regard to passage of the bill, it is our hope to have Royal Assent around 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. We have made tentative arrangements to that end. If we could arrange the accommodation of the bill during that timeframe tomorrow, we would be extremely grateful.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps we could have more information from the sponsor, or if Mrs. McDougall or an official from the Department of Justice could come over, they may be able to answer our questions very quickly.

Senator Doody: The sponsor is a veritable gold mine of information.

Senator Frith: That has always been my experience.

Senator Doody: He never ceases to amaze me.

Senator Frith: But we are not sure where he buys his gold. He may get it from the Department of Justice. However, I think we should have answers to our questions on just how the band aid will work or even if it will work.

Senator Flynn: The Supreme Court will not have time to deal with it.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

ILL EFFECTS OF SMOKING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Bosa calling the attention of the Senate to the ill effects of smoking to smokers and non-smokers alike.—
(Honourable Senator Macquarrie).

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, now for a big puff. My colleague on the right front has asked me what side I am on. If I am careless I shall probably reveal where I stand on that question or perhaps even say that the question is not the kind that applies in this case. I want to say that in my judgment—on sober second thought and even a first casual one—the initiative taken by Senator Bosa was very valuable in bringing to our attention a most important and timely subject that concerns all the people of Canada and far beyond. I congratulate the Honourable Senator Bosa for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate in the reasoned and reasonable tones he used and with the background of information which he presented. I also express my appreciation of, but not my surprise at, the most excellent but all too brief address delivered by Senator Frith. It was a very thoughtful expression and a very thoughtful exercise. He is a brilliant and able man and on those few occasions when he is not partisan, and even on the others, he is sharp, acute and, if wrong, gloriously wrong.

Senator Frith: And never in doubt.

Senator Macquarrie: It was once said of a clerk of a House of Commons of long ago that he always spoke with certainty if not with accuracy. That is a comforting way to be.

I appreciated Senator Frith's tribute to my colleague, Senator Kelly, who becomes a voluntary non-smoker when he is with a group of non-smokers. Before Senator Frith paid that deserved tribute to Senator Kelly, I had in mind the time the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs went to Washington. It seemed that everyone involved—staff and senators—were non-smokers, except Senator McElman who smoked a pipe. I appreciated his thoughtfulness and consideration when he was always very careful to bring out a chair and seat himself away from the rest of us. I think that if one must smoke one should smoke a pipe. It is much less disturbing for those who are around. I can tell Senator Flynn that that is a little bias that he has led me into expressing. One cannot be too much of a mugwump on these things. I think Senator Frith's idea of extending to committees the non-smoking atmosphere of the Senate chamber is an excellent one. If, in fact, we are emanations and replicas of the parent body, then his suggestion seems most meritorious and logical. If he ever wishes to make a move in that direction, I will certainly support him.

[Senator Frith.]

● (1510)

Senator Frith dealt with, although not at length, an important issue. Some people will say, "Please do not smoke in my presence because I have an allergy, and that will make me ill at this moment." That is a serious and legitimate complaint which should be listened to. However, I do not think that is the end of the matter. If I could not honestly say that smoking in my presence would give me nausea within ten minutes or perhaps half an hour, that is by no means saying that it will not be deleterious to my health. The difference between the two is not great. Because of some Scottish Catholic background in my family, as is the case with Senator MacEachen, I was brought up with pious relatives who occasionally bordered on the superstitious. You were never to feign illness or to malingering. You were never to say you were ill when you were well because God might strike you with a real illness. Although it would be easy to say, "Please do not smoke in my presence; I have an allergy," that, for me, would be almost an atavistic sin. I know that from a logical standpoint that is all nonsense, but I would find great difficulty in saying that.

Honourable senators, this subject is of importance. We are conscious of the ill-effects of smoking, but who is going to say to the chap in the elevator, "You know there are rules and by-laws against that?" I remember a lady saying that to a gentleman who was smoking, and he kept his cigarette in his mouth. His answer falls into the category of the obscene that Senator Nurgitz was talking about. If an old guy in the Senate were to say to a chap of 18, "Put that cigarette out," he might end up putting me out between the floors. It would not take a great deal of effort to do that if he were in good shape.

What we are talking about in this modern day is trying to invoke some emanation from the state or some other appropriate jurisdiction—the nation, the province or the municipality—such as a by-law which stipulates that one cannot smoke in a particular area of a restaurant or a room or a public place because there is someone who needs the protection of the state or the law-making authority to preserve his right.

It is not a question of—as Senator Flynn was taunting me—whether I am for or against smoking or the suggestion that non-smokers are better citizens than smokers or deserve more consideration; it is a unique right that we have not written many volumes on—the right of a citizen not to be smoked upon or not to be smoked at. That is not easily legislated or administered.

In my youth, as I travelled on the trains, there was something at one end of the car called a "smoker." If you wished to smoke, you got up and left where you were and went to that area. In P.E.I., in prohibition days, you had more than tobacco in your pockets, too. You left the bulk of society, shall we say, and moved down to a smoking area. If you did not want to go into that area, you stayed where you were. There were other facilities there too that you might have to pass through the smoker to reach.

Honourable senators, this issue, with which we are faced today, requires the kind of thoughtful consideration a body like the Senate of Canada can give it. We have to realize that the situation is not quite in balance: It is not just the smoker against the non-smoker. It is the right not to be smoked upon.

I want to say right now that I would not have been making this speech had I not received the advice of Senator Phillips that I should do so today if I were going to do it at all. He is both my Whip and a fellow Prince Edward Islander and he knows my ornery nature well enough to know that it is the Prince Edward Island aspect of things that makes his wishes much more my command than the fact that he is the Whip. Now, I think he is wisely going out to have a cigarette while I complete my brief dissertation on this important matter.

Honourable senators, the years go by. I remember the Twenty-third Parliament which, in terms of legislation for the people of Canada, was the most productive since Confederation. I recall the Prime Minister of those days, Mr. Diefenbaker, who used to come to caucus and tell us about some of his trips abroad. He came back from his first trip to Britain as Prime Minister where he attended a Commonwealth Conference. He told us that he and Mrs. Diefenbaker had received an invitation from Winston Churchill to go for tea. Long before any tea was produced, Mr. Churchill asked him if he would take a drink, of which there was an ample supply, and our Prime Minister said, "No, thank you," whereupon Mr. Churchill said, "Ah, Prime Minister, you are a prohibitionist, I see." Mr. Diefenbaker responded, "No, I am not a prohibitionist; I am a teetotaller," whereupon Mr. Churchill said, "Ah, good, you hurt only yourself."

I take the view that we must be careful not to become prohibitionists; yet, we must seek, for the good of society, some way of coping with what is not just a medical problem, but a serious social problem.

When I was in the House of Commons with Senators Flynn and Walker, we were aware of a very important study conducted by the House of Commons Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. That committee did what the Senate committees do quite often, that is, it picked up a cognate subject, studied it carefully, and produced a concise, valuable and educational report which I re-read just the other day. However, that report does not deal with one aspect. It deals with the injurious effects of smoking upon the smoker and it details that with real statistics of frightening proportions. I would quote two paragraphs from that report, which state:

The Canadian Medical Association in its brief to the Committee said: "... The traditional scientific discipline of medicine combined with the responsibility of serving as the public voice of the profession has resulted in our normally issuing guarded or conservative public statements. The Committee is reminded of this position of the Association to emphasize the importance and seriousness that it attaches to the subject at hand. The story of the health hazard created by cigarette smoking represents an unrivalled tale of illness, disability and death. The potential benefits to be derived from the cessation of smoking place it at a level of importance in preventive medicine with pasteurization of milk, the purification and chlorination of water, and immunization ...

We believe it sufficient to point out that there is no longer any scientific controversy regarding the risk created by cigarette smoking. The original statistical observations have been validated by clinical observation and the evidence is now accepted as fact by Canadian medicine.

Honourable senators, this is from exemplary and highly-qualified groups.

● (1520)

That was a very valuable contribution and one which was made by a group of parliamentarians. I cannot say that I was a member of that committee. Mr. Stanfield later appointed me as the spokesman on Health and Welfare, putting me opposite the Honourable Marc Lalonde, which was quite a challenge. This report came out before I was involved, so I take no credit; but I can give credit to the chairman, a man under whom I served and a man who is still a member of the House of Commons, Dr. Isabelle, a most excellent parliamentarian and a most excellent physician.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: That was a fine statement. We in the Foreign Affairs Committee often talk about U.N. Resolution 242, which I thought was a great document for its time and as far as it went. The same is true of this report.

I had the great advantage for a number of years in the House of Commons to be a seat-mate to the late Dr. Rynard, a fine physician and a great friend of the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker. He was known as the "flying doctor," and I thought that that was because he used to travel with Mr. Diefenbaker to various parts of the world. I travelled to Dr. Rynard's constituency, to Orillia, one weekend—

Senator Frith: Simcoe East.

Senator Macquarrie: Yes. To speak to the St. George's Society—and that shows how fond I was of him, a Highland Scot going up there on St. George's Day to make a speech about the English.

Senator Frith: If you saw him in Simcoe East, you would have soon realized that he was a good politician, too.

Senator Macquarrie: He was a good politician, yes. What I really learned that weekend, however, is where the description of "flying doctor" came from. One of my friends asked me if I drove up with him and I said that I had driven up with Heber Smith. This same chap then said: "Well, if you are smart, you will go back by train, or by bus, or any way you want except with the Doc." And that is where the term "flying doctor" came from. It seems he was very swift on the highways. If he had to get some place, he got there on time.

But it was Dr. Rynard who used to tell me—and this was long before I read it in the press—that smoking was bad not only for those who smoked but for those around the smoker. I think he said that the smoke from 10 cigarettes being smoked around you is the equivalent of your smoking one cigarette yourself.

That was my first entrée into the idea that smoking was not just the smoker's business. It is too bad that that is the case.

There is no suggestion that drinking is a good thing. It is a terrible thing—although I would feel personally bereft in a highly enforced prohibitionist state. I am having trouble enough in Lent. It is a long 40 days. I know that I would be far better off if I were to drink for 40 days and give it up for 325, but so far I am going the other route, and I have the days and the hours counted.

But unless the overdrinker gets behind the wheel of a car and maims someone, unless he does something damn foolish when he is, shall we say, not himself, he at least can drink alongside a fellow in a bar and ruin only his own liver. The smoker, unfortunately, does not limit the damage to himself, and that makes it a very difficult problem.

How difficult a problem is it? We see that all across the world the people are endeavouring to cope with this. I read in the Christian Science Monitor—I think, perhaps, the greatest paper in the English language—that the Kremlin raises the red flag about smoking; that if you walk into Red Square, you will see a “no smoking” sign, and it is probably just as well not to. Yet some do.

I read, too, from the Ottawa Citizen that the anti-smoking law works well in San Francisco, and they expected that there would be great problems with its enforcement.

We know why it is such a great problem. Senator Frith talked about our smoking in committee rooms and in the chamber ante-room. We live in a national capital in which there are buildings galore owned by the federal government, buildings operated by emanations of our government. They are now air-conditioned and heated. There is a flow of air. How do we establish smoking and no-smoking areas in these buildings and ensure that the vents which go through the building will not take the air from the smoking areas to the no-smoking areas?

Am I going to stand up and say that every building of the Government of Canada should be altered to handle that problem? It would cost a fortune.

Are we to say that anybody who smokes cannot work for the federal government? Suppose we set up our own room for smokers. What is it, a Black Hole of Calcutta which has no air-conditioning at all?

It is an immensely difficult problem. It is a social problem; it is a legislative problem; and now it has become, in our complex society, a highly technical problem.

As an old-time pedagogue, I believe that the best course is that of education, coupled with the indication that the cigarette is a form of poison. Not a nice thing to do. Years ago I used to enjoy smoking. To say to the Prince Edward Island and Ontario tobacco growers that they have to stop what they are doing because tobacco is hurting the health of the people is not an easy task. That is why I am inclined to believe—and I do not know what Senator Marshall thinks of this; I haven't discussed it with him, even though we are neighbours in the East Block—that it is a subject that requires the most thoughtful consideration, and could be usefully studied by a committee of the Senate.

If we lay down the statistics—and that would be a boring thing to do—the potential danger from smoking would be seen to be enormous. To couple this health hazard with the freedom to inhale and exhale—and if pushed I would put the freedom of choice before control, even when the control is of a beneficial kind—presents a serious problem.

I am glad that I have had the opportunity to say a few words about it—not because I am giving any great insights but to lend my support to the contribution that Senator Bosa has made in introducing into this thoughtful chamber of sober second thought a subject worthy of its careful consideration.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to make one comment on something that Senator Macquarrie has said—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Are you intending to adjourn the debate?

Senator Godfrey: I want to make a two-minute speech.

When I started to work, it was for a large insurance company in downtown Toronto, and there no one ever smoked. In those days instead of a coffee break they had a smoke break, at which point the men all disappeared into the men's room for about ten minutes in the middle of the morning. Then they went out for lunch, and at some point in the afternoon they would again disappear for ten minutes.

If we were to institute that type of thing, people would get used psychologically to the idea of not smoking when working. I used to smoke three packages a day and I had no problem not smoking when travelling on public transportation because I knew it simply could not be done. If we were to cut out smoking at work, I am sure the smokers would get used to it.

Senator Macquarrie: I am all for that, Senator Godfrey. I suppose that is why I picked up on Senator Frith's reference to Senator Kelly early in my speech. It was a significant contribution.

However, we have one thing standing against us. We now have a highly permissive society and although it seems a little unfair to the smokers to gang up on them, I think the pressures and the compulsions are so great that Senator Godfrey's idea is an excellent one.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 3, 1985

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SCHEDULE OF AUTHORIZED SALARY REVISIONS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled a schedule of authorized salary revisions for certain Senate positions, effective April 1, 1985, as approved by the committee at its meeting on Wednesday, March 13, 1985.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody, Deputy Leader of the Government, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 23, 1985, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION ON OVERSEAS DELEGATIONS—AMPLIFICATION OF STATEMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we embark on Question Period, I should like to enlarge on a reply I gave yesterday, which appears at page 761 of Hansard, respecting the practice of attendance at obsequies of foreign statesmen. I made a statement about the most recent death that had occurred in the leadership of the Soviet Union, with respect to who had attended. In reading my statement, it appears that I could be taken as referring to the death of Mr. Chernenko when actually I was referring to the death of Mr. Brezhnev and Mr. Andropov, and I wanted to clarify that point.

THE PRIME MINISTER

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENT

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government has seen this questionable full-page advertisement which appears in a number of Canadian newspapers today. I cannot recall in my time any precedent for the Prime Minister of Canada being involved in any kind of commercial advertising, let alone for a multinational corporation such as Litton Industries, which is already doing business with this government and, doubtless, is looking for more. Can the leader assure us—I hope he can, and I believe he can—that this advertisement appeared without either the Prime Minister's knowledge or consent?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I admit that I have read this advertisement, too, and I can tell my honourable friend that it is entirely the responsibility of the corporation whose name appears in that advertisement. It has nothing to do with the Prime Minister; it has nothing to do with the government. The Prime Minister's consent was not sought; the government's consent was not sought. His picture was used without his knowledge, so there is no connection between this advertisement and the Government of Canada.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, I am delighted with the response since it is the one I had expected.

I have a supplementary question: Does not this kind of questionable advertising involve Litton Industries in some kind of conflict of interest which should disqualify that company from future government contracts?

Senator Roblin: I think it is impossible for me to deal with that question at the present time. No one in government circles appreciates this conduct.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE—PROSPECTIVE HIRING OF NON-CANADIAN

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Am I correct in assuming that, amidst this passionate romance between this government and everything American there has been, from time to time, some indication that the government will at least protect Canadian identity and Canadian cultural integrity?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend will give me a specific instance where he thinks the government is not protecting our cultural identity, I may try to answer the question.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, it just happens that I do have a supplementary question.

Senator Roblin: That is what I thought.

Senator Davey: Is the Leader of the Government aware that Canada's self-proclaimed national news magazine, which many months ago removed the maple leaf from its cover, is seeking to hire a former Newsweek writer, an American citizen and resident, to hold a senior writing position on that magazine's staff?

This hiring, as the leader knows, must be approved by the Department of Employment and Immigration which must be satisfied that Maclean's cannot find a Canadian qualified to do this particular job.

Would the Leader of the Government agree with me that there is any number of eminently well-qualified Canadians available to fill this position?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, if I were an expert in this field, my opinion might be worth something, but, as I am not, I can assure my honourable friend that my opinion is not worth very much in respect of this matter.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps Senator Davey will give his opinion.

Senator Roblin: No doubt, Senator Davey will favour us with his opinion in due course, but I am not able to give an authoritative answer with respect to this inquiry.

Senator Davey: As a supplementary question, I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to undertake to use his considerable influence with the department to ensure that Maclean's is not allowed to engage an American writer for such a key position. Can he give us that undertaking?

I see Senator Murray shaking his head.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend does not really expect me to give such an undertaking.

Senator Davey: I do not know why the leader cannot give us such an undertaking because, in the press I have read, it seems to me that this government is saying that we are prepared to protect cultural integrity. Here is a clear example of Canada's alleged national news magazine wanting to bring in an American to fill a very senior position. Surely the government is not going to allow this to happen.

Senator Roblin: The government, like any other citizen, is bound by the law. Insofar as the law covers this matter, it will be investigated.

Senator Davey: The law is clear: If there is a Canadian qualified, then that Canadian should be employed.

I accept the response, but I do hope that someone will urge the department to make sure that Maclean's conducts a thorough, decent, honest search. It seems to me that they will not have to look very far.

Senator Flynn: Are you a candidate?

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF CANADIAN JOURNALIST— GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, in today's issue of the Toronto Sun, there is a report written by Mr. Claire Hoy, a respected member of the Parliamentary Press Gallery, while on tour in Siberia with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In the process of exchanging information lawfully with a Soviet citizen, he was forcibly prevented from continuing that exchange by a Soviet official who was also on the tour.

My question for the Leader of the Government is: Has the government lodged a protest with the Soviet government and sought an apology for this inappropriate conduct towards a Canadian citizen?

Senator Frith: A friend of all governments.

● (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): In view of the fact that this incident occurred yesterday, I have no information on the specific question my friend asks; however, I can tell him that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is going to be discussing, if he has not already done so, the status of those people who wish to leave the Soviet Union, as the lady in question would like to do, together with the general question of human rights.

Senator Grafstein: A supplementary. That really isn't my question. My question is whether or not the inappropriate or unlawful conduct of a Soviet official towards a member of the Parliamentary Press Gallery will be the subject matter of a protest and whether or not the government will seek an apology for this type of conduct against a Canadian citizen.

Senator Roblin: I do not think I can really answer the question. I have no doubt that the matter will be given some consideration, and I think it deserves to be.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday Senator Molgat raised the matter of the sugar beet problem in Manitoba, and I know the government leader is very interested in this particular issue. Last evening, I am informed, in Lethbridge, Alberta, there was a meeting of some 600 members of the southern Alberta community on this same issue, and I believe those in attendance at that meeting were advised by their member of Parliament, who, I know, has worked very hard on this issue, that the federal government had decided against providing anything in the nature of a short-term subsidy for this year, but that there might be other proposals that the government was looking at.

I am wondering whether the Leader of the Government has any more information on this subject today than he had yesterday.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that sugar beet futures have now sunk below 4 cents a pound. They are down at about 3.9 cents a pound, which is a calamitous price for sugar, particularly for those who grow sugar cane in tropical countries. They are the ones who are the most severely affected by this.

With respect to my friend's question, the answer is that no policy statement of the sort she has mentioned has been made by the government, to my knowledge.

Senator Fairbairn: A supplementary, if I may. The agriculture minister for the province of Alberta announced at this meeting last night that the Government of Alberta would be prepared, on a one-shot basis, to provide a subsidy of $10 per metric tonne for this particular period.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate might use his influence with his colleagues to get them to consider the possibility of having the federal government match that subsidy.

In total terms, I believe it would come to something like $5.5 million—which in the context of the assistance provided to the Canadian Commercial Bank is a small amount, particularly given the importance of this industry to that province.
